AS ADMINISTERED

IN ENGLAND AND AMERICA.

BY JOSEPH STORY, LL. D.,
DANE PROFESSOR OF LAW IN HARVARD UNIVERSITY.

"Chancery is ordained to supply the Law, not to subvert the Law." LORD BACON.
"Hic ergo ex partibus juris, quidquid aut ex ipsâ re, aut ex simili, aut ex majore, minoreve, nasci videbitur, attendere, atque elicere, pertentando unamquamque partem juris, oportebit." CIC. De Invent. Lib. 2, cap. 22.

SECOND EDITION.
REVISED, CORRECTED, AND ENLARGED.

IN TWO VOLUMES.

BOSTON:
CHARLES C. LITTLE AND JAMES BROWN.

TO THE SECOND EDITION.

In preparing this second volume for the press, I have availed myself of the opportunity to revise the whole of the text and notes, to add such new doctrines and principles and illustrations, as the recent authorities have brought under my notice, and to make such corrections and amendments as more thorough researches have enabled me to ascertain are required in the original work.

CHAPTER XVII.

PECULIAR REMEDIES IN EQUITY—DISCOVERY—CANCELLATION AND DELIVERY OF INSTRUMENTS.

§ 688. WE shall now proceed to the consideration of the other branch of concurrent jurisdiction, that, in which the peculiar remedies afforded by Courts of Equity constitute the principal, although not the sole, ground of jurisdiction.

§ 689. And, here, we may begin by adverting to that large class of cases, where the remedy of a DISCOVERY constitutes the main ground, and in many cases the sole ground, upon which a bill in Equity is maintainable in point of jurisdiction. Every original bill in Equity may, in truth, be properly deemed a bill of discovery ; for it seeks a disclosure of circumstances relative to the plaintiff's case. But that, which is usually and emphatically distinguished by this appellation, is a bill for the discovery of facts, resting in the knowledge of the defendant, or of deeds, or writings, or other things in his custody, possession, or power, but seeking no relief in consequence of the discovery, although it may pray, and often does pray, for a stay of proceedings at law, until the discovery shall be made.<sup>1</sup> Wherever, therefore, such a discovery alone is sought, without asking any relief, Courts of Equity have a complete jurisdiction to compel the discovery, if the plaintiff is entitled to it according to the general principles, which govern the subject. Courts of Law are incompetent, by their very structure, to compel such a discovery ; and, therefore, it properly falls under the head of the exclusive jurisdiction of Courts of Equity, where the nature and limits of the right to a discovery will be fully examined.<sup>2</sup>

§ 690. But the class of cases designed to be treated of in this place are cases, where relief is sought, as consequent upon the discovery of facts ; and where, but for the want of such discovery, the case would be perfectly remediable at law. The necessity of obtaining a discovery in such cases, therefore, constitutes the sole ground of equity jurisdiction ; and, if upon such a bill no discovery is obtained, the cause fails, and the bill must be dismissed. If, on the other hand, the discovery, is obtained, then (as we have already seen) Courts of Equity, in many cases, will proceed to give entire and full relief. This subject has been already treated somewhat a length in the preliminary part of these commentaries ;<sup>3</sup> and, therefore, the ground of this jurisdiction may be briefly summed up in the language of Mr. Fonblanque in a passage, from which a short quotation has been already made ;—“ This concurrence of jurisdiction,”

[by Courts of Equity], says he, "may in the greater number of cases, in which it is exercised, be justified by the propriety of preventing a multiplicity of suits ; for, as the mode of proceeding in Courts of Law requires the plaintiff to establish his case, without enabling him to draw the necessary evidence from the examination of the defendant, justice could never be obtained at law in those cases, where the principal facts, to be proved by one party, are confined to the knowledge of the other party. In such cases, therefore, it becomes necessary for the party, wanting such evidence, to resort to the extraordinary powers of a Court of Equity, which will compel the necessary discovery. And the Court, having acquired cognizance of the suit for the purpose of discovery, will entertain it for the purpose of relief in most cases of fraud, account, accident, and mistake." <sup>1</sup>

§ 691. We have already seen, that there is a difference between the English and the American Courts, in regard to the extent of the jurisdiction, attaching for relief, as consequent upon discovery.<sup>2</sup> But, whichever doctrine ought upon principle to prevail, there is no doubt of the two propositions above stated ;<sup>3</sup> first, that the necessity of a discovery in a Court of Equity furnishes a just foundation of jurisdiction in a great variety of cases ;<sup>3</sup> and secondly, that, if the discovery is totally denied by the answer, the bill must be dismissed, and the relief denied, although there might be other evidence sufficient to establish a title to relief ; for the subject matter is, under such circumstances, exclusively remediable at law. With these few remarks, the further consideration of this subject may be dismissed in this place.

§ 692. Another head of Equity Jurisdiction, founded upon the like circumstance of a peculiar remedy, embraces that large class of cases, where the RESCIS-SION, CANCELLATION, or DELIVERY up of agreements, securities, or deeds is sought, or a SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE, is required of the terms of such agreements, securities, or deeds, as indispensable to reciprocal justice. It is obvious, that Courts of Law are utterly incompetent, by their general organization, to make a specific decree for any relief of this sort ;<sup>1</sup> and without it, the most serious mischiefs may often arise to the parties interested. The subject naturally divides itself into two great branches. In the first place, what are the cases, in which Courts of Equity will undertake to rescind, cancel, or direct a surrender of contracts, securities, and deeds ; and in the second place, what are the cases, in which Courts of Equity will enforce a specific performance of them.

§ 693. Before proceeding to the consideration of these distinct and important subjects, it may be proper to suggest, that the application to a Court of Equity for either of these purposes is not, strictly speaking, a matter of absolute right, upon which the Court is bound to pass a final decree. But, it is a matter of sound discretion, to be exercised by the Court, either in granting, or in refusing the relief prayed, according to its own notion of what is reasonable and proper under all the circumstances of the particular case.<sup>2</sup> Thus, for instance, a Court of Equity will sometimes refuse to decree a specific performance of an agreement, which it will yet decline to order to be delivered up, cancelled, or rescinded.<sup>1</sup> On the other hand, a specific performance will be decreed upon the application of one party, when it would be denied upon the application of the other. And an agreement will be rescinded or cancelled upon the application of one party, when the Court would decline any interference at the instance of the other.<sup>2</sup> So that we are here to understand, that the interference of a Court of Equity is a matter of mere discretion; not, indeed, of arbitrary and capricious discretion, but of sound and reasonable discretion, secundum arbitrium boni Judicis.<sup>3</sup> And in all cases of this sort, where the interposition of a Court of Equity is sought, the Court will, in granting relief, impose such terms upon the party, as it deems the real justice of the case to require; and if the plaintiff refuses to comply with such terms, his bill will be dismissed.<sup>4</sup> The maxim here is emphatically applied, he, who seeks equity, must do equity.

§ 694. In the first place, then, let us consider, in what cases a Court of Equity will direct the delivery up, CANCELLATION, or RESCISSION of agreements, securities, deeds or other instruments. It is obvious, that the jurisdiction, exercised in cases of this sort, is founded upon the administration of a protective or preventive justice. The party is relieved upon the principle, as it is technically called, quia timet ; that is, for fear that such agreements, securities, deeds or other instruments may be vexatiously or injuriously used against him, when the evidence to impeach them may be lost ; or that they may now throw a cloud or suspicion over his title or interest.<sup>1</sup> A fortiori, the party will have a right to come into equity to have such agreement, securities, deeds or other instruments delivered up and cancelled, where he has a defence against them, which is good in Equity, but not capable of being made available at law.<sup>2</sup> We have already had occasion to take notice of a great variety of cases, in which agreements, securities, deeds, and other instruments, have been set aside, and decreed to be delivered up, on the ground of accident, mistake, and fraud.<sup>3</sup> Under the two former heads, it will readily be perceived, upon the slightest examination, that a rescission, or cancellation of the agreements, securities, deeds or other instruments, would not, in a great many cases, be an appropriate, adequate, or equitable relief. The accident or mistake may be of a nature, which does not go to the very foundation and merits of the agreement ; but may only require, that some amendment, addition, qualification, or variation should take place, to make it at once just, and reasonable, and fit to be enforced.<sup>4</sup> But it can rarely be said, that in cases of fraud, actual or constructive, the same observations properly apply. If there is actual fraud, there seems the strongest ground for the interference of a Court of Equity, to rescind a contract, security, or other instrument. And if the fraud be constructive, still for the most part it ought to draw after it the same consequences, either as a breach of trust, or an abandonment of duty, or a violation of public policy.<sup>1</sup> But, although fraud may in all these cases furnish a sufficient ground to rescind a contract, in jure strictissimo ; yet, there may be circumstances, which may justly mitigate the rigid severity of the law ; or may place the parties in pari delicto ; or may require a Court of Equity, [*7] from the demerit of the plaintiff in the particular transaction, to abstain from the slightest interference ; or may even induce it, if it should rescind the contract, to do so only upon the terms of due compensation, and the allowance of the countervailing equities of the plaintiff.<sup>2</sup>

§ 695. Without attempting to go over the different classes of cases of fraud, (which have been already enumerated,) it may be stated, that Courts of Equity will generally set aside, cancel, and direct to be delivered up, agreements, and other instruments, however solemn in their form or operation, where they are voidable, and not merely void, under the following circumstances. First, where there is actual fraud in the party defendant, in which the party plaintiff has not participated. Secondly, where there is a constructive fraud against public policy, and the party plaintiff has not participated therein. Thirdly, where there is a fraud against public policy, and the party plaintiff has participated therein ; but public policy would be defeated by allowing it to stand. And lastly, where there is a constructive fraud by both parties, but they are not in pari delicto.<sup>1</sup>

§ 695. a. The two first classes of cases seem scarcely to require any illustration ; since it is manifestly a result of natural justice, that a party ought not to be permitted to avail himself of any agreement, deed or other instrument procured by his own actual or constructive fraud, or by his own violation of legal duty or public policy, to the prejudice of an innocent party. The third class may be illustrated by the common case of a gaming security, which will be decreed to be given up, notwithstanding both parties have participated in the violation of the law ; because public policy will be best subserved by such a course.<sup>2</sup> The fourth class may also be illustrated by cases, where, although both parties have participated in the guilty transaction ; yet the party, who seeks relief, has acted under circumstances of oppression, imposition, hardship, undue influence, or great inequality of age or condition ; so that in a moral, as well as in a legal, point of view, his guilt may well be deemed far less dark in its character and degree than that of his associate.<sup>3</sup>

held void or voidable upon other principles, Courts of Equity will impose terms upon the party, if the circumstances of the case require it. Thus, as we *have seen, in cases of usury Courts of Equity [* 8] will not interpose in favor of the borrower, except upon the payment or allowance of the debt fairly due.<sup>1</sup> So, in cases of the setting aside, and cancellation, and delivery up of annuity securities, because they are not duly registered, Courts of Equity will direct an account of all receipts and payments on each side, and require the just balance to be paid by the proper party.<sup>2</sup> And similar principles are applied to other cases, where the transaction is deemed indefensible, and yet there is an equitable right to compensation.<sup>3</sup>

§ 697. On the other hand, where the party, seeking relief, is the sole guilty party; or where he has participated equally and deliberately in the fraud; or where the agreement, which he seeks to set aside, is founded in illegality, immorality, or base and unconscionable conduct on his own part; in such cases Courts of Equity will leave him to the consequences of his own iniquity; and will decline to assist him to escape from the toils, which he has studiously prepared to entangle others, or whereby he has sought to violate with impunity the best interests and morals of social life.<sup>4</sup> And, if acts of this sort have been deliberately done under circumstances, in which innocence

has been betrayed, or confidence seduced, or falsehood or concealment systematically practised, a fortiori, Courts of Equity could not, without staining the [*9] administration of justice, interfere to save the* party from the just results of his own gross misconduct, when the failure of success in the scheme would manifestly be the sole cause of his praying relief.

§ 698. A question has often occurred, how far Courts of Equity would or ought to interfere to direct deeds and other solemn instruments to be delivered up and cancelled, which are utterly void, and not merely voidable.<sup>1</sup> The doubt has been, in the first place, whether, as an instrument utterly void is incapable of being enforced at law, it is not a case, where the remedial justice to protect the party may not be deemed adequate, and complete at law, and therefore where the necessity of the interposition of Courts of Equity is obviated.<sup>2</sup> And, in the next place, whether, if the instrument be void, and ought not to be enforced, the more appropriate remedy in a Court of Equity would not be, to order a perpetual injunction to restrain the use of the instrument, rather than to compel a delivery up and cancellation of the instrument.<sup>3</sup>

§ 699. Where the party is seeking a discovery, as

the means of arriving at relief by the delivery up or cancellation of the void instrument, it seems somewhat difficult to understand, why a Court of Equity, having acquired a full jurisdiction in the case for discovery, should not, when that is obtained, proceed, for the purpose of preventing multiplicity of *suits, [* 10] to make a decree for the relief sought.<sup>1</sup> But, where no discovery is sought, and the naked case, made by the bill, is for a mere delivery up or cancellation of the instrument, not averring any defect of proof, but simply stating, that the instrument is void ; there might be more color for some scruple in entertaining the bill.<sup>2</sup> Still, even in the latter case, the specific relief required being such as a Court of Law cannot give, and yet the instrument being, from its very nature, and its apparent validity, calculated to throw some doubt upon the title, or being capable of future misuse, the justice of a Court of Equity would seem to require, even under such circumstances, an interposition to prevent serious mischiefs.<sup>3</sup>

§ 700. But whatever may have been the doubts or difficulties formerly entertained upon this subject, they seem by the more modern decisions to be fairly put at rest ; and the jurisdiction is now maintained in the fullest extent.<sup>4</sup> And these decisions are founded on the true principles of Equity Jurisprudence, which is not merely remedial ; but is also preventive of injustice. If an instrument ought not to be used or enforced, it is against conscience for the party holding it to retain it ; since he can only retain it for some [* 11] sinister purpose. If it is a negotiable* instrument, it may be used for a fraudulent or improper purpose, to the injury of a third person.<sup>1</sup> If it is a deed, purporting to convey lands or other hereditaments, its existence in an uncanceled state necessarily has a tendency to throw a cloud over the title.<sup>2</sup> If it is a mere written agreement, solemn or otherwise ; still, while it exists, it is always liable to be applied to improper purposes ; and it may be vexatiously litigated at a distance of time, when the proper evidence to repel the claim may have been lost, or obscured ; or when the other party may be disabled from contesting its validity with as much ability and force, as he can at the present moment.<sup>3</sup>

§ 700. a. But where the illegality of the agreement, deed or other instrument appears upon the face of it, so that its nullity can admit of no doubt, the same reason for the interference of Courts of Equity to direct it to be cancelled or delivered up, would not seem to apply ; for in such a case, there can be no danger, that the lapse of time may deprive the party of his full means of defence ; nor can it, in a just sense, be said, that such a paper can throw a cloud over his right or title, or diminish its security ; nor is it capable of being used as a means of vexatious litigation, or serious injury. And, accordingly, it is now fully established, that, in such cases, Courts of Equity will not interpose its authority to order a cancellation or delivery up of such instruments.<sup>1</sup> Upon an analogous principle Courts of Equity have refused to entertain a bill for the delivery up of a bill of exchange, on which the holder had obtained a judgment at law against the plaintiff, which was satisfied, but where he retained the bill, treating it as a case, in which there was scarcely a pretence of danger from future litigation ;<sup>2</sup> for the bill was merged in the judgment.

§ 701. The whole doctrine of Courts of Equity on this subject is referrible to the general jurisdiction, which it exercises in favor of a party, quia timet.<sup>3</sup>

It is not confined to cases, where the instrument, having been executed, is void upon grounds of Law or Equity. But it is applied, even in cases of forged instruments, which may be decreed to be given up without any prior trial at law on the point of forgery.<sup>1</sup>

[*12] *§ 702. In cases, where the delivery up or cancellation of any deed or other instrument is sought, on account of its being void, the old course used to be, if the validity of the instrument was contested, to direct an issue or a trial at law to ascertain the fact.<sup>2</sup> But this, though the common practice, was a matter in the sound discretion of the Court; as the determination of a jury upon the point was not indispensable. It was merely ancillary to the conscience of the Court of Equity, when administering relief, and not strictly the right of the party.<sup>3</sup> At present, a different and more convenient course seems to prevail, (which is clearly within the jurisdiction of the Court); and that is, for the Court itself to decide the point, without sending the matter to be ascertained at law by a jury; unless it is satisfied from the contradictory character of the evidence, or the want of clearness in the proofs, that such a determination by a jury would be advisable.<sup>4</sup>

§ 703 Hitherto we have been considering the jurisdiction of Courts of Equity to decree a delivery up or cancellation of deeds or other instruments, on account of some inherent defect in their original character, which renders them either voidable or void. But the powers of Courts of Equity are by no means limited to cases of this sort. On the contrary, its remedial justice is often and most beneficially applied, by affording specific relief in cases of unexceptionable deeds and other instruments in favor of persons, who are legally entitled to them.<sup>1</sup> This, indeed, is a very old head of Equity Jurisdiction, *and has been [*13] traced back to so early a period as the reign of Edward IV.<sup>2</sup> It is a most important branch of Equity Jurisprudence ; and is exerted, in all suitable cases of a public or private nature, in favor of persons entitled to the custody and possession of deeds and other writings. But where the title to the possession of deeds and other writings depends upon the validity of the title of the party to the property, to which they relate ; and he is not in possession of that property ; and the evidence of his title to it is in his own power ; or it does not depend upon the production of the deed or writings, of which he prays the delivery ; in such cases he must first establish his title to the property at law, before he can come into a Court of Equity for a delivery of the deeds.<sup>3</sup> But if his title is not disputed, relief follows of course. Thus, heirs at law, devisees, and other persons, properly entitled to the custody and possession of the title deeds of their respective estates, may, if they are wrongfully detained or withheld from them, obtain a decree for a specific delivery of them.<sup>4</sup> The same doctrine applies to other instruments, and securities, such as bonds, negotiable instruments, and other evidences of property, which are improperly withheld from the persons, who have an equitable or legal interest in them ;<sup>1</sup> or who have a right to have [* 14] *them preserved. This redress a Court of Common Law is, for the most part, incapable of affording, since the prescribed forms of its remedies rarely enable it to pronounce a judgment in rem in such cases, which is, or can be made, effectual.<sup>2</sup> It is true, that an action of detinue, or even of replevin, might in some few cases lie, and give the proper remedy, if the thing could be found. But, generally, in actions at law damages only are recoverable; and such a remedy must, in many cases, be wholly inadequate. This constitutes the true ground for the prompt interposition of Courts of Equity for the recovery of the specific deeds or other instruments.<sup>3</sup>

§ 695. Without attempting to go over the different classes of cases of fraud, (which have been already enumerated,) it may be stated, that Courts of Equity will generally set aside, cancel, and direct to be delivered up, agreements, and other instruments, however solemn in their form or operation, where they are voidable, and not merely void, under the following circumstances. First, where there is actual fraud in the party defendant, in which the party plaintiff has not participated. Secondly, where there is a constructive fraud against public policy, and the party plaintiff has not participated therein. Thirdly, where there is a fraud against public policy, and the party plaintiff has participated therein ; but public policy would be defeated by allowing it to stand. And lastly, where

§ 705. a. The doctrine has been applied not only to cases, where the deed or other instrument is clearly established by the proofs to have become functus officio according to the original intent and understanding of both parties; but also to cases, where it has been fairly inferrible from the acts or conduct of the party entitled to the benefit of the deed or other instrument, that he has treated it as released, or otherwise dead in point of effect. Thus, for example, where a nephew gave a note to his uncle for a sum of money, and afterwards the uncle wrote the following entry: "H. J. P. (the nephew) pays no interest, nor shall I ever take the principal, unless greatly distressed"; and upon his death the executors found the entry; it was held a good discharge of the note at law.<sup>1</sup> So, where a son in law was indebted to his father in law on several bonds, and by his will the latter left him a legacy, and from some memorandums of the testator it was satisfactorily shewn, that the testator did not intend, that these bonds should be enforced by the executors; it was decreed, that they should not be the subject of any demand by the executors against the son-in-law.<sup>2</sup> So, where a father upon payment of the debts of his son took a bond from the latter, and it was apparent from all the circumstances, that the father did not intend it as an absolute security against the son, but in some sort as a check upon his future conduct, and that he did not intend, after his death, that it should be treated as a debt due from his son to his estate, or to be put in force against him ; it was decreed, that the bond should be delivered up by the executors to be cancelled.<sup>1</sup> So, where a testatrix by her will forgave a debt due to her on bond by her son-in-law, and he died in her lifetime ; it was held, that it was a release in equity, and that the bond ought to be delivered up by her executor.<sup>2</sup>

§ 706. There is also a curious case of an analogous nature, which was finally decided by the House of Lords, in which the powers *of a Court of [*16] Equity were applied to give relief to an extent, which no Court of Law would for a moment entertain. The Testator on his death bed, said to his executrix, that he had the bond of B ; but when he died, B should have it ; and that he should not be asked or troubled for it. The executrix, after the death of the Testator put the bond in suit ; and thereupon B brought a bill for a discovery and delivery up and cancellation of the bond. And it was decreed accordingly at the hearing by the Lord Chancellor ; and his decree was affirmed by the House of Lords.<sup>3</sup> This case carries the doctrine of an implied trust or equitable extinguishment of a debt to the very verge of the law. The case would be clearly unsupportable, as a donatio mortis causâ ; and it must stand upon the parol evidence to

It is not confined to cases, where the instrument, having been executed, is void upon grounds of Law or Equity. But it is applied, even in cases of forged instruments, which may be decreed to be given up without any prior trial at law on the point of forgery.<sup>1</sup>

[*12] *§ 702. In cases, where the delivery up or cancellation of any deed or other instrument is sought, on account of its being void, the old course used to be, if the validity of the instrument was contested, to direct an issue or a trial at law to ascertain the fact.<sup>2</sup> But this, though the common practice, was a matter in the sound discretion of the Court; as the determination of a jury upon the point was not indispensable. It was merely ancillary to the conscience of the Court of Equity, when administering relief, and not strictly the right of the party.<sup>3</sup> At present, a different and more convenient course seems to prevail, (which is clearly within the jurisdiction of the Court); and that is, for the Court itself to decide the point, without sending the matter to be ascertained at law by a jury; unless it is satisfied from the contradictory character of the evidence, or the want of clearness in the proofs, that such a determination by a jury would be advisable.<sup>4</sup>

§ 703 Hitherto we have been considering the jurisdiction of Courts of Equity to decree a delivery up or cancellation of deeds or other instruments, on account of some inherent defect in their original character, which renders them either voidable or void. But the powers of Courts of Equity are by no means limited to cases of this sort. On the contrary, its

remedial justice is often and most beneficially applied, by affording specific relief in cases of unexceptionable deeds and other instruments in favor of persons, who are legally entitled to them.<sup>1</sup> This, indeed, is a very old head of Equity Jurisdiction, *and has been [*13] traced back to so early a period as the reign of Edward IV.<sup>2</sup> It is a most important branch of Equity Jurisprudence ; and is exerted, in all suitable cases of a public or private nature, in favor of persons entitled to the custody and possession of deeds and other writings. But where the title to the possession of deeds and other writings depends upon the validity of the title of the party to the property, to which they relate ; and he is not in possession of that property ; and the evidence of his title to it is in his own power ; or it does not depend upon the production of the deed or writings, of which he prays the delivery ; in such cases he must first establish his title to the property at law, before he can come into a Court of Equity for a delivery of the deeds.<sup>3</sup> But if his title is not disputed, relief follows of course. Thus, heirs at law, devisees, and other persons, properly entitled to the custody and possession of the title deeds of their respective estates, may, if they are wrongfully detained or withheld from them, obtain a decree for a specific delivery of them.<sup>4</sup> The same doctrine applies to other instruments, and securities, such as bonds, negotiable instruments, and other evidences of property, which are improperly withheld from the persons, who have an equitable or legal interest in them ;<sup>1</sup> or who have a right to have [* 14] *them preserved. This redress a Court of Common Law is, for the most part, incapable of affording, since the prescribed forms of its remedies rarely enable it to pronounce a judgment in rem in such cases, which is, or can be made, effectual.<sup>2</sup> It is true, that an action of detinue, or even of replevin, might in some few cases lie, and give the proper remedy, if the thing could be found. But, generally, in actions at law damages only are recoverable; and such a remedy must, in many cases, be wholly inadequate. This constitutes the true ground for the prompt interposition of Courts of Equity for the recovery of the specific deeds or other instruments.<sup>3</sup>

cases the Court will exercise a sound discretion, as to making the decree; for it is by no means an absolute right of the party to have the title deeds *in all cases secured, or brought into Chancery for [*15] preservation. If such a practice were suffered universally to prevail, the title deeds of half the estates in the country might be brought into Court. To entitle the party, therefore, to seek relief, it must clearly appear, that there is danger of a loss or destruction of the title deeds in the custody of the persons possessing them; and, also, that the interest of the plaintiff is not too contingent, or too remote, to warrant the proceeding.

§ 705. Cases also may occur, where a deed or other instrument, originally valid, has, by subsequent events, such as by a satisfaction, or payment, or other extinguishment of it, legal or equitable, become functus officio; and yet its existence may be either a cloud on the title of the other party, or subject him to the danger of some future litigation, when the facts are no longer capable of complete proof, or have become involved in the obscurities of time.<sup>2</sup> Under such circumstances, although the deed or other instrument has become a nullity; yet Courts of Equity will interpose upon the like principles to prevent injustice, and will decree a delivery and cancellation of the instrument. This, indeed, is a very old head of Equity; and traces of it are to be found in some of our earliest Reports.<sup>3</sup>

establish an intention to have the bond delivered up, not touched or provided for by the testator's will.<sup>1</sup>

§ 706. a. Whether all the cases, which have been cited in the two last sections, being cases of imperfect gifts or incomplete acts, sought to be enforced in Equity in favor of mere volunteers, are strictly maintainable or not upon the true principles, which now regulate the subject, may perhaps in the present state of the authorities be thought to admit of some doubt.<sup>2</sup> Be this as it may, they proceed upon the distinct ground, that the transaction was one exclusively between the creditor and the debtor; and that, taking all the circumstances together, it was clearly the intention of the creditor to treat the debt as in equity forgiven and released to the debtor himself. But cases of this sort are clearly distinguishable from purely voluntary imperfect gifts, or assignments of debts or other property to third persons, and also from purely voluntary contracts inter vivos, to which, however, at first view they might seem to bear a very close analogy. In respect to voluntary contracts inter vivos, it is a general principle, that Courts of Equity will not interfere; but will leave the parties, where the law finds them.<sup>3</sup> In respect also to gifts and assignments inter

<sup>1</sup> It seems difficult, if not impracticable, to reconcile these cases with that of Tufnell v. Constable, 8 Simons, R. 69. The case of *Flower v. vivos, Courts of Equity will enforce them only, when the gift or assignment is perfected and complete, so that nothing farther remains to consummate the title of the donee. For, if the gift or assignment is imperfect, or any further act remains to be done to complete the title of the donee, Courts of Equity, treating the donee as a mere volunteer, will not aid him to carry it into effect either against the donor or against his legal representatives.<sup>1</sup> But of this we shall have occasion to speak more in another place.<sup>2</sup>

§ 707. In all these cases, where a delivery up or cancellation of deeds or other instruments is sought, either upon the ground of their original invalidity, or of their subsequent satisfaction, or because the party has a just title thereto, or derives an interest under them, Courts of Equity act upon an enlarged and comprehensive policy;<sup>3</sup> and, therefore, in granting the relief, they will impose such terms and qualifications, as shall meet the just equities of the opposing party. Thus, for instance, if the heir at law seeks a discovery and delivery of the title deeds of the estate of his ancestor against a jointress, he will not be allowed the relief, unless upon the terms of confirming her *jointure.<sup>4</sup> [*17] So, where there is a subsequent mortgagee without notice, who has possession of the title deeds, he will not be compelled to deliver up the deeds to the first mortgagee, unless upon the terms, that the latter will pay him his mortgage money.<sup>1</sup> Cases of this sort afford a very frequent illustration of the maxim, that he, who seeks the aid of Equity, must do Equity.

§ 708. There yet remains another class of cases, in which the remedial powers of Courts of Equity is applied, to compel a specific delivery of the thing, to which another person has a clear right. We here allude to the jurisdiction to entertain bills for the delivery of specific chattels. Ordinarily, in cases of chattels, Courts of Equity will not interfere to decree a specific delivery, because by a suit of law, a full compensation may be obtained in damages, although the thing itself cannot be specifically obtained; and, where such a remedy at law is perfectly adequate and effectual to redress the injury, there is no reason, why Courts of Equity should afford any aid to the party.<sup>2</sup> Indeed, it may be truly said, that the value of goods and merchandise varies so much at different times, that it might not unfrequently be inequitable to decree a specific performance of contracts respecting them, since it might be wholly disproportionate to the injury sustained.<sup>3</sup>

[*18] *§ 709. But there are cases of personal goods and chattels, in which the remedy at law by damages would be utterly inadequate, and leave the injured party in a state of irremediable loss. In all such cases,

Courts of Equity will interfere, and grant full relief, by requiring a specific delivery of the thing, which is wrongfully withheld. This may occur, where the thing is of a peculiar value and importance; and the loss of it cannot be fully compensated in damages, when withheld from the owner; and then relief will be granted in Equity.<sup>1</sup> Thus, where the lord of a manor was entitled to an old altar piece, made of silver, and remarkable for a Greek inscription and dedication to Hercules, as treasure trove within his manor, and it had been sold by a wrong-doer, it was decreed to be delivered up to the lord of the manor, as a matter of curious antiquity, which could not be replaced in value, and which might, by being defaced, become greatly depreciated.<sup>2</sup> So, where an estate was held by the tenure of a horn, and a bill was brought by the owner to have it delivered up to him, it was held maintainable; for it constituted an essential muniment of his title.<sup>3</sup> The same principle applies to any other chattel, whose principal value consists in its antiquity; or its being the production of some distinguished artist; or its being a family relic, or ornament, or heir loom; such, for instance, as ancient gems, medals, and coins; ancient statues and busts; paintings of old and distinguished masters; and even those of a modern date, having a peculiar distinction and value; family pictures and portraits, and ornaments; and other things of a kindred nature.<sup>4</sup>

§ 710. There are other cases, where Courts of Equity have interfered to decree a specific delivery of chattels under an agreement of sale, or for an exclusive possession and enjoyment for a term of years. But all these cases stand upon very peculiar circumstances, where the nature of the remedy at law is inadequate to complete redress; or where some other ingredients of Equity Jurisdiction are mixed up in the transaction; such as the necessity of interference to prevent multiplicity of suits, or irreparable mischief.<sup>1</sup> Thus, for instance, where on the dissolution of a partnership, an agreement was made, that a particular book used in the trade should be considered the exclusive property of one of the partners, and that a copy of it should be given to the other, a specific performance of the agreement was decreed as to the copy; for it is clear, that at law no adequate redress could be obtained.<sup>2</sup> So, a decree was made against a lessee of alum works, to prevent a breach of a covenant, to leave a certain amount of stock on the premises at the expiration of the term; there being ground of suspicion, that he did not mean to perform the covenant. So, a decree was made against a landlord to [*20] *restore to a tenant certain farm stock, taken by former, in violation of the terms of his contract.<sup>3</sup>

§ 711. And, formerly, where the Court would not decree a specific performance and delivery of chattels, it would yet entertain the suit to decree compensation against the party for his omission to perform his contract. Thus, for instance, where there was a contract for the delivery of specific stock, the Court refused to decree a specific performance; but, at the same time, entertained the bill for the purpose of giving compensation for the non-delivery.<sup>2</sup> But this subject will naturally come more properly under review in the succeeding chapter.<sup>3</sup>

CHAPTER XVIII.

DUTIES.

§ 712. HAVING, thus, gone over some of the principal grounds, upon which Courts of Equity will interpose to decree the rescission, cancellation, or delivery up of agreements, securities, and other instruments, and the delivery of chattels to the rightful owners, we shall in the next place pass to the consideration of the other branch of our inquiries; viz., what are the cases, in which Courts of Equity will interpose, and decree a specific performance of agreements.

§ 713. With reference to the present subject, agreements may be divided into three classes; (1) those, which respect personal property; (2) those, which respect personal acts; and (3) those, which respect real property. And we shall presently see, that the jurisdiction, now actually exercised by Courts of Equity, is not coextensive in all these classes of cases; but at the same time it may be fairly resolved into the same general principles.

§ 714. It is well known, that by the Common Law every contract or covenant to sell or transfer a thing, if there is no actual transfer, is treated as a mere personal contract or covenant; and, as such if it is unperformed by the party, no redress can be had, except in damages. This is, in effect, in all cases, allowing the party the election either to pay damages, or to perform the contract or covenant at his sole pleasure. But Courts of Equity have deemed such a course wholly inadequate for the purposes of justice; and, considering it a violation of moral and equitable duties, they have not hesitated to interpose, and require from the conscience of the offending party a strict performance of what he cannot, without manifest wrong or fraud, refuse.<sup>1</sup> However, where it has become impossible, from subsequent events, for the party to perform his contract, as by a subsequent sale of the subject matter of the contract without notice, Courts of Equity will not decree a specific performance; but will (as we shall see) retain the bill for compensation.<sup>2</sup>

§ 715. The jurisdiction of Courts of Equity, to decree a specific performance of contracts, is not dependent upon, or affected by, the form or character of the instrument. What these Courts seek to be satisfied of, is, that, the transaction in substance, amounts to, and is intended to be, a binding agreement for a specific object, whatever may be the form or character of the instrument. Thus, if a bond with a penalty is made upon condition to convey certain lands upon the payment of a certain price; it will be deemed in Equity an agreement to convey the land at all events, and not to be discharged by the payment of the penalty, although it has assumed the form of a condition only.<sup>3</sup> Courts of Equity, in all cases of this sort, look to the substance of the transaction, and the primary object of the parties; and, where that requires a specific performance, they will treat the penalty as a mere security for its due performance and attainment.<sup>1</sup>

§ 716. The jurisdiction of Courts of Equity to decree a specific performance of agreements is certainly of very ancient date, if it be not coeval with the existence of these Courts in England. It may be distinctly traced back to the reign of Edward IV.; for in the Year Book of 8th Edw. IV., 4, (b) it was expressly recognised by the Chancellor as a clear jurisdiction.<sup>2</sup> But, whatever may be its origin and antiquity, it is now clearly established, and is in daily and most beneficial exercise for the purposes of justice.<sup>3</sup> The ground of the jurisdiction is, that a Court of Law is inadequate to decree a specific performance, and can relieve the injured party only by a compensation in damages, which, in many cases, would fall far short of the redress, which his situation might require. Wherever, therefore, the party wants the thing in specie, and he cannot otherwise

IV., 4, b, was a suit in Chancery; and Genney, of counsel for the defendant, in his argument said, by way of illustration, (as the text stands); “If I promise to build a house for you, if I do not build it, you shall have a remedy by subpoena”; to which, the Chancellor is reported to have replied, “He shall.” I cannot but think, that Genney put the case, not as an affirmative proposition, but by way of interrogatory, (would he have a subpoena?) for so the scope of his argument required. But, either way, the Chancellor’s remark points in favor of the jurisdiction. In cases of contract to build a house, or a bridge, a specific performance would not now be decreed. See Errington v. Aynesly, 2 Bro. Ch. R. 341, 342; Moseley v. Virgin, 3 Ves. jr. 185, 186; Lucas v. Commerford, 3 Bro. Ch. R. 166, 167.

be fully compensated, Courts of Equity will grant him a specific performance.<sup>1</sup>

§ 717. And this constitutes the true and leading distinction in the present exercise of Equity Jurisdiction in England, in regard to decreeing specific performance. It does not proceed (as is some times erroneously supposed) upon any distinction between real estate and personal estate; but upon the ground, that damages at law may not in the particular case afford a complete remedy.<sup>2</sup> Thus, Courts of Equity will decree performance of a contract for land, not because of the particular nature of land, but because the damages at law, which must be calculated upon the general value of land, may not be a complete remedy to the purchaser, to whom the land purchased may have a peculiar and special value. So, Courts of Equity will not generally decree performance of a contract for the sale of stock or goods; not because of their personal nature; but because the damages at law, calculated on the market price of the stock or goods, are as complete a remedy for the purchaser, as the delivery of the stock or goods contracted for; inasmuch as with the damages he may ordinarily purchase the same quantity of the like stock or goods.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>3</sup> Adderley v. Dixon v. 1 Sim. & Stu. 607, and the cases cited in the preceding note; Post § 717, § 724.—Lord Hardwicke, in Buxton v. Lister, (3 Atk. 384,) lays down the same distinction between contracts respecting chattels and contracts respecting lands. But he does not seem to give

§ 717 a. The truth is, that, upon the principles of natural justice, Courts of Equity might proceed much farther, and might insist upon decreeing a specific performance of all bonâ fide contracts; since that is a remedy, to which Courts of Law are inadequate.<sup>1</sup> There is no pretence for the complaints sometimes made by the common lawyers, that such relief in Equity would wholly subvert the remedies by actions of the case and actions of covenant; for it is against conscience that a party should have a right of election, whether he would perform his covenant, or only pay damages for the breach of it. But, on the other hand, there is no reasonable objection to allowing the other party, who is injured by the breach, to have an election, either to take damages at law, or to have a specific performance in Equity; the remedies being concurrent, but not coextensive with each other.<sup>2</sup>

precisely the same reasons for the distinction. "In general," (says he,) "this Court will not entertain a bill for a specific performance of contracts of stock, corn, hops, &c.; for, as these are contracts, which relate to merchandise, that vary according to different times and circumstances, if a Court of Equity should admit such bills, it might drive on parties to the execution of a contract to the ruin of one side, when upon an action that party might not have paid perhaps above a shilling damage." "As to the cases of contracts for purchase of lands or things, that relate to realties, those are of a permanent nature; and if a person agrees to purchase them, it is on a particular liking to the land, and is quite a different thing from matters in the way of trade." It has been very properly remarked by Lord Chief Baron Richards, that the reason given by Lord Hardwicke for not entertaining jurisdiction in cases of chattels, would equally apply to contracts for the purchase of land, which (in the present times) sinks and rises in value in an extraordinary manner. Wright v. Bell, 5 Price, R. 329. See also Doloret v. Rothschild, 1 Sim. & Stu. 590.

The restriction stands, therefore, not so much upon any general principle ex æquo et bono, as upon the general convenience of leaving the party to his remedy in damages at law, where that will give him a clear and full compensation. And the true reason, why a contract for stock is not now specifically decreed, is, that it is ordinarily capable of such an exact compensation. But cases of a peculiar stock may easily be supposed, where Courts of Equity might still feel themselves bound to decree a specific performance, upon the ground, that from its nature it has a peculiar value, and is incapable of compensation by damages.<sup>1</sup> Indeed, it has been thought, that on contracts for stock, a Bill ought now to be maintainable generally in Equity, for a specific delivery thereof, upon the ground, that a Court of Law cannot give the property, but can only give a remedy in damages, the beneficial effect of which must depend upon the personal responsibility of the party.<sup>2</sup>

§ 718. But although the general rule now is, not to entertain jurisdiction in Equity for a specific performance of agreements respecting goods, chattels, stock, choses in action, and other things of a merely personal nature;<sup>3</sup> yet the rule is (as we have seen) a qualified one, and subject to exceptions; or, rather, the rule is limited to cases, where a compensation in damages furnishes a complete and satisfactory remedy.<sup>4</sup> Cases may readily be enumerated, which are, and have been deemed, fit for the exercise of Equity Jurisdiction. Thus, where there was a contract for the sale of 800 tons of iron, to be paid for in a certain number of years by instalments, a specific performance was decreed; for such sort of contracts (it was said) differ from those, which are to be immediately executed.<sup>1</sup> But the true reason probably was, that, under the particular *circumstances of the case, there could be no adequate compensation in damages at law; for the profits upon the contract, being to depend upon future events, could not be correctly estimated by the jury in damages, inasmuch as the calculation must proceed upon mere conjecture.<sup>2</sup>

§ 719. Lord Hardwicke has himself put several cases to illustrate the same exception. A man may contract for the purchase of a great quantity of timber, as a ship-carpenter, by reason of the vicinity of the timber, and this may be well known and understood on the part of the buyer; and then a specific performance would seem indispensable to justice.<sup>3</sup> On the other hand, there may be a peculiar convenience on the part of the seller; as if a man wants to clear his land, in order to turn it to a particular sort of husbandry; there, nothing could answer the justice of the case, but the performance of the contract in specie.<sup>4</sup> Upon the same general ground, an agreement for the purchase of timber trees, to be paid for in six annual instalments, and eight years to be allowed for disposing of the same, and articles of agreement to be drawn up accordingly, has been thought to be a fit case for a decree for a specific performance; especially, as in that case the agreement, contemplating future articles, might, perhaps, be deemed incomplete at law.<sup>1</sup> And, indeed, this last ground alone, would be sufficient to sustain the jurisdiction;<sup>2</sup> and has been adopted on other occasions.<sup>3</sup>

*§ 720. Other illustrations may be found in [*28] cases, not merely of sales, but of matters peculiarly resting in contracts of a very different nature. Thus, where a covenant was made, in a lease of some alum works, to leave a certain stock upon the premises, a specific performance was decreed; because the trade would be greatly damaged, if the covenant was not specifically performed, contrary to the real justice of the case between the parties; and the landlord had stipulated for a sort of enjoyment of the premises after the expiration of the lease.<sup>4</sup>

§ 721. Of the like nature are the common cases of covenants between landlords and tenants, where injunctions, in the nature of a specific performance, are often decreed; as, for instance, covenants not to remove manure or crops at the end of a lease; covenants not to plough meadow; covenants not to dig gravel, sand, or coal. In all cases of this sort, although the Court acts merely by injunction, to prevent the breach of the particular covenant, it in effect secures thereby a specific performance; and it may at once be seen, that such interposition is indispensable to prevent irreparable mischief.<sup>1</sup>

§ 722. Cases of agreements to form a partnership, and to execute articles accordingly, may also be specifically decreed, although they relate exclusively to chattel interests; for no adequate compensation [*29] *can in such cases be made at law.<sup>2</sup> Upon the like ground, Courts of Equity will decree the specific performance of a covenant for a lease, or to renew a lease;<sup>3</sup> so, of a contract for the sale of the good will of a trade, and of a valuable secret connected with it;<sup>4</sup> so, of a contract to keep the banks of a river in repair;<sup>5</sup> so, of a contract to pay the plaintiff an annual sum for life, and a certain other sum for every hundred weight of brass wire manufactured by the defendant during the life of the plaintiff;<sup>6</sup> so, of a contract for the sale of an annuity payable out of the dividends of stock;<sup>7</sup> so, of a covenant upon the grant of an annuity to charge the same upon all the property, of which the grantor should be possessed at the death of the annuitant, if the grantor should survive him ;<sup>1</sup> so, of a contract for the sale of debts proved under a commission of Bankruptcy, where an assignment of the debt had not been already executed.<sup>2</sup>

§ 722. (a) In like manner, although where one partner contracts, that he will exert himself for the benefit of the partnership, a Court of Equity cannot compel a specific performance of that part of the agreement ; yet, if he has also covenanted, that he will not carry on the same trade with other persons, there being a partnership subsisting, the Court will restrain him from breaking that part of the agreement.<sup>3</sup> So, if a party covenants, that he will not carry on his trade within a certain distance or in a certain place, within which the other party, covenanted with, carries on the same trade, a Court of Equity will restrain the party from breaking the agreement so made. In each of these cases, the decree operates, pro tanto, as a specific performance.<sup>4</sup> The ground of all these decisions is the utter uncertainty of any calculation of damages, as they must in such cases be in a great measure conjectural ; or, that some farther act is necessary to be done, to clothe the defendant with a full and effective title to support his claim.<sup>5</sup>

§ 723. Where the specific performance of a contract respecting chattels will be decreed upon *the [*30] application of one party, Courts of Equity will maintain the like suit at the instance of the other party, although the relief sought by him is merely in the nature of a compensation in damages or value ; for, in all such cases, the Court acts upon the ground, that the remedy, if it exists at all, ought to be mutual and reciprocal, as well for the vendor, as for the purchaser.<sup>1</sup>

§ 724. Indeed, a disposition has been evinced, on various occasions, to apply the jurisdiction to a much larger extent.<sup>2</sup> Thus, although the doctrine seems well settled, that a contract for the sale of stock will not now be decided to be specifically performed, because [*31] it is ordinarily capable of an exact *compensation in damages;<sup>3</sup> yet it is well known, that as late as Lord Hardwicke's time such contracts were so decreed

<sup>2</sup> Mr. Cox, in his note to Cud v. Rutter, 1 P. Will. 571, note 2, says: "But cases of this kind depend so much on their own particular circumstances, that it seems no general rule can be laid down. And Lord Redesdale, in a note to his Treatise on Equity Pleadings, admits, that it is difficult to reconcile all the cases, in which the Courts of Equity have compelled the performance of agreements, or refused so to do; and in some cases, where performance has been denied, it is difficult to reconcile the decisions with the principles of equal justice. Mitf. Pl. Eq. by Jeremy, p. 119, note (q). Still, perhaps, the Equity Jurisprudence of England, on this subject, does not deserve the severe reproach of being "the caprices of the English law, in regard to specific performance." See Mr. Austin's Province of Jurisprudence, and the Outline appended, cited in the English Law Magazine, Vol. XII. p. 335. The able article in that volume on this subject did not fall under my immediate notice, until the main body of these remarks was written. I am glad to find, that the author takes the same view of this matter of Equity Jurisdiction in cases of a specific performance of contracts respecting chattels, which is to be found in the text. It does not strike me, that the doctrines maintained in Equity are either incongruous or indefensible upon principle. There may be some discrepancies in the authorities; but the main doctrines stand upon the fundamental rule of Equity Jurisprudence, that there is not a plain, adequate, and complete remedy at law.

in Chancery.<sup>1</sup> And even in our own times it has been held, that a bill will lie for the specific performance of a contract for the purchase of government stock, in favor of a holder of scrip receipts, purporting to give the title to the bearer thereof, where the bill prayed for the delivery of the certificates, which gave the legal title to the stock; upon the ground, that a Court of Law could not give the property; but could only give a remedy in damages, the beneficial effect of which must depend upon the personal responsibility of the party.<sup>2</sup> If this, however, be a sufficient ground to entertain the jurisdiction, it seems universally applicable to all bills for a specific performance. In the Supreme Court of the United States, an inclination has been evinced to maintain a far more extensive jurisdiction in Equity to grant relief by a specific performance in contracts respecting personal chattels than is at present exercised in the English courts.<sup>3</sup>

§ 725. Some of the cases already stated are not purely cases respecting the sale, transfer, or enjoyment of personal chattels; but may properly be deemed to involve personal acts and proceedings. But it is difficult to separate the one class entirely from the other; and they naturally flow into each other. In regard, however, to contracts for personal acts and proceedings, there is some diversity of judgment in the authorities, as to the cases and circumstances, in which a specific performance ought to be decreed in Equity. Thus, for example, it has been a matter of some conflict of opinion, how far Courts of Equity ought to entertain a suit for the specific performance of a covenant to build or rebuild a house of a specified form and size on particular land. In the earlier cases the jurisdiction was maintained;<sup>1</sup> and Lord Hardwicke recognised it in its full extent, at the same time, that he denied, that a covenant to repair a house ought to be specifically performed.<sup>2</sup> The ground of his opinion in the particular case (which was between landlord and tenant) was, that the not building takes away the security of the landlord; but that upon the covenant to repair he might have a remedy at law.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>2</sup> Doloret v. Rothschild, 1 Sim. & Stu. 590. Besides the ground stated in the text, Sir John Leach added: "I consider also, that the plaintiff, not being the original holder of the scrip, but merely the bearer, may not be able to maintain any action at law upon the contract; and that if he has any title it must be in equity." Ibid. p. 598; Ante § 717, & § 717 (a). Even in regard to stock, a specific performance is sometimes decreed in Equity. As, for instance, if a trustee of stock sells it, the cestui que trust has an option, either to have it replaced in stock, or the money produced by it with interest. Forrest v. Elwes, 4 Ves. 497.

§ 726. On the other hand, in later cases, this doctrine has been expressly denied; and it has been said, that no such covenant ought to be enforced specifically in Equity; for, if one will not build, another may; there can be a full compensation at law in damages; and Courts of Equity ought not to undertake the conduct of a building or rebuilding, any more than of repairs.<sup>4</sup>

Upon similar grounds, a covenant to make good a gravel pit at the expiration of a lease, has been refused to be specifically decreed.<sup>1</sup>

§ 727. Still, however, the doctrine, as to a covenant to build or rebuild, can hardly be considered even now as completely settled against the jurisdiction, (though that, as to repairs, certainly is)<sup>2</sup>, since Lord Rosslyn, in one of his leading judgments, maintained, that where the covenant to build or rebuild had a definite certainty, as to size, materials, &c., it ought to be decreed in Equity to be specifically performed. But, if it was loose, general, or uncertain, there it ought to be left to a suit for damages at law.<sup>3</sup> This decision, although questioned at the Bar, has never been overruled; and, indeed, it has incidentally received some confirmation from the reluctance of the Court to shake it.<sup>4</sup>

§ 728. Independently of authority, there are certainly strong reasons, which may be adduced in favor of entertaining the jurisdiction in Equity upon a covenant to build or rebuild, in cases where the contract has sufficient definiteness and certainty. In the first place, it is by no means clear, that complete and adequate compensation can in such cases be obtained at law; for if the suit is brought before any building or rebuilding by the party, claiming the benefit of the covenant, the damages must be quite conjectural, and incapable of being reduced to any absolute certainty; and if the suit is brought afterwards, still the question must be left open, whether more or less than the exact sum required has been expended upon the building, which inquiry must always be at the peril of the plaintiff.<sup>1</sup> In the next place, such a covenant does not admit of an exact compensation in damages from another circumstance; the changing value of the stock and materials at different times, according to the various demands of the market. In the last place, it seems against conscience to compel a party, at his own peril, to advance his own money to perform what properly belongs to another, when it may often happen, either from his want of skill or means, that at every step he may be obliged to encounter personal obstacles, or to make personal sacrifices, for which no real compensation can ever be made. It would not, therefore, be surprising, if, after all, the doctrine of Lord Rosslyn should obtain a firm hold in Equity Jurisprudence, as it stands well supported by analogy, as well as by high authority. The just conclusion in all such cases would seem to be, that Courts of Equity ought not to decline the jurisdiction for a specific performance of contracts, whenever the remedy at law is doubtful in its nature, extent, operation, or adequacy.

§ 729. In regard to many other contracts for personal acts and proceedings, which are of a very different character, similar observations may apply.<sup>2</sup> Thus, for instance, a covenant to renew a lease will, (as we have seen,) be specifically decreed.<sup>3</sup> So, a covenant to levy a fine of an estate; for it may be indispensable as a muniment of title. So, a covenant to invest money in lands, and settle it in a particular manner.<sup>1</sup> So, an agreement to settle the boundaries between two estates.<sup>2</sup> Many other cases might easily be put to illustrate the same doctrine; as the case of a covenant not to build upon a contiguous estate, to the injury of an ancient messuage; of a covenant not to cut down timber trees, which are peculiarly ornamental to the mansion of the covenantee; of a covenant not to erect any noisome or injurious manufacturing establishment on an estate adjacent to that of the covenantee; of a covenant not to carry on the same trade with the covenantee in the same street or town; and of a covenant, that a house, to be built adjacent to other houses, should correspond with them in its elevation.<sup>3</sup>

§ 730. Courts of Equity will, upon analogous principles, interpose in many cases, to decree a specific performance of express, and even of implied contracts, where no actual injury has as yet been sustained, but it is only apprehended from the peculiar relation between the parties. This proceeding is commonly called a bill quia timet, in analogy to some proceedings at law, where in some cases a writ may be maintained before any actual molestation, distress, or impleading of the party.<sup>4</sup> Thus, (as we have seen,) a surety may file a bill to compel the debtor on a bond, in which he has joined, to pay the debt when due, whether the surety has been actually sued or not.<sup>1</sup> And upon a covenant to save harmless, a bill may be filed to relieve the covenantee under similar circumstances.<sup>2</sup> So, where property is covenanted to be secured for certain purposes, and in certain events, and there is danger of its being alienated or squandered; Courts of Equity will interpose to secure the property for the original purposes.<sup>3</sup> And, generally, it may be stated, that, in cases of contracts, express or implied, Courts of Equity will interpose to preserve the funds devoted to particular objects, under such contracts, and decree, what in effect is a specific performance, security to be given, or the fund to be placed under the control of the Court.<sup>4</sup> This subject will present itself in some other aspects hereafter; and does not, therefore, require a fuller development in this place.

§ 731. There is another sort of contract, respecting which there has been no small diversity of opinion, whether a specific performance ought to be decreed or not. It is, where a husband covenants, that his wife shall levy a fine, or execute any other lawful conveyance, to bar her right in his estate, or in her own estate. There are many cases, in which covenants of this sort have been decreed to be specifically performed. And, on one occasion Sir Joseph Jekyll, Master of the Rolls, said ; “There have been a hundred precedents, where, if the husband for a valuable consideration covenants, that the wife shall join with him in a fine, the Court has decreed the husband to do it ; for that he has undertaken it, and must lie by it, if he does not perform it.”<sup>1</sup>

<sup>4</sup> Ibid. 1 Fonbl. Eq. B. 1, Ch. 1, § 8, and note (y).—Where a party has agreed to execute a mortgage on an advance of money, and has refused to perform the agreement, a Court of Equity will often, upon a bill for a specific performance, and praying for a receiver, order a receiver to be appointed. In such a case, the bill is in the nature of a bill quia timet, so far as a receiver is prayed for. Shakel v. Duke of Marlborough, 4 Madd. R. 463; Post, § 845, § 846, § 847, § 850.

§ 732. The reason is said to be, because in all such cases it is to be presumed, that the husband, when he enters into such a covenant, has first gained the wife’s consent for that purpose.<sup>2</sup> But this reason is a very insufficient one for so strong a doctrine ; for it may be a presumption entirely against the fact ; and, if correct at the time, the wife may have subsequently withdrawn her consent, and refused upon very proper grounds to comply with the covenant. Let us suppose a case, in which either there has been no consent, or it has been thus withdrawn ; it may then be asked, and, indeed, it has been asked, with the earnestness of great doubt, whether, if it is impossible for the husband to procure the concurrence of his wife in such a proceeding, a Court of Equity, acting according to conscience, will decree the husband to perform, what it is morally impossible for him to perform.<sup>3</sup> It seems difficult to maintain the affirmative ; especially as a full compensation may generally be obtained by returning the money with interest and damages.<sup>1</sup>

§ 733. But there is a much stronger ground, upon which the propriety of the doctrine may well be contested. It is the impolicy of endeavoring to compel the husband to use undue influence, and unjustifiable means, inconsistent with the harmony, peace, and confidence of conjugal life, to obtain such a surrender of the rights of the wife. It is offering to him a premium to be ungenerous, as well as unjust ; and separating his interests, as well as his good faith, from hers.<sup>2</sup> On this account Lord Cowper refused to adopt the doctrine, saying : “ It is a tender point, to compel the husband by a decree to compel his wife to levy a fine, though there have been some precedents in the Court for it. And it is a great breach upon the wisdom of the law, which secures the wife’s lands from being aliened by the husband without her free and voluntary consent, to lay a necessity upon the wife to part with her lands, or otherwise to be the cause of her husband’s lying in prison all his days.”<sup>3</sup>

§ 734. It is true, that this reasoning has not met the approbation of some learned minds in our own times ; because, it is suggested, creditors, may, by throwing the husband into prison, compel the wife to part with her estate in the same way.<sup>4</sup> But, with great submission, there is a great difference between a Court's undertaking to enforce a contract against the policy of the law, and thus sanctioning a violation of conjugal duties ; and leaving all parties free to act upon such exigencies, as may arise, according to their own sense of the necessities of the case. A Court of Equity may well decline to enforce a contract, which it might not under the circumstances incline to cancel. It is most manifest, that the doctrine has not the support of one of the most able equity judges of England, (Lord Eldon) ; for he has not hesitated to express a very pointed disapprobation of it. "If this was perfectly res integra," (said he,) "I should hesitate long, before I should say, the husband is to be understood to have gained her consent, and the presumption is to be, that he obtained it before the bargain, to avoid all fraud, that may be afterwards practised to procure it."<sup>1</sup>

Buller*, 10 Ves. 305; Innes v. Jackson, 16 Ves. 367. The reasoning of Lord Eldon is so forcible, that it deserves to be here given at large. "Certainly the general point is of great importance, whether the contract of the husband, which however this was not intended to be, but that of the daughters, is to be executed against the husband by a Court of Equity; in effect compelling the husband to compel his wife to levy a fine; which is a voluntary act. This is brought forward in the report, as the principal ground of the decree. The argument shows, that point is not quite so well settled, as it has been understood to be. The policy of the law is, that a wife is not to part with her property, but by her own spontaneous and free will. If this was perfectly res integra, I should hesitate long, before I should say, the husband is to be understood to have gained her consent, and the presumption is to be made, that he obtained it before the bargain, to avoid all the fraud, that may be afterwards practised to procure it. I should have hesitated long in following up that presumption, rather than the principle of the policy of the law; for, if a man chooses to contract for the estate of a married woman, or an estate

subject to dower, he knows the property is hers altogether, or to a given extent. The purchaser is bound to regard the policy of the law; and what right has he to complain, if she, who, according to law, cannot part with her property, but by her own free will, expressed at the time of that act of record, takes advantage of the locus penitentiae? And why is he not to take his chance of damages against the husband? If cases have determined this question so, that no consideration of the absurdity, that must arise, and the almost ridiculous state, in which this Court must in many instances be placed, can prevail against their authority, it must be so. For the sake of illustration, suppose 10,000l. 3 per cents. carried to the account of a married woman; and the husband contracts to transfer; (taking it, that the Court had jurisdiction to decree performance of such a contract.) At the hearing, what is to be done for the wife? In the two last cases the wife appears to have been left a party to the suit, without affecting her under the decree. If the Court cannot by the decree order an act to be done by her, the bill ought to be dismissed against her; unless some future act by her, to be ordered upon further directions, is looked to. But the principle of the decree shows, that cannot be the purpose. It does not rest there. Suppose, the husband procures her consent, even by the mildest means; persuades and influences her by the difficulties he has got into; or entering into an improvident contract; and she is examined here by the Judge, who has made the decree upon the husband; and if upon the submission of all the considerations, which ought to be submitted to her in this Court and the Court of Common Pleas, she says, she thinks it, in her situation, not fit for her to part with the property, the Court must send the husband to jail; telling her, she never ought to relieve him from that state. And all this for the benefit of a person, who cannot have a specific performance certainly; but who may have damages; and who sets up his title to a specific performance in opposition to the policy of the law. Upon the first ground, therefore, there is difficulty enough to make me pause, before I should follow the two last authorities. And I am not sure, whether it is not proper to have the judgment of the House of Lords, to determine which of these decisions ought to bind us. As to the expression used by Lord Cowper, that this jurisdiction is to be very sparingly exercised, certainly it is very dissatisfactory to be informed, that it is, and is not, to be done." See also the opinion of Sir Thomas Plumer in Howel v. George, 1 Madd. R. 9, who says; "It could not be argued, that a man should be compelled to use his marital and parental authority to compel his wife and son to do acts, which ought only to be spontaneously done." Sir James Mansfield also, in Davis

to the act, and that defence is not set up in the answer, but the objections to the decree are put wholly upon other distinct grounds, there may be less difficulty in making a decree for a specific performance.<sup>1</sup> Even in such a case a Court of Equity ought not to decree in so important a matter, affecting the wife's interest, without bringing her directly before the Court, and obtaining her consent upon full deliberation. But where the answer expressly shows an inability of the husband to comply with the covenant, and a firm refusal of the wife, it will require more reasoning, than has yet appeared, to sustain the justice, or equity, or policy, of the doctrine.<sup>2</sup>

§ 736. In cases of covenants and other contracts, where a specific performance is sought, it is often material to consider, how far the reciprocal obligations of the party, seeking the relief, have been fairly and fully performed. For if the latter have been disregarded, or they are incapable of being substantially performed on the part of the party, so seeking relief, or from their nature they have ceased to have any just application by subsequent events, or it is against public policy to enforce them. Courts of Equity will not interfere. Thus, where two persons had agreed to work a coach from Bristol to London, one providing the horses for a part of the road, and the other for the remainder; and

v. Jones (4 Bos. & Pull. 267), said; "Nothing can be more absurd, than to allow a married woman to be compelled to levy a fine, through fear of her husband being sued and thrown into jail, when the general principle of law is, that a married woman, shall not be compelled to levy a fine." in consequence of the horses of the latter being taken in execution, the former was obliged to furnish horses for the whole road, and claimed the whole profits; the Court, on a bill by the party, who was so in default, for an account of the profits, and to restrain the other party from working the coaches with his own horses on the whole road, refused to interfere; because the default might again occur, and subject the defendant to an action.<sup>1</sup> So, where upon a grant of certain land with a well in it, there was a covenant by the grantees not to sell or dispose of the water from the well to the injury of the proprietors of certain water works intended for the public supply; but not deriving their supply from the well; upon a bill for an injunction, the Court refused to interfere, on account of the inconveniences, saying, that, although the Court will in many cases interfere to restrain a breach of covenant; yet there was no instance to be met with of such a covenant as this. For, here, the Court must in each instance try, whether the act of selling any specified quantity of water was a prejudice to the proprietors of the water works or not; and that upon such a covenant so framed a Court of Equity ought not to entertain jurisdiction, even if there were no objection on the score of public policy.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup> Collins v. Plumb, 16 Ves. 454. This case turned upon its own special circumstances, and cannot be admitted to be an authority for any general doctrine on the subject. If the Water Works Company had derived their supply of water from the well, there is no doubt, that a Court of Equity would have interfered to prevent the party from violating his covenant to the injury of the Company. In the actual posture of the case then before the Court, the object of the covenant seemed to have been, to secure to the Company the monopoly of water for the supply of the inhabitants of the town, and other persons resorting

§ 737. So, where a conveyance in fee had been made of certain lands in the city of London, and the feoffee covenanted not to use the land in a particular manner, with a view to the more ample enjoyment of the adjoining lands by the feoffor; and afterwards, by the voluntary acts of the feoffor and *those claiming under him, the character and condition of the adjoining land had been so greatly altered, that the contemplated benefits were entirely gone; the Court refused to interfere to compel a specific performance by injunction, and left the party to his remedy at law on the covenant.<sup>1</sup>

§ 738. Before proceeding to the remaining head of specific performance, that of contracts respecting real estate, which will occupy our attention to a far greater extent, it may be proper to mention, that before Lord Somers's time the practice used to be, on bills for a specific performance, to send the party to law; and if he recovered any thing by way of damages, the Court of Chancery then entertained the suit; otherwise the bill was dismissed.<sup>2</sup> And, hence, the

R. 217, and Mr. Hovenden's note; Jeremy on Eq. Jurisd. B. 3, Pt. 2, ch. 4, § 1, p. 425.—According to Mr. Butler, the old practice in Courts of Equity was in all cases first to send the party to law, to ascertain, whether there was any remedy there, or not. If there was no remedy at law, then Equity would interfere. His language is; "The grand reason for the interference of a Court of Equity is, that the imperfection of legal remedy, in consequence of the universality of legis-opinion was not uncommon, that, unless damages were recoverable at law, no suit could be maintained in Equity for a specific performance. Accordingly, it was laid down in a celebrated case by Lord Chief Justice Raymond, that "where damages are to be recovered at law for the breach of covenant, Equity will compel a specific execution of such act, for the not doing of which the law gives damages; and that for this reason, as an adequate compensation is to be made on the covenant, the quantum of the damages may be very uncertain; and therefore to prevent that uncertainty, Equity will enforce a specific execution of the thing."<sup>1</sup> At present no such practice prevails; and therefore the rule is not applied, as it certainly ought not to be applied, as a test of jurisdiction.

§ 739. But there is very great reason to doubt, if the rule ever was generally applied at any former period; for many cases must always have existed, in which damages were not recoverable at law, but in which a specific performance would nevertheless be decreed.<sup>2</sup> The rule was probably confined to cases, in lative provisions, may be redressed. Hence, for a length of time, after the introduction of equitable judicature into this country, it was thought necessary, that, before Equity should interfere, this imperfection should be manifested by the party's previously proceeding at law, so far as to show, from its result, the want or inadequacy of legal redress, and his claim for equitable relief. This inflicted upon him two judicial suits, and consequently a double expense. To remedy this grievance, it became the practice, particularly from the time, in which the seals were entrusted to Lord Cowper, to dispense with the previous legal suit, when the want or inadequacy of the legal remedy, to be obtained by it, was evident," 1 Butler, Reminis. 39, 40.

which the party was not entitled to any remedy at law, and there was no equity to be administered beyond the law.<sup>1</sup> Lord Macclesfield denied the existence of the rule altogether, and said: "Neither is it a true rule, which had been laid down by the other side, that where an action cannot be brought at law on an agreement for damages, there, a suit will not lie in Equity for a specific performance."<sup>2</sup> And accordingly *in the very case then before him he gave [*45] relief, although there could be no remedy at law. It was a case, where a feme gave a bond to her intended husband, that in case of their marriage she would convey her lands to him in fee. They afterwards married; and the wife died without issue, and then the husband died. And it was held, that, although the bond was void at law, yet it was good evidence of an agreement; and the heir of the husband could compel a specific performance against the heir of the wife.<sup>3</sup>

§ 740. Lord Macclesfield on that occasion put another case. If a feme infant seised in fee, on a marriage with the consent of her guardians, should covenant in consideration of a settlement to convey her inheritance to her husband, and the settlement were competent, a Court of Equity would decree a specific execution of the agreement, although no action at law would lie to recover damages.<sup>4</sup> Another case may also be put. If an agreement be made for the sale of an estate, and the vendor dies before the period, when the estate is to be conveyed, the heir of the

§ 741. It has been said, in a late case, that it may be safely laid down, as a general proposition, notwithstanding many exceptions, that an agreement in order [*46] to call for a *specific performance by the decree of a Court of Equity must be such an agreement, as might have been made the subject of an action at law.<sup>2</sup> This language, when understood in a qualified sense, is doubtless correct; for, generally, if a party does not contract personally at law, Equity will not create a personal obligation on his part, unless under peculiar circumstances.<sup>3</sup> But the whole class of cases of specific performance of contracts respecting real estate, where the contract is by parol, and there has been a part performance, or where the terms of the contract have not been strictly complied with, and yet Equity relieves the party, are proofs, that the right to maintain a suit in Equity to compel a specific performance does not, and cannot properly be said to depend upon the party's having a right to maintain a suit at law for damages.<sup>4</sup> In cases of specific performance, Courts of Equity sometimes follow the law, and sometimes go far beyond the law; and their doctrines, if not wholly independent of the point, whether damages would be given at law, are not in general dependent upon it. Whoever should assume the existence of a right to damages in an action at Law as the true test of the jurisdiction in Equity, would find himself involved in endless perplexity;<sup>1</sup> for sometimes damages may be recoverable at law, where Courts of Equity would yet not decree a specific performance; and, on the other hand, *damages may not be re- [*47] coverable at law, and yet relief would be granted in Equity.<sup>2</sup>

§ 742. In truth the exercise of this whole branch of Equity Jurisprudence, respecting the rescission and specific performance of contracts, is not a matter of right in either party; but is a matter of discretion in the Court;<sup>3</sup> not indeed of arbitrary or capricious discretion, dependent upon the mere pleasure of the Judge, but of that sound, and reasonable discretion, which governs itself, as far as it may, by general rules and principles; but, at the same time, which withholds or grants relief, according to the circumstances of each particular case, when these rules and principles will not furnish any exact measure of justice between the parties.<sup>4</sup> On this account it is not pos-

The *most that can be done, is to bring under review some of the leading principles and exceptions, which the past times have furnished, as guides to direct and aid our future inquiries.

§ 743. Let us now, in the next place, proceed to the consideration of the remaining and far most numerous class of cases, in which Courts of Equity are called upon to decree a specific performance of contracts, that is to say, contracts respecting land.<sup>1</sup> In examining this subject, our attention will almost exclusively be drawn to cases of contracts respecting land, situate in the same country, where the suit is brought. It may therefore be proper to premise, that a bill for a specific performance of a contract respecting land may be entertained by Courts of Equity, although the land is situate in a foreign country, if the parties are resident within the territorial jurisdiction of the Court. The ground of this jurisdiction is, that Courts of Equity have authority to act upon the person ; Æquitas agit in personam.<sup>2</sup> And although they cannot bind the land itself by their decree ; yet they can bind the conscience of the party in regard to the land ; and compel him to perform his agreement according to conscience and good faith.<sup>1</sup> Accordingly, it was held by Lord Hardwicke, that the specific performance of a contract, respecting the boundaries of the Colonies of Pennsylvania and Maryland, entered into by the proprietaries, might be decreed by the Court of Chancery of England.<sup>2</sup> The like doctrine was *held in the case of an agreement respecting the [* 49] Isle of Man, where a specific performance was decreed by the Court of Chancery in England, although the Isle was without the realm.<sup>3</sup> In like manner, in a contract respecting lands in Ireland, a specific performance has been decreed.<sup>4</sup>

§ 744. The proposition may, therefore, be laid down in the most general form, that to entitle a Court of Equity to maintain a bill for the specific performance of a contract respecting land, it is not necessary, that the land should be situate within the jurisdiction of the state or country, where the suit is brought. It is sufficient, that the parties to be affected and bound by the decree are resident within the state or country, where the suit is brought ; for in all suits in Equity the primary decree is in personam and not in rem.<sup>5</sup> The incapacity to enforce the decree in rem constitutes no objection to the right to entertain such a suit.<sup>1</sup> Where, indeed, the lands lie within the reach of the process of the Court, Courts of Equity will not exclusively rely on proceedings in personam ; but will put the successful party in possession of the lands, if [* 50] the other party *remains obstinate, and refuses to comply with the decree.<sup>2</sup>

§ 745. But to return to the class of cases, where a specific performance is sought on contracts respecting land, situate in the country, where the suit is brought. This class may be subdivided into two heads ; (1.) where relief is sought upon parol contracts within the statute of frauds and perjuries (as it is called) ; and (2.) where it is sought under written contracts, not falling within the scope of that statute.

§ 746. It has been already suggested, that Courts of Equity are in the habit of interposing to grant relief, in cases of contracts respecting real property, to a far greater extent, than in cases respecting personal property ; not, indeed, upon the ground of any distinction, founded upon the mere nature of the property, as real or as personal ; but, at the same time, not wholly excluding the consideration of such a distinction. In regard to contracts respecting personal estate, it is (as has been already intimated) generally true, that no particular or peculiar value is attached to any one thing over another of the same kind ; and that a compensation in damages meets the full merits, as well as the full objects, of the contract. If a man contracts for the purchase of a hundred bales of cotton, or boxes of sugar, or bags of coffee, of a particular description or quality, if the contract is not specifically performed, he may generally, *with a sum equal to the market price, pur- [* 51] chase other goods of the same kind of a like description and quality; and thus completely obtain his object and indemnify himself against loss.<sup>1</sup> But in contracts respecting a specific messuage or parcel of land, the same considerations do not ordinarily apply. The locality, character, vicinage, soil, easements, or accommodations of the land generally, may give it a peculiar and special value in the eyes of the purchaser; so it cannot be replaced by other land of the same precise value, but not having the same precise local conveniences or accommodations;<sup>2</sup> and therefore a compensation in damages would not be adequate relief. It would not attain the object desired; and it would generally frustrate the plans of the purchaser. And hence it is, that the jurisdiction of Courts of Equity to decree specific performance is, in cases of contracts respecting land, universally maintained; whereas, in cases respecting chattels, it is limited to special circumstances.

§ 747. Courts of Equity, too, in cases of contracts respecting real property, have been in the habit of granting this relief, not only to a greater extent, but also under circumstances far more various and more indulgent, than in cases of contracts respecting chattels. For they do not confine themselves to cases of a strict legal title to relief. Another principle, equally beneficial, is well known and established, that Courts of Equity will not permit the forms of law to be made the instruments of injustice ; and they will, therefore, interpose against parties attempting to avail themselves of the rigid rules of law for unconscientious [*52] *purposes. When, therefore, advantage is taken of a circumstance, that does not admit of a strict performance in the contract, if the failure is not in a matter of substance, Courts of Equity will interfere.<sup>1</sup> Thus, they are in the habit of relieving in contracts for real property, where the party, from his own inadvertence or neglect, has suffered the proper time to elapse for the punctilious performance of his contract, and, from that and other circumstances, he cannot maintain an action to recover damages at law. Even where nothing exists to prevent his suing at law, so many circumstances are necessary to enable him to recover at law, that the mere formal proofs alone render it very inconvenient and hazardous so to proceed, even if the legal remedy would (as in many cases it would not) be adequate to the demands of substantial justice.

§ 748. On these accounts (as has been well remarked) Courts of Equity have enforced contracts of this sort, where no action for damages could be maintained ; for, at law, the party plaintiff must have strictly performed his part ; and the inconvenience of insisting upon that in all cases is sufficient to require the interference of Courts of Equity. They dispense with that, which would make a compliance, with what the law requires, oppressive ; and, in various cases of such contracts, they are in the constant habit of relieving a party, who has acted fairly, though negligently.<sup>2</sup>

§ 749. On the other hand, as the interference of Courts of Equity is discretionary, they will not enforce a specific performance of such contracts at the instance of the vendor, where his title is involved in difficulties, which cannot be removed, although, perhaps, *at law an action might be maintainable [* 53] against the defendant for damages for his not completing his purchase.<sup>1</sup>

§ 750. Indeed, the proposition may be more generally stated; that Courts of Equity will not interfere to decree a specific performance, except in cases, where it would be strictly equitable to make such a decree. There is no pretence to say, that it is the doctrine of Courts of Equity to carry into specific execution every contract in all cases, where that is found to be the legal intention and effect of the contract between the parties. If in any case the parties have so dealt with each other, in relation to the subject matter of a contract, that the object of one party is defeated, while the other party is at liberty to do, as he pleases, in relation to that very object; or if, in fact, the character and condition of the property, to which the contract is attached, have been so altered, that the terms and restrictions of it are no longer applicable to the existing state of things; in such cases Courts of Equity will not grant any relief; but will leave the parties to their remedy at law.<sup>2</sup>

§ 750. a. Upon grounds still stronger, Courts of Equity will not proceed to decree a specific performance, where the contract is founded in fraud, imposi-

§ 751. Where, indeed, a contract respecting real property is in its nature and circumstances unobjectionable, it is as much a matter of course for Courts of Equity to decree a specific performance of it, as it is for a Court of Law to give damages for the breach of it.<sup>3</sup> And, generally, it may be stated, that Courts of [*54] Equity will *decree a specific performance, where the contract is in writing, is certain, is fair in all its parts, is for an adequate consideration,<sup>4</sup> and is capable of being performed;<sup>5</sup> but not otherwise. The form of the instrument, by which the contract appears, is wholly unimportant. Thus, if the contract appears only in the condition of a bond, secured by a penalty, the court will act upon it as an agreement, and will not suffer the party to escape from a specific performance by offering to pay the penalty.<sup>6</sup> On the other hand if Courts of Equity refuse to interfere, they inflict no injury upon the plaintiff; for no decision is made, which affects his right to proceed at law for any redress by way of damages, to which he may be entitled. The whole effect of the dismissal of his suit is, that he is barred of any equitable relief.

§ 752. With these explanations in view, let us now proceed to examine, in the first place, in what cases a specific performance will be decreed of contracts respecting lands, where they are within the provisions of the statute of frauds and perjuries.<sup>1</sup> That statute,<sup>2</sup> which has been generally reenacted or adopted in America, declares, "That all interests in lands, tenements, and hereditaments, except leases for three years, not put in writing *and signed by the parties, or their agents [*55] authorized by writing, shall not have, nor be deemed in Law or Equity to have, any greater force or effect than leases on estates at will." It farther enacts, "That no action shall be brought, whereby to charge any person upon any agreement made upon consideration of marriage, or upon any contract or sale of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any interest in or concerning the same, or upon any agreement, that is not to be performed within the space of one year from the making thereof, unless the agreement, upon which such action shall be brought, or some memorandum or note thereof, shall be in writing, and signed by the party or his lawful agent." By the same statute declarations of trust, created by the parties, are to be in writing ; but trusts resulting by implica-

(Lect. 57), p. 420, &c. to p. 443; of Sir Edward Sugden's learned Treatise on Vendors and Purchasers, ch. 4, § 2, p. 99 to 120 (7th edit.) of Mr. Newland on Contracts, ch. 10, and of the notes of Mr. Fonblanque, (1 Fonbl. tion of law are to remain, as they stood before the passing of the act.<sup>1</sup>

§ 753. The objects of this statute are such, as the very title indicates, to prevent the fraudulent setting up of pretended agreements, and then supporting them by perjury. But, besides these direct objects, there is a manifest policy in requiring all contracts of an important nature to be reduced to writing, since otherwise, from the imperfection of memory, and the honest mistakes of witnesses, it must often happen, either that the specific contract is incapable of exact proof, or that it is unintentionally varied from its precise original terms. So sensible were Courts of Equity of these mischiefs, that they constantly refused, before the statute, to decree a specific performance of parol contracts, unless confessed by [56*] *the party in his answer, or in part performed.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup> See Rondeau v. Wyatt, 2 H. Bl. 68; Child v. Comber, 3 Swanst. R. 424, note; Pembroke v. Thorpe, 3 Swanst. R. 437, note.—Sir Edward Sugden, in his learned Treatise on Vendors and Purchasers, ch. 4, § 2, p. 107, 108 (7th edit.) has reviewed the cases, and stated the result. I shall give it in his own words. “There are four cases in Tothill, which arose previously to the statute of frauds, and appear to be applicable to the point under consideration; for Equity, even before the statute of frauds, would not execute a mere parol agreement, not in part performed. In the first case, (Williams v. Nevill, Tothill, 135) which was heard in the 38th of Eliz., relief was denied, ‘because it was but a preparation for an action upon the case.’ In the two next cases, (Ferne v. Bullosk, Toth. 206, 228; Clark v. Hackwell, ibid.) which came on in the 9th of Jac. I., parol agreements were enforced, apparently on account of the payment of very trifling parts of the purchase-money; but the particular circumstances of these cases do not appear. The last case, reported in Tothill, (Miller v. Blandist, Toth. 85) was decided in the 30th of Jac. I., and the facts are distinctly stated. The bill was to be relieved concerning a promise to assure land of inheritance, of which there had not been any execution, but only 55s. paid in hand, and the bill was dismissed. This point received a similar determination in the next case on the subject before the statute, which is reported in 1 Chan. Rep., and was determined in the 15th

§ 754. It is obvious, that Courts of Equity are bound, as much as Courts of Law, by the provisions of this statute; and, therefore, they are not at liberty to disregard them. That they do, however, interfere in some cases within the reach of the statute, is equally certain. But they do so, not upon any notion of any right to dispense with it; but for the purpose of administering equities subservient to its true objects, or collateral to it, and independent of it.

§ 755. In the first place, then, Courts of Equity will enforce a specific performance of a contract within the statute, not in writing, where it is fully set forth in the bill, and is confessed by the answer of the defendant.<sup>1</sup> The reason, given for this decision, is, that the statute is designed to guard of Cha. II.; (Simmons v. Cornelius, 1 Chan. Rep. 128.) So the same doctrine was adhered to in a case, which occurred three years afterwards, and is reported in Freeman (Anon. 2 Freem. R. 128); for although a parol agreement for a house, with 20s. paid, was decreed without further execution proved; yet it appears by the judgment, that the relief would not have been granted, if the defendant, the vendor, had demurred to the bill, which he had neglected to do, but had proceeded to proof. The last case, I have met with previously to the statute, was decided in the 21st of Car. II., (Voll v. Smith, 3 Chan. R. 16), and there a parol agreement, upon which only 20s. were paid, was carried into specific execution. This case probably turned, like the one immediately preceding it, on the neglect of the defendants to demur to the bill. It must be admitted, that the foregoing decisions are not easily reconcilable; yet the result of them clearly is, that payment of a trifling part of the purchase-money was not a part performance of a parol agreement. Whether payment of a considerable sum would have availed a purchaser, does not appear. In Toth. 67, a case is thus stated: ‘Moyl v. Horne, by reason 200*l.* was deposited towards payment, decreed.’ This case may, perhaps, be deemed an authority, that, prior to the statute, the payment of a substantial part of the purchase-money would have enabled Equity to specifically perform a parol agreement; but it certainly is too vague to be relied on.” Id. p. 120.

against fraud and perjury; and in such a case, there can be no danger of that sort. The case, then, is taken entirely out of the mischief intended to be guarded against by the statute.<sup>1</sup> Perhaps another reason might fairly be added; and that is, that the agreement, though originally by parol, is now in part evidenced by writing under the signature of the party, which is a complete compliance with the terms of the statute. If such an agreement were originally by parol, [*58] *but was afterwards reduced to writing by the parties, no one would doubt its obligatory force.<sup>2</sup> Indeed, if the defendant does not insist on the de-

<sup>2</sup> Lord Bathurst, however, in Eyre v. Popham, (Lofft's Rep. 808, 809), held, that a parol agreement, not in part performed, could not be carried into execution, although confessed by the answer, saying, that the Court could not repeal the statute of frauds. See Sugden on Vendors, ch. 4, § 2, p. 99 (7th edit.) Lord Rosslyn, in Rondeau v. Wyatt (2 H. Bl. 68), speaking on the subject of the cases of parol agreements, confessed by the answer of the defendant, said; "It is said in these cases, and has been adopted in the argument, that when the defendant confesses the agreement, there is no danger of perjury, which was the only thing the statute intended to prevent. But this seems to be very bad reasoning; for the calling upon a party to answer a parol agreement certainly lays him under a great temptation to commit perjury. But, though the preventing perjury was one, it was not the sole object of the statute. Another object was to lay down a clear and positive rule, to determine, when the contract of sale should be complete." This last reason has great force; but it is questionable, if the statute had in view so much the prevention of perjury in the party defendant, as the prevention of it in witnesses. There is always some temptation in the defendant to commit perjury in his answer in all cases, where his interest is concerned; nevertheless, he is required generally to answer, on oath, all facts charged in the bill. Mr. Fonblanque's note on this subject is very able and satisfactory. 1 Fonbl. Eq. B. 1, ch. 3, § 8, note d.

§ 756. The case, which we have now been considering, is that of a parol agreement, confessed by the answer, where the answer does not insist upon the statute of frauds as a defence. But, suppose the answer confesses the parol agreement, and insists upon the statute of frauds as a defence and bar to the suit; the question then arises, whether Courts of Equity will allow the statute, under such circumstances, as a bar; or, whether they will, notwithstanding the statute, *decree a specific performance upon the ground [*59] of the confession. Upon this question, there has been no small conflict of judicial opinion. Lord Macclesfield expressly decreed a specific performance, where the parol agreement was confessed by the answer, and the statute of frauds was insisted on as a defence.<sup>2</sup> Lord Hardwicke appears to have entertained the same opinion; although, perhaps, he was not called upon finally to adjudicate it.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>3</sup> Cottington v. Fletcher, 2 Atk. 155, 156; Lacon v. Mertins, 3 Atk. 3.—It is not quite certain, that this was Lord Hardwicke's opinion. The case of Cottington v. Fletcher (2 Atk. R. 156) might perhaps have turned upon a point of pleading. But the dictum in Lacon v. Mertins, 3 Atk. 3, seems direct. Lord Loughborough, in Moore v. Edwards (4 Ves. 24), said; "There is a case in Atkyns, that misleads people, where Lord Hardwicke is stated to have overruled the defence upon the statute, merely on the ground, that the agreement was admitted. I had occasion to look into that; and it is a complete misstatement. It appears by Lord Hardwicke's own notes, that it was upon the agreement having been in part executed, that he determined the case." See also Sugden on Vendors, ch. 4, § 2, p. 100 (7th edit.); Evans v. Harris, 2 V. & Beam. R. 361; Morrison v. Turnour, 18 Ves. 175; Mitf. Pl. Eq. by Jeremy, 265 to 268.

§ 757. But later Judges in Equity have expressed a strong dissatisfaction with this opinion; and it may now be deemed to be entirely overruled, and the doctrine firmly established, that even where the answer confesses the parol agreement, if it insists, by way of defence, upon the protection of the statute, the defence [*60] must prevail as a competent bar.<sup>1</sup> This *doctrine seems conformable to the true intent and objects of the statute; for it is difficult to perceive, how a party can be legally bound by a contract, which the statute declares to be invalid, when the party insists upon the objection, and does not submit to waive it. It has been forcibly said by a great Judge in Equity, that it is immaterial, what admissions are made by a defendant, who insists upon the benefit of the statute; for he throws it upon the plaintiff to show a complete written agreement; and it can be no more thrown upon the defendant to supply defects in the agreement, than to supply the want of an agreement.<sup>2</sup> The same doctrine seems now fully recognised in America.<sup>3</sup>

Ivison, and Stewart v. Careless, in 1785 (cited 2 Bro. Ch. R. 563, 564), and Walters v. Morgan, 2 Cox, R. 369, decided the point directly in favor of the bar of the statute under such circumstances. That also appears to have been the opinion of Lord Thurlow. Whitbread v. Brockhurst, 1 Bro. Ch. R. 416, and Mr. Belt's note; and Whitchurch v. Bevis, 2 Bro. Ch. R. 559, 568, 569. Lord Rosslyn held the same opinion. Rondeau v. Wyatt, 2 H. Bl. 68; Moore v. Edwards, 4 Ves. 23; Cooth v. Jackson, 6 Ves. 17. So Lord Eldon, in Cooth v. Jackson, 6 Ves. 37, and Rowe v. § 758. It follows from what has been already said, that, if the answer denies the existence of any parol contract, and insists upon the benefit of the statute, the case cannot be made out by parol evidence ; and that the bar is complete. This would seem to be sufficiently clear upon principle. But, the question having been at one time made, it is no longer a matter of mere principle ; but it stands confirmed by the highest authority.<sup>1</sup> A *question, however, of a different [*61] sort, but connected with this subject, has also been much discussed ; and that is, whether, to a bill for discovery and relief upon the ground of a parol agreement, the statute can be pleaded as a bar to the discovery of the fact of such agreement ; or, in other words, whether the plea must not state, not only, that there was no agreement in writing ; but also, that there was no such agreement by parol, as is charged in the bill. Upon this point some diversity of judicial opinion has also existed, and perhaps it is not now quite put at rest. But, as this is rather a matter of pleading, than of jurisdiction, it properly belongs to another place.<sup>2</sup>

See also note to 3 Ves. jr. R. 38 (Amer. edit.)—Mr. Fonblanque's note upon this point, (1 Fonbl. Eq. B. 1, ch. 3, § 8, note (d)), as well as upon the preceding is so valuable, that, though long, it deserves to be cited at large in this place. "If a defendant," (says he,) "confess the agreement charged in the bill, there is certainly no danger of fraud or perjury in decreeing the performance of such agreement. But it is of considerable importance to determine, whether the defendant be bound to confess or deny a merely parol agreement, not alleged to be in any part executed; or, if he do confess it, whether he may not insist on the statute, in bar of the performance of it. The cases upon the first point are many in number, various in their circumstances, and the decisions upon them not immediately reconcilable. I shall, therefore, consider them in their principle rather than in detail. They, who insist, that the defendant is bound to confess or deny the agreement alleged, principally rely on the rule of Equity, that the defendant is bound to confess or deny all facts, which, if confessed, would give the plaintiff a claim or title to the relief prayed; and that as Equity would decree a parol agreement, if confessed, the defendant must confess or deny it. It is certainly a general rule in Equity, that the defendant shall discover, whatever is material to the justice of the plaintiff's case; but in applying this rule to the case of a parol agreement, it is previously material to ascertain, whether the statute of frauds has not in such case relieved the defendant from this general obligation. The prevention of frauds and perjuries is the declared object of the statute; and the decreeing of a parol agreement, when confessed by the defendant, and the statute not insisted on, is evidently consistent with such object; Nam quisque renuntiare potest juri pro se introducto. But if the defendant be bound to confess or deny the parol agreement, his answer must be either liable to contradiction, or not liable to contradiction. If the defendant's answer be liable to contradiction by evidence aliunde, the evil arising from contradictory evidence, which the statute proposed to guard against, would necessarily result. If the defendant's answer be not liable to contradiction by evidence aliunde, the rule would furnish a temptation to perjury, by giving the defendant a certain interest in denying the agreement; since, if he confessed it, he would be bound to perform it. If the defendant be bound to confess or deny the parol agreement insisted on by the plaintiff, one of the above consequences must necessarily ensue; which of the two is likely to prove the most mischievous, were, perhaps, difficult to decide; for though the perjury, which might take place, if contradictory evidence were allowed, is an evil of considerable size; yet the defendant's being liable to be contradicted, might operate as a check on his falsely denying that, which was truly alleged. It seems, however, to have been the opinion of Lord Chancellor Thurlow, that the only effect of the statute is to preclude the plaintiff from resorting to evidence aliunde, for the purpose of substantiating a parol agreement denied by the defendant. Whitchurch v. Bevis, 2 Bro. R. 566, See also Child v. Godolphin (Dick. R. 39), therein cited by Lord Chancellor Thurlow. Cooth v. Jackson, 6 Ves. 39. This rule, which, when the agreement is in no part performed, renders the defendant's answer conclusive, may certainly, in some instances, prevent fraud; but it is possible, that, in other instances, it may encourage perjury. To strike out the mean, by which the spirit of the statute might be preserved, without trenching on its provisions, is certainly difficult, perhaps impossible; for it is clear, that the statute intended to prevent fraud, as well as perjury; and it cannot be denied, that the refusing to execute an agreement, deliberately and fairly entered into, merely because it was not reduced into writing, is a fraud, which a court of conscience ought to discourage, but which it cannot discourage, if of such an agreement it cannot enforce a discovery. It would ill become me to pursue this point further; the difficulties, which I have stated, are probably sufficient to explain and justify the contrariety of opinion, which has prevailed upon it. It remains, however, to consider, whether a defendant, having confessed the agreement alleged, can protect himself from the performance of it, by insisting on the statute? This, which is also vexata quæstio, is almost immediately dependent on the former point; for when Lord Macclesfield, in Child v. Godolphin, held, that the defendant was bound to confess or deny the agreement, it seems to have been a necessary consequence, that, if the defendant confessed the agreement, he should not be allowed to avail himself of the statute; for if he might avail himself of the statute, cui bono compel him to confess or deny the agreement? See Cottington v. Fletcher, 2 Atk. 155; Lacon v. Mertins, 3 Atk. 1. But see Kingsman v. Kingsman, cited in 10 Mod. 404. But if the defendant be not bound to confess or deny the agreement, it must be in respect of the statute affording him a good defence against the performance of it; and if such be the effect of the statute, it should seem to be immaterial, whether he set up such defence in the shape of a plea, or by his answer, the statute not having prescribed any mode in particular, by which a defendant must avail himself of such defence. See Stewart v. Careless, cited in Whitchurch v. Bevis. It may be material here to observe, that even the cases, which most favor the opinion, that Courts of Equity may compel the performance, and consequently, the discovery of merely parol agreements, require, that the terms of such agreement should be clear, definite, and conclusive; and therefore, if the courts can collect the jus deliberandi, or locus pœnitentiæ, to have been reserved, the contract shall not be considered as complete till reduced into writing, or in part performed. Whaley v. Bagenal, 6 Bro. P. C. 45; Whitchurch v. Bevis, 2 Bro. R. 566; Clarke v. Grant, 14 Ves. 519; Mortlock v. Buller, 10 Ves. 311."

upon which Courts of Equity interfere in cases of this sort, is, that otherwise one party would be enabled to practise a fraud upon the other; and it could never be the intention of the statute to enable any party to commit such a fraud with impunity. Indeed, fraud in all cases constitutes an answer to the [*64] most solemn acts and conveyances; and *the objects of the statute are promoted, instead of being obstructed, by such a jurisdiction for discovery and relief.<sup>1</sup> And where one party has executed his part of the agreement in the confidence, that the other party would do the same, it is obvious, that if the latter should refuse, it would be a fraud upon the former to suffer this refusal to work to his prejudice.<sup>2</sup>

§ 760. But the more difficult question is to ascertain, what, in the sense of Courts of Equity, is to be deemed a part performance, so as to extract the case from the reach of the statute. It seems formerly to have been thought, that a deposit, or security, or payment of the purchase money, or of a part of it, or at least of a considerable part of it, was such a part performance, as took the case out of the statute.<sup>3</sup> But that doctrine was open to much con-

Mr. Sugden has collected all the authorities in an able manner, with a very clear commentary, in his Treatiſe on Vendors, ch. 3, § 3, p. 107 to 112 (7th edit.), and holds the ſame opinion. Mr. Newland manifeſtly inclines to the ſame opinion. Newland on Contr. ch. 10, p. 187 to 191. There are alſo other modern caſes, in which the contrary doctrine has been treated as doubtful. <sup>2</sup> Mr. Sugden has made ſome ſtriking remarks on this ſubject, in his Treatiſe on Vendors, ch. 3, § 3, p. 112 (7th edit.), which deſerve to be cited. “On this ſubject,” (ſays he,) “Sir William Grant’s admirable judgment, in Butcher v. Butcher, muſt occur to every diſcerning mind. It turns on a ſubject ſo applicable to the preſent, that his arguments, with a ſlight alteration, directly bear upon upon it. To ſay that a conſiderable ſhare of the purchaſe-money muſt be given, is rather to raiſe a queſtion, than to eſtabliſh a rule. What is a conſiderable ſhare, and what is a trifling ſum? Is it to be judged of upon a mere ſtatement of the ſum paid, without reference to the amount of the purchaſe-money? If ſo, what is the ſum, that muſt be given to call for the interference of the Court? What is the limit of amount at which it ceases to be trifling, and begins to be ſubſtantial? If it is to be conſidered with reference to the amount of the purchaſe-money, what is the proportion, which ought not now deemed a part performance, sufficient to take a case out of the statute, is, that the money can be recovered back again at law ; and therefore, the case admits of full and direct compensation.<sup>1</sup> This ground is not, however, quite satisfactory ; for the party may become insolvent, before the judgment at law can be executed. Another ground has been stated, which certainly has more strength in it. It is, that the statute has said, in another clause, (that, which respects contracts for goods,) that part payment, by way of earnest, shall operate as a part performance. And hence the Courts have considered this clause, as excluding agreements for lands ; because it is to be inferred, that when the Legislature said, it should bind in the case of goods, and were silent as to the case of lands, they meant, that it should not bind in the case of lands.<sup>2</sup>

§ 761. But a more general ground, and that, which ought to be the governing rule in cases of this sort, is, that nothing is to be considered as a part performance, which does not put the party into a situation, which is a fraud upon him, unless the agreement is fully performed.<sup>3</sup> Thus, for instance, if upon a parol agreement a man is admitted into possession, he is made a trespasser, and is liable to answer, as a trespasser, if there be no

to be paid ? Mr. Booth also was impressed with this difficulty, although his sentiments are not so forcibly expressed. Where, he asks, will you strike the line ? And who shall settle the quantum, that shall suffice in payment of part of any purchase-money, to draw the case out of the statute ; or ascertain, what shall be deemed so trifling, as to leave the case within it ?”

agreement valid in Law or Equity. Now, for the purpose of defending himself against a charge, as a trespasser, and a suit to account for the profits in such a case, the evidence of a *parol agreement would [* 67] seem to be admissible for his protection ; and if admissible for such a purpose, there seems no reason, why it should not be admissible throughout.<sup>1</sup> A case still more cogent might be put, where a vendee, upon a parol agreement for a sale of land, should proceed to build a house on the land, in the confidence of a due completion of the contract. In such a case, there would be a manifest fraud upon the party, in permitting the vendor to escape from a due and strict fulfilment of such agreement.<sup>2</sup> Such a case is certainly distinguishable from that of part payment of the purchase-money ; for the latter may be repaid, and the parties are then just where they were before, especially if the money is repaid with interest. A man, who has parted with his money, is not in the situation of a man, against whom an action may be brought, and who may otherwise suffer an irreparable injury.<sup>3</sup>

§ 762. In order to make the acts such, as a Court of Equity will deem part performance of an agreement within the statute, it is essential, that they should clearly appear to be done solely with a view to the agreement being performed. For, if they are acts, which might have been done with other views, they will not take the case out of the statute, since they cannot properly be said to be due by way of part performance of the agreement.<sup>4</sup> On this account acts, merely introductory or ancillary to an agreement, are not considered as a part performance thereof, although they should be attended with expense. Therefore, delivering an abstract of title, giving directions for conveyances, going to view the estate, fixing upon an appraiser to value stock, making valuations, admeasuring the lands, registering conveyances, and acts of the like nature, are not sufficient to take a case out of the statute. They are all preliminary proceedings; and are, besides, of an equivocal character, and capable of a double interpretation; whereas acts, to be deemed a part performance, should be so clear, certain, and definite in their object and design, as to refer exclusively to a complete and perfect agreement, of which they are a part execution.<sup>1</sup>

§ 763. In like manner mere possession of the land contracted for, will not be deemed a part performance, if it be obtained wrongfully by the vendee, or if it be wholly independent of the contract. Thus, if the vendee enter into possession, not under the contract, but in violation of it, as a trespasser, the case is not taken out of the statute. So, if the vendee be a tenant in possession under the vendor; for his possession is properly referrible to his tenancy, and not to the contract.<sup>2</sup> But, if the possession be delivered and obtained solely under the contract; or if, in case of a tenancy, the nature of the holding be different from the original tenancy, as by the payment of a higher rent, or by other unequivocal circumstances, referrible solely and exclusively to the contract; there, the possession may take the case out of the statute. Especially will it be held to do so, where the party, let into possession, has expended money in building, or repairs, or other improvements; for, under such circumstances, if the parol contract were to be deemed a nullity, he would be liable to be treated as a trespasser; and the expenditures would not only operate to his prejudice, but be the direct result of a fraud practised upon him.<sup>1</sup>

§ 764. But, in order to take a case out of the statute, upon the ground of part performance of a parol contract, it is not only indispensable, that the acts done should be clear and definite, and referrible exclusively to the contract; but the contract should also be established by competent proofs to be clear, definite, and unequivocal in all its terms. If the terms are uncertain, or ambiguous, or not made out by satisfactory proofs, a specific performance will not (as indeed upon principle it should not) be decreed. The reason would seem obvious enough; for a Court of Equity ought not to act upon conjectures; and one of the most important objects of the statute was, to prevent the introduction of loose and indeterminate proofs of what ought to be established by solemn written contracts. Yet it is certain, that, in former times, very able judges felt themselves at liberty to depart from such a reasonable course of adjudication, and granted relief, notwithstanding the uncertainty of the terms of the contract. In other words, the Court framed a contract for the parties ex æquo et bono, where it found none.<sup>1</sup> Such a latitude of jurisdiction seems unwarrantable upon any sound principle; and, accordingly, it has been expressly renounced in more recent times.<sup>2</sup> It may, perhaps, be true, that in such cases of part performance the Court will not be deterred from making an inquiry before a master into the terms of the contract by the mere fact, that all the terms are not sufficiently before the Court to enable it to make a final decree.<sup>3</sup> But § 765. It must be admitted, that the exceptions, thus allowed, do greatly trench upon the policy and objects of the statute of frauds ; and, perhaps, there might have been as much wisdom originally in leaving the statute to its full operation, without any attempt to create exceptions, even in cases where the statute would enable the party to protect himself from a performance of his contract through a meditated fraud. For, even admitting that such cases might occur, they would become more and more rare, as the statute became better understood ; and a partial evil ought not to be permitted to control a general convenience. And, indeed, it is far from being certain, whether these very exceptions do not assist parties in fraudulent contrivances, and increase the temptations to perjury, as often as they do assist them in the promotion of good faith and the furtherance of justice. These exceptions have also led to great embarrassments in the actual administration of Equity ; and although

<sup>1</sup> See 1 Fonbl. Eq. B. 1, ch. 3, § 8, note (c).—Mr. Fonblanque's able note on this subject is full of important instruction on this head. I know not, where the objections are so thoroughly sifted. "To allow a statute," says he, "having the prevention of frauds for its object, to be interposed in bar of the performance of a parol agreement, in part performed, were evidently to encourage one of the mischiefs, which the legislature intended to prevent. It is therefore an established rule, that a parol agreement, in part performed, is not within the provisions of the statute. See Whitchurch v. Bevis, 2 Bro. Ch. R. 566. This exception, however, leads to considerable difficulties. Part performance is clearly a relative term; and in stating acts of part performance, the plaintiff must necessarily state the agreement, to which he refers. The defendant, by the above rule, seems bound to consider the case stated as out of the statute. Supposing him, however, to deny the acts alleged to have been done in part performance, would he be bound to admit or deny the parol agreement referred to? Or, admitting such acts to have been done, supposing him to deny the agreement, or the terms of the agreement, to which acts are referred in part performance, would the plaintiff, in the latter case, be at liberty to resort to evidence aliunde, in order to substantiate such parol agreement? In the first case, I conceive, that the plaintiff would be entitled to go into evidence, to show, that the acts alleged were actually done; and if he succeeded in this particular, it seems to follow, as a necessary consequence, that he might prove the agreement, to which such acts referred. But, suppose the plaintiff not to be able to prove the agreement, the terms of it being confined to his and the defendant's knowledge, would he be entitled to a discovery from the defendant? If the defendant be bound to discover such agreement, merely because the plaintiff had alleged it to have been in part performed, the plaintiff might, by alleging what was false, be placed in a better situation, than he would have been in, if he had stated the truth. But it would be difficult, in a court of conscience, to maintain, that falsehood can entitle to such an advantage. For the purpose of investigating the point, I will, however, assume, agreeably to the decision in the Earl of Aylesford's Case, 2 Stra. 783, and the opinion of Lord Thurlow, in Whitchurch v. Bevis, that the defendant is bound to discover, whether he entered into such parol agreement or not. Suppose the defendant to have confessed the agreement, denying, however, the acts alleged in part performance of it where the plaintiff alleges part performance, it is assumed, that defendant cannot plead the statute; and when the statute cannot be pleaded, it should seem, that it cannot be insisted upon by the answer. But where the statute is not insisted on, it seems admitted, that a parol agreement confessed shall be decreed to be performed. It would follow, in the above supposed case, that the plaintiff would be relieved from the necessity of proving the acts alleged in part performance; for cui bono put him upon proving the part performance of an agreement confessed, the admission of the agreement being alone a sufficient circumstance to entitle him to a decree. This advantage might encourage the plaintiff untruly to allege a part performance. But I know no mean, by which the objection can be obviated; for if the agreement be in part performed, it is but reasonable, that it should be completed, and to that the defendant's discovery may be material; and whether it was or was not in part performed, is a point, which clearly the defendant may establish by evidence aliunde. I have adverted to another difficulty, which may arise from the rule, that an agreement in part performed, is not within the statute of frauds. The case, I stated, supposes the defendant to admit certain acts to have been done; but denies, that they were done in part performance of any agreement; or insists, that the terms of the agreement, of which they were done in part performance, were not such as stated in the bill. But see Moore v. Edwards, 4 Ves. 22; Cooth v. Jackson, 6 Ves. 37, in which the above reasoning is very fully considered. There are various acts, which are considered to amount to a part performance of a parol agreement, and some of them are of a nature, which necessarily imply some agreement; as, where a man is let into possession the possession must be referred to some title. But to what can it, unless to the agreement of one having right to confer a title? In such a case, it might be consistent with the provisions of the statute to allow evidence to explain the agreement, which led to the possession though the defendant denied, that there was any agreement upon the subject. But if the act alleged in part performance be of a more doubtful nature, as retaining possession after the expiration of a lease; in such case, if the defendant denied having agreed to grant a new lease, or to grant it on the terms alleged, it seems very difficult to determine, whether the plaintiff ought or ought not, in respect of the admission of the acts alleged, to be allowed to prove a parol agreement by evidence aliunde. See Mortimer v. Orchard, 2 Ves. jr. 243. This note is already drawn out to a greater length, than I intended; and as the difficulties, which I feel may have been judicially

the exceptions of cases from the statute of frauds farther, than they were compelled to do by former decisions.<sup>1</sup> Lord Redesdale has strongly said ; “The statute was made for the purpose of preventing perjuries and frauds; and nothing can be more manifest to any person, who has been in the habit of practising in Courts of Equity, than that the relaxation of that statute has been a ground of much perjury and much fraud. If the statute had been rigorously observed, the result would probably have [* 75] *been, that few instances of parol agreements would have occurred. Agreements would, from the necessity of the case, have been reduced to writing. Whereas, it is manifest, that the decisions on the subject have opened a new door to fraud ; and that, removed by the late decisions of the court, I shall close it with a few distinctions upon the questions, what acts amount to a part performance. The general rule is, that the acts must be such as could be done with no other view or design, than to perform the agreement, and not such as are merely introductory or ancillary to it. Gunter v. Halsey, Amb. 586; Whitbread v. Brockhurst, 1 Bro. R. 412. See Wills v. Stradling, 3 Ves. jr. 379; Pym v. Blackburn, 3 Ves. jr. 34. The giving of possession is therefore to be considered as an act of part performance. Stewart v. Denton MSS. 4th July, 1786. But giving directions for conveyances, and going to view the estate, are not. Clerk v. Wright, 1 Atk. 12; Whaley v. Bagenal, 6 Bro. P. C. 45. (See Givens v. Calder, 2 Desaus. Ch. R. 171.) Payment of money is also said to be an act of part performance. Lacon v. Mertons, 3 Atk. 4; sed qu. But it is said, that payment of money is not a part performance. See Clinan v. Cooke, 1 Sch. & Lefr. R. 40; Frame v. Dawson, 14 Ves. 388. Qy. whether it means payment of the whole, or only a part of the purchase-money? See also O'Reilly v. Thompson, 2 Cox, R. 272. under pretence of part execution, if possession is had in any way whatsoever, many are frequently found to put a Court of Equity in such a situation, that, without departing from its rules, it feels itself obliged to break through the statute. And I remember, it was mentioned in one case, in argument, as a common expression at the bar, that it had become a practice to improve gentlemen of their estates. It is, therefore, absolutely necessary for Courts of Equity to make a stand, and not to carry the decisions further.”<sup>1</sup>

* § 767. We have already had occasion to see, [* 76] that parol agreements, even with part performance, will not be decreed to be specifically executed, unless the whole terms of the contract are clear and definitely ascertained.<sup>2</sup> The same rule applies to cases of written contracts.<sup>3</sup> If they are not certain in themselves, so as to enable the Court to arrive at the clear

Hale*, 3 Ves. 712, 713, are striking. “I admit,” said he, “my opinion is, that the Court has gone rather too far in permitting part performance and other circumstances to take cases out of the statute, and then, unavoidably perhaps, after establishing the agreement, to admit parol evidence of the contents of that agreement. As to part performance, it might be evidence of some agreement; but of what, must be left to parol evidence. I always thought, the Court went a great way. They ought not to have held it evidence of an unknown agreement, but to have had the money laid out repaid. It ought to have been a compensation. Those cases are very dissatisfactory. It was very right to say, the statute should not be an engine of fraud; therefore, compensation would have been very proper. They have, however, gone farther; saying, it was clear, there was some agreement, and letting them prove it. But, how does the circumstance of a man having laid out a great deal of money prove, that he is to have a lease for 99 years? The common sense of the thing would have been, to have let them bring an action for the money. I should pause upon such a case.”

result of what all the terms are, they will not be specifically enforced. In the first place, it would be inequitable to carry a contract into effect, where the Court is left to ascertain the intentions of the parties by mere conjecture or guess; for it might be guilty of the error of decreeing precisely what the parties never did intend or contemplate.<sup>1</sup> In the next place, if any terms are to be supplied, it must be by parol evidence; and the admission of such evidence would let in all the mischiefs intended to be guarded against by the statute. Indeed, it would be inconsistent with the general principles of evidence (although there are exceptions),<sup>2</sup> which are administered in Courts of Equity as well as in Courts of Law; for the general rule in both Courts [*77] is, that parol evidence is not *admissible to vary, annul, or explain a written contract.<sup>3</sup> A contract cannot rest partly in writing and partly in parol. The writing is the highest evidence, and does away the necessity and effect of the parol evidence, if it is contradictory to it.<sup>1</sup>

§ 768. Another exception to the statute, turning upon similar considerations, is, where the agreement is intended by the parties to be reduced to writing according to the statute; but it is prevented from being so by the fraud of one of the parties.<sup>2</sup> In such a case, Courts of Equity have said, that the agreement shall be specifically executed; for otherwise, the statute, designed to suppress fraud, would be the greatest protection to it.<sup>3</sup> Thus, if one agreement in writing should be proposed and drawn, and another fraudulently and secretly brought in and executed in lieu of the former, in this and the like cases, Equity would relieve.<sup>4</sup> So, if instructions are given by an intended husband to prepare a marriage settlement, and he promises to have the settlement reduced to writing, and then fraudulently and secretly prevents it from being done; and the marriage takes effect, *in conse- [* 78] quence of false assurances and contrivances, a specific performance will be decreed. But, if there has been no fraud, and no agreement to reduce the settlement to writing; but the other party has placed reliance solely upon the honor, word, or promise of the husband, no relief will be granted;<sup>5</sup> for, in such a case, the party chooses to rest upon a parol agreement, and must take the consequences.<sup>1</sup> So, if a man should treat for a loan of money on mortgage, and the conveyance is to be by an absolute deed of the mortgagor, and a defeasance by the mortgagee ; and, after the absolute deed is executed, the mortgagee fraudulently refuses to execute the defeasance, Equity will decree a specific performance.<sup>2</sup> So, where a father had purchased lands in fee, and on his death-bed told his eldest son, that the lands, were purchased with his second son's money, and that he intended to give them to him ; and the eldest son promised, that he should enjoy them accordingly ; and the father died ; and the eldest son refused to comply with his promise ; it was held, that the promise should be specifically performed, [* 79] upon the ground of fraud, notwithstanding *the objection, that there ought to have been a declaration of the use or trust under the statute.<sup>3</sup> Other cases of a like character have occurred under the head of fraud ; and similar considerations may apply in cases of accident and mistake, clearly and incontrovertibly made out.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> It has sometimes been attempted to except from the statute cases, where the parties have expressly agreed, that their contract should be reduced to writing. § 769. And, here, it is important to take notice of a distinction between the case of a plaintiff, seeking a specific performance in Equity, and the case of a defendant, resisting such a performance. We have already seen, that the specific execution of a contract in Equity is a matter, not of absolute right in the party, but of sound discretion in the Court. Hence, it requires a much less strength of case on the part of the defendant to resist a bill to perform a contract, than it does on the part of the plaintiff to maintain a bill to enforce a specific performance. An agreement, to be entitled to be carried into specific performance ought, (as we have seen) to be certain, fair, and just in all its parts.<sup>1</sup> Courts of Equity will not decree a specific performance in cases of fraud or mistake; or of hard and unconscionable bargains; or where the decree would produce injustice; or where it would compel the party to an illegal or immoral act; or where it would be against public policy; or where it would involve a breach of trust; or where a performance has become impossible; and, generally, not in any cases, where such a decree would be inequitable under all the circumstances.<sup>2</sup>

* § 770. But Courts of Equity do not stop here; [*80] for they will let in the defendant to defend himself by evidence to resist a decree, where the plaintiff would not always be permitted to establish his case by the like evidence. Thus, for instance, Courts of Equity will allow the defendant to show, that by fraud, accident or mistake, the thing bought is different from what he intended,<sup>1</sup> or that material terms have been omitted in the written agreement; or, that there has been a variation of it by parol; or, that there has been a parol discharge of a written contract.<sup>2</sup> [* 81] *The ground of this doctrine is that, which has been already alluded to, that Courts of Equity ought not to be active in enforcing claims, which are not, under Ante § 750, (a).—The cases on this subject are very numerous, and are commented on with great care by Sir Edward Sugden, in his Treatise on Vendors, ch. 3, § 4, p. 125 to 140, 7th edit. to which the reader is referred. I have cited only a few of the more prominent cases to support the text. Sir Edward Sugden states, that, whether an absolute parol discharge, not followed by any other agreement, upon which the parties have acted, can be set up, even as a defence in equity, is questionable. He gives the result of the authorities, as to a parol variation, as follows. "1. That evidence of it is totally inadmissible at law. 2. That in equity the most unequivocal proof of it will be expected. 3. That, if it be proved to the satisfaction of the Court, and be such a variation, as the Court will act upon; yet it can only be used as a defence to a bill demanding a specific performance, and is inadmissible, as a ground to compel a specific performance; unless, 4. There has been such a part performance of the new parol agreement, as would enable the Court the actual circumstances, just as between the parties. The statute has said, that no person shall be charged with the execution of an agreement, who has not personally or by his agent signed a written agreement. But the statute does not say, that if a written agreement is signed, the same exceptions shall not hold to it, as did before the statute. Now, before the statute, if a bill had been brought for a specific performance, and it had appeared, that the agreement had been prepared contrary to the intentions of the defendant, he might have resisted the performance of it. The statute has made no alteration in this respect in the situation of the defendant. It does not say a written agreement shall bind; but only that an unwritten agreement shall not bind.<sup>1</sup>

§ 771. In general, it may be stated, that to entitle a party to a specific performance, he must show, that he has been in no default in not having performed the agreement, and that he has taken all proper steps towards the performance, on his own part.<sup>2</sup> If he has been guilty of gross laches, or if he applies for relief after a long lapse of time, unexplained by equitable circumstances, his bill will be dismissed; for Courts *of [* 82] Equity do not, any more than Courts of Law, administer to grant its aid in the case of an original independent agreement; and then, in the view of equity, it is tantamount to a written agreement." The case of Omerod v. Hardman, 5 Ves. 722, turned upon a different point. There the object of the parol evidence was not to establish any fraud or mistake of the intention of the parties, but to add a new term to the contract by parol, which was held inadmissible, even as a defence against a specific performance. See also Newland on Contracts, ch. 10, p. 206 to 211.

relief to the gross negligence of suitors.<sup>1</sup> But this doctrine is to be taken, (as we shall presently see,) with some qualifications. For, although Courts of Equity will not encourage laches; yet, if there has not been a strict legal compliance with the terms of the contract, and the non-compliance does not go to the essence of the contract, relief will be granted.<sup>2</sup>

§ 772. It has been laid down, that, if a man has performed a valuable part of an agreement, and is in no default for not performing the residue, there it is but reasonable, that he should have a specific execution of the other part of his contract, or at least should recover back what he has paid, so that he may not be a loser. For, since he entered upon the performance, in contemplation of the equivalent from the other party, there is no reason, why an accidental loss should fall upon him any more than upon the other.<sup>3</sup> A distinction has been put upon this subject by Lord Chief Baron Gilbert, which is entitled to consideration, because it apparently reconciles authorities, which might otherwise seem discordant. It is the distinction between cases, in which the plaintiff is in statu quo, as to all that part of his agreement, which he has performed, and those cases, in which he is not in statu quo. In the former cases Equity will not enforce the agree-

§ 773. Thus, upon a marriage settlement, A. contracted to settle a manor on his wife and the *heirs [*83] of their bodies, and to clear it of incumbrances, and to settle a separate maintenance on her, and likewise to sell some pensions, in order to make a further provision for her and the issue of the marriage ; and his father-in-law agreed to settle £3000 per annum on A. for life, remainder to the wife for life, and so to the issue of the marriage. A. cleared the manor of incumbrances, and settled it accordingly, and settled also the separate maintenance ; but he did not sell the pensions, nor settle the further provisions. The wife died without issue ; and A. brought his bill to have the £3000 settled on him during his life. The Court refused to decree it ; because A. was in statu quo, as to all that part of the agreement, which he had performed, and not having performed the whole, and the other part being now impossible, and no compensation being possible to be adjusted for it, he had no title in Equity to a specific performance, since such performance would not be mutual. But the issue of A., if any, might have been relieved, because they would have been in no default. This case illustrates the first proposition.<sup>2</sup>

§ 774. But, (which is the second case,) if a man has performed so much of the agreement, as that he is not in statu quo, and is in no default for not performing the residue, there, he shall have a specific execution of the agreement from the other party. As, if a man [*84] has contracted for a portion to be received *with the wife, and has agreed to settle lands of a certain value upon the wife and her issue, free of incumbrances ; and he sells part of his lands to disencumber the other lands, and is proceeding to disencumber and settle the rest. In such a case, if the wife should die without issue before the settlement is actually made, yet he shall have the portion, because he cannot be placed in statu quo, having sold part of his lands ; and there was no default in him, since he was going on to perform his contract ; and therefore the accident of the wife's death shall not prejudice him.<sup>1</sup>

§ 775. Where the terms of an agreement have not been strictly complied with, or are incapable of being strictly complied with ; still, if there has not been gross negligence in the party, and it is conscientious, that the agreement should be performed ; and if compensation may be made for any injury occasioned by the noncompliance with the strict terms ; in all such cases Courts of Equity will interfere, and decree a specific performance. For the doctrine of Courts of Equity is, not forfeiture, but compensation ;<sup>2</sup> and nothing but such a decree will, in such cases, do entire justice between the parties.<sup>3</sup> Indeed, in some cases Courts of Equity will decree a specific execution, not according to the letter of the contract, if that will be unconscientious ; but they will modify it according to the change of circumstances.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Ibid.—Ante § 750, a ; Mechanics Bank of Alexandria v. Lynn, 1 Peters R. 376. On this occasion, Mr. Justice Thompson in delivering the opinion of the Court, said : “ But the Court ought not to decree performance according to the letter, when from change of circumstances, mistake, or misapprehension, it would be unconscientious so to do. The Court may so modify the agreement, as to do justice as far as circumstances will permit, and refuse specific execution, unless the party, seeking it, will comply with such modifications, as justice requires.” The remarks of Lord Redesdale on this same point, deserve to be cited at large. “ A Court of Equity,” (said he,) “ frequently decrees specific performance, where the action at law has been lost by the default of the very party seeking the specific performance, if it be, notwithstanding, conscientious, that the agreement should be performed ; as in cases, where the terms of the agreement have not been strictly performed on the part of the person seeking specific performance, and, to sustain an action at law, performance must be averred according to the very terms of the contract. Nothing but specific execution of the contract, so far as it can be executed, will do justice in such a case.” Davis v. Hone, 2 Sch. & Lefr. 347. Again, in Lennon v. Napper, 2 Sch. & Lefr. 684, he said ; “ The Courts, in all cases of contracts for estates in land, have been in the habit of relieving, where the party, from his own neglect, had suffered a lapse of time, and from that, or other circumstances, could not maintain an action to recover damages at law. And even where nothing exists to prevent his suing at law, so many things are necessary to enable him to recover at law, that the formalities alone render it very inconvenient and hazardous so to proceed ; nor could, in many cases, the legal remedy be adequate to the demands of justice. Courts of Equity have, therefore, enforced contracts specifically, where no action for damages could be maintained ; for, at law, the party plaintiff must have strictly performed his part, and the inconvenience of insisting upon that in all cases was sufficient to require the interference of Courts of Equity. They dispense with that, which would make compliance with what the law requires oppressive ; and in various cases of such contracts, they are in the constant habit of relieving the man, who has acted fairly, though negligently. Thus, in the case of an estate sold by auction, there is a condition to forfeit the deposit, if the purchase be not completed within a certain time ; yet the Court is in the constant habit of relieving against the lapse of time. And so in the case of mortgages, and in many instances, relief is given against mere lapse of time, where lapse of time is not essential to the substance of the contract.

§ 776. One of the most frequent occasions, on which Courts of Equity are asked to decree a specific performance of contracts, is, where the terms for the performance and completion of the contract have not, in point of time, been strictly complied with. Time is not generally deemed in Equity to be of the essence of the contract, unless the parties have expressly so treated it, or it necessarily follows from the nature and [*86] *circumstances of the contract.<sup>1</sup> It is true, that

The doctrine was formerly carried to an extravagant extent in favor of relief. But in recent times Courts of Equity have endeavored to restrict it to very moderate limits. See Sugden on Vendors, ch. 8, § 1, p. 359, 360, 361 (7th edit.) Mr. Baron Alderson, in the recent case of Hepwill v. Knight, 1 Younge & Collyer, 415, has put this whole subject in its true light; and I gladly avail myself of the opportunity to quote his remarks. "Now the first question," (said he,) "is, whether time is of the essence of this agreement. After examining with as much attention, as I can, the various cases brought before me during the argument, it seems to me to be the result of them all, that a Court of Equity is to be governed by this principle—It is to examine the contract, not merely as a Court of Law does, to ascertain what the parties have in terms expressed to be the contract, but what is in truth the real intention of the parties, and to carry that into effect. But, in so doing, I should think it prudent, in the first place, to look carefully at what the parties have expressed; because, in general, they must be taken to express what they intend; and the burden ought, in good reason, to be thrown on those, who assert the contrary. In the case of a mortgage, however, which I use rather for the purpose of illustrating the principle, than as at all parallel to the present case, the Court, looking at the real contract, which is a pledge of the estate for a debt, treats the time mentioned in the mortgage deed, as only a formal part of it, and decrees accordingly; taking it to be clear, that the general inten-

Courts of Equity have regard to time, so far, as it respects the good faith and diligence of the parties. But if circumstances of a reasonable nature have disabled the party from a strict compliance; or if he comes, recenti facto, to ask for a specific performance; the suit is treated with indulgence, and generally with favor by the Court.<sup>1</sup> But then, in such cases, it should be clear that the remedies are mutual;<sup>2</sup> that there has been no change of circumstances affecting the character or

tion should override the words of the particular stipulation. So, in the ordinary case of the purchase of an estate, and the fixing a particular day for the completion of the title, the Court seems to have considered, that the general object being only the sale of the estate for a given sum, the particular day named is merely formal; and the stipulation means, in truth, that the purchase shall be completed within a reasonable time, regard being had to all the circumstances of the case, and the nature of the title to be made. But this is but a corollary from the general position, which is, that the real contract, and all the stipulations really intended to be complied with literally, shall be carried into effect. We must take care, however, that we do not mistake the corollary for the original proposition. If, therefore, the thing sold be of greater or less value according to the effluxion of time, it is manifest, that time is of the essence of the contract; and a stipulation, as to time, must then be literally complied with in Equity, as well as in law. The cases of the sale of stock, and of a reversion, are instances of this. So also, if it appear, that the object of one party, known to the other, was, that the property should be conveyed on or before a given period, as the case of a house for residence, or the like. I do not see, therefore, why, if the parties choose even arbitrarily, provided both of them intend so to do, to stipulate for a particular thing to be done at a particular time, such a stipulation is not to be carried literally into effect in a Court of Equity. That is the real contract. The parties had a right to make it. Why then should a Court of Equity interfere to make a new contract, which the parties have not made? It seems to me, therefore, that the conclusion, at which Sir Edward Sugden, in his valuable treatise on this subject has arrived, is founded in law and good sense." See also Coslake v. Till, 1 Russ. R. 376; Doloret v. Rothschild, 1 Sim. & Stu. 590.

justice of the contract;<sup>1</sup> that compensation for the delay can be fully and beneficially given;<sup>2</sup> that he, who asks a specific performance, is in a condition to perform his own part of the contract;<sup>3</sup> and that he has shown himself ready, desirous, prompt, and eager to perform the contract.<sup>4</sup>

§ 777. Courts of Equity will also relieve the party vendor, by decreeing a specific performance, where he has been unable to comply with his contract according to the terms of it, from the state of his title at the time, if he comes within a reasonable time, and the defect is cured.<sup>5</sup> So, if there has been no unnecessary delay, Courts of Equity will sometimes decree a specific performance in favor of the vendor, although he is unable to make a good title at the time, when the bill is brought, if he is in a condition to make such a title at or before the time of the decree.<sup>6</sup> So, if the circumstances of the quality or quantity of land are not correctly described, and the misdescription is not very material, and admits of complete compensation, Courts of Equity will decree a specific performance. There is no doubt, that this jurisdiction had its origin upon the foundation of a legal right, the law giving the title; but a Court of Law, from the contracting for the entirety of an estate, will not be compelled to take an undivided aliquot part of it.<sup>1</sup>

§ 779. We have thus far principally spoken of cases of suits by the vendor against the purchaser for a specific performance, where the contract has not been, or cannot be strictly complied with. But suits may also be brought by the purchaser for a specific performance under similar circumstances, where the vendor is incapable of making a complete title to all the property sold; or where there has been a substantial misdescription of it in important particulars; or where the terms, as to the time and manner of execution, have not been punctually or reasonably complied with on the part of the vendor. In these, and the like cases, modes, in which justice is there administered, not being capable of giving a complete remedy; all the relief to which the party was entitled. This jurisdiction began so long ago as the time of King Henry the 7th; and, though Courts of Equity then proceeded upon that principle, yet the Courts of Law thought proper to resist the jurisdiction. Bromage v. Genning, (1 Roll's Rep. 368,) in the 14th year of King James I. was the plainest case, that can be stated; and the ground taken against the jurisdiction, the most untenable, preposterous, and unjust. This most beneficial jurisdiction was in that instance maintained in equity. When the Courts of Equity had quieted these doubts, and maintained their jurisdiction, they could not confine it to cases of strict legal title; for another principle, equally beneficial, is equally well known and established; that equity does not permit the forms of law to be made instruments of injustice; and will interpose against parties, attempting to avail themselves of the rigid rule of law for unconscientious purposes. Where, therefore, advantage is taken of a circumstance, that does not admit a strict performance of the contract, if the failure is not substantial, equity will interfere. If, for instance, the contract is for a term of 99 years in a farm, and it appears, that the vendor has only 98 or 97 years, he must be nonsuited in an action. But equity will not so deal with him; and if the other party can have the substantial benefit of his contract, that slight difference being of no importance to him, equity will interfere. Thus was introduced the principle of compensation, now so well established; a principle, which I have no disposition to shake." See also Morgan's Heirs v. Morgan, 2 Wheat. R. 290; Hepburn v. Auld, 5 Cranch, 262; Winne v. Reynolds, 6 Paige, R. 407.

as it would be unjust to allow the vendor to take advantage of his own wrong, or default, or misdescription, Courts of Equity allow the purchaser an election to proceed with the purchase pro tanto, or to abandon it altogether. The general rule, (for it is not universal,) in all such cases, is, that the purchaser, if he chooses, is entitled to have the contract specifically performed, as far as the vendor can perform it, and to have an *abatement out of the purchase-money or [*90] compensation for any deficiency in the title, quantity, quality, description, or other matters touching the estate.<sup>1</sup> But if the purchaser should insist upon such a performance, the Court will grant the relief only upon his compliance with equitable terms.<sup>2</sup>

§ 780. Perhaps it may be truly said, that in some of the cases, in which, in former times, the strict terms of the contract, as to time, description, quantity, quality, and other circumstances of the estate sold, were dispensed with, Courts of Equity went beyond the true limits, to which every jurisdiction of this sort should be confined; as it amounted to a substitution pro tanto, of what the parties had not contracted for.<sup>3</sup> But the tendency of the modern decisions is to bring the doctrine within such moderate bounds, as seem clearly indicated by the principles of Equity, and by a reasonable regard to the convenience of mankind, as well as to the common accidents, mistakes, infirmities, and inequalities belonging to all human transactions.<sup>4</sup>

§ 781. We have hitherto been considering cases of contracts respecting lands within the reach of the statute of frauds. But other cases within the reach of other clauses of the statute of frauds have occurred, and may again occur, in which, also, the remedial justice of Courts of Equity ought to be exerted by decreeing a specific performance of the contemplated act or trust. Thus, if a man, in confidence of the [*91] *parol promise of another to perform the intended act, should omit to make certain provisions, gifts, or arrangements for other persons by will or otherwise; such a promise would be specifically enforced in Equity against such promisee; although founded on a parol declaration, creating a trust, contrary to the statute of frauds; for it would be a fraud upon all the other parties to permit him to derive a benefit from his own breach of duty and obligation.<sup>1</sup> Therefore, where a testator by his will gave an annuity to his nephew, and his brother (who was his executor and devisee of his real estate) promised to pay the annuity; otherwise, the testator would have charged it on his lands devised; it was decreed, that the executor should specifically perform it by paying the annuity, although he had fully administered all the personal assets.<sup>2</sup> So, where a testator intended by will to fell timber to raise portions for his younger children; but his eldest son, being by, desired him not to fell the timber, because it would deface the estate, and promised, that he would answer for the value of it to his brothers and sisters, and the testator forbore to cut the timber, and after his death, the eldest son refused to perform his promise; he was held bound by it.<sup>1</sup> So, where a tenant in tail was about to suffer a recovery, in order to provide for his younger children, and was kept by the issue in tail from so doing, by a promise to make such a provision, the issue in tail was decreed to perform the promise.<sup>2</sup> So, where an executor promised the testator to pay a legacy, and told the testator he need not put it into his will; he was decreed specifically *to perform it.<sup>3</sup> So, where a testator [*92] was about altering his will, for fear, that there would not be assets enough to pay all the legacies; and his heir at law persuaded him not to alter it, promising to pay all the legacies; he was decreed specifically to perform his promise.<sup>4</sup>

§ 782. These may suffice as illustrations of the class of cases calling for a specific performance, which are within the purview of the statute of frauds. And we shall now proceed, in the next place, to a brief statement of the other class of cases already referred to, viz., those, where relief is sought under written or parol contracts not within the statute of frauds. Many of these cases have already been incidentally taken notice of under the other heads, and especially under the heads of Accident, Mistake, and Fraud.<sup>5</sup>

§ 783. Illustrations may easily be put of cases where no action whatsoever would lie at law between the parties. Thus, if A. should enter into a contract with B., which contract B. should afterwards assign to a third person ; there, no action would be maintainable at law by such assignee against A., or by A. against such assignee, on such contract. But a Bill in Equity would well lie by either of them against the other, either to enforce a specific execution of the contract, or to set it aside, in the same manner, and under the same circumstances, as such a bill would lie [* 93] between the immediate *parties to it.<sup>1</sup> We all know, that privity of contract between the parties is in general indispensable to a suit at law ; but Courts of Equity act in favor of all persons claiming by assignment under the parties, independent of any such privity.

§ 784. Upon similar principles, if a person has in writing contracted to sell land, and afterwards refuses to perform his contract, and then sells to a purchaser with notice of the contract ; the latter will be compelled to perform the contract of his vendor ; for he stands upon the same Equity ; and, although he is not personally liable on the contract, yet he will be decreed to convey the land in the same manner as his vendor.<sup>2</sup> In other words, he is treated as a trustee of the first vendee. So, if a power is reserved in a marriage settlement for a feme covert to dispose of her separate property, real and personal, Courts of Equity will enforce the specific performance of it in favor of any party, claiming title from her against her husband ; although at law it might, in many cases, be difficult to prevent the latter from exercising power over it.<sup>1</sup>

§ 785. The cases of contracts to grant an annuity for a life or lives, to settle the boundaries between contiguous estates and to levy a fine, have been already mentioned as proper matters for a bill for specific performance.<sup>2</sup> So, where an agreement was made by persons, who were presumptive heirs to another person, to divide the estate *equally [* 94] between them, without any reference to any will, which might be made by such person, it was held valid ; and that it should be specifically decreed.<sup>3</sup> So, contracts to invest money in land, and, on the other hand, to turn land into money, have been held proper for a specific performance.<sup>4</sup> So, a contract to make mutual wills, if one of the parties has died, having made a will according to the agreement, will be decreed in Equity to be specifically executed by the surviving party, if he has enjoyed the benefit of the will of the other party.<sup>5</sup> So, a general covenant to indemnify a party for the purchase-money, due for land, upon an assignment thereof to an assignee though it sounds only in damages, will be decreed to be specifically performed by the assignee, upon the principle of quia timet.<sup>6</sup>

§ 786. Another curious case, illustrative of the extent, to which Courts of Equity will go to enforce a specific performance of contracts against parties and privies in estate, in cases where a fraudulent evasion is attempted, has been recently put by and acted upon in the House of Lords. If a person covenants, or agrees, or in any other manner validly binds himself to give to A, by his will, as much property as he gives to any other child, he may put it out of his power to do so by giving all his property in his life-time. Or, [*95] if he binds himself to give to A *as much as he gives to B, by his will, he may in his life-time give to B what he pleases, so as by his will he shall give to A as much as he gives to B. But then the gifts, which he makes in his life-time to B, must be out and out. For if, to defraud or defeat the obligation, which he has thus entered into, he gives to B any property, real or personal, over which he retains a control, or in which he reserves an interest to himself ; then, in order to protect the agreement or obligation, which he has entered into, and to defeat the fraud attempted upon that agreement or obligation, and to prevent his escaping, as it were, from his own contract, Courts of Equity will treat this gift to B in the same manner, as if it were purely testamentary, and were included in a will ; and the subject-matter of the gift will be brought back, and made the fund out of which to perform the obligation. At all events, it will be made the measure for calculating, and ordering the performance of, and dealing with, the claim arising under that agreement or obligation.<sup>1</sup>

§ 787. These cases are sufficient to point out the general course of remedial justice in Equity in all cases of specific performance, whether they are within or without the statute of frauds. To go over all the doctrines, applicable to the subject, in all their varieties, would require a discussion wholly incompatible with the objects of this work. The principles already expounded may serve to explain the true nature and extent of the jurisdiction at present exercised ; a jurisdiction, which has been an appropriate theme of praise on all occasions, in which the claims of Courts of Equity to public favor have been vindicated by their friends, or assailed by *their enemies.<sup>1</sup> In conclusion, it may, however, be proper to remark, that all the cases for a specific performance, which we have been examining, presuppose the contract to be between competent parties, and founded upon a valuable or at least a meritorious consideration ; for Courts of Equity will not, as we shall presently see,<sup>2</sup> carry into specific execution any merely nude pacts or voluntary agreements, not founded upon some valuable or meritorious consideration ; nor between parties not sui juris or competent to contract, as infants, and femes covert ;<sup>3</sup> nor (as we have already seen) any agreements, which are against public policy, or are immoral, or will involve a breach of trust.<sup>4</sup>

§ 788. It may also be stated, that, in general, where the specific execution of a contract respecting lands will be decreed between the parties, it will be decreed between all persons, claiming under them in

privity of estate, or of representation, or title, unless other controlling equities are interposed.<sup>1</sup> If a person purchases lands with knowledge of a prior contract to convey them, he is (as we have seen) affected by all the equities, which affected them in the hands of the vendor.<sup>2</sup> The lien of the vendor for the purchase money attaches to them; and such purchaser may be compelled either to pay the purchase-money, or to surrender up the land, or to have it sold for the benefit of the vendor. In this view the remedy of the vendor against such purchaser may be said to be in rem, rather than in personam.<sup>3</sup> On the other [*97] *hand, if the vendee, under such a contract, conveys the same to a third person, the latter, upon paying the purchase-money, may compel the vendor, and any person claiming under him in privity, or as a purchaser with notice, to complete the contract and convey the title to him.<sup>4</sup>

§ 789. The general principle, upon which this doctrine proceeds, is, that from the time of the contract for the sale of the land, the vendor, as to the land, becomes a trustee for the vendee, and the vendee, as to the purchase-money, a trustee for the vendor, who has a lien upon the land therefor. And every subsequent purchaser from either, with notice, becomes subject to the same equities, as the party would be, from whom he purchased.<sup>1</sup> In cases of this sort, if the original vendee dies, after having sold the lands to a third person, who is to pay the purchase-money, his personal representatives are entitled to proceed against such purchaser in Equity to indemnify them, and pay the purchase-money.<sup>2</sup> On the other hand, if the vendor dies, his personal representatives may enforce the lien for the purchase-money against the land in the possession of the purchaser. But, who, as between the heirs and personal representatives of the vendee or subsequent purchaser, is to bear the charge, that is, whether it is to be borne by the personal estate, or by the land purchased, is *a matter properly [*98] belonging to other branches of Equity jurisdiction, in which the marshalling of assets is considered.<sup>3</sup>

§ 790. There is another consideration, which is incident to this subject, and to which Courts of Equity have given an attention and effect proportioned to its importance. In the view of Courts of Law, contracts respecting lands, or other things, of which a specific execution will be decreed in Equity, are considered as simple executory agreements, and as not attaching to the property in any manner, as an incident, or as a present or future charge. But Courts of Equity regard them in a very different light. They treat them, for most purposes, precisely as if they had been specifically executed.<sup>4</sup> Thus, if a man has entered into a valid contract for the purchase of land, he is treated in Equity as the equitable owner of the land; and the vendor is treated as the owner of the money. The purchaser may devise it as land, even before the conveyance is made; and it passes by descent to his heir as land.<sup>1</sup> The vendor is deemed in Equity to stand seised of it for the benefit of the purchaser; and the trust (as has been already stated) attaches to the land, so as to bind the heir of the vendor, and every one claiming under him as a purchaser, with notice of the trust. The heir of the purchaser may come into Equity and insist upon a specific performance of the contract; and unless some other circumstances affect the case, he may require the purchase-money to be paid out of the personal estate [*99] of the *purchaser in the hands of his personal representative. On the other hand, the vendor may come into Equity for a specific performance of the contract on the other side, and to have the money paid; for the remedy, in cases of specific performance, is mutual;<sup>2</sup> and the purchase-money is treated as the personal estate of the vendor, and goes as such to his personal representatives. In like manner, land, articted or devised to be sold, and turned into money, is reputed as money; and money, articted or bequeathed to be invested in land, has, in Equity, many of the qualities of real estate, and is descendible and devisable as such, according to the rules of inheritance in other cases.<sup>3</sup>

taining the principal authorities, is here inserted. "The rule," says he, "equally applies to money devised to be laid out in land. The authorities to show, that money, agreed or directed to be laid out in land, is to be considered as land, are very numerous. The force of the rule is particularly evinced by those cases, in which it has been held, that the money, agreed or directed to be laid out, so fully becomes land, as, 1st, not to be personal assets. Earl of Pembroke v. Bowden, 3 Ch. Rep. 115; 2 Vern. 52; Lawrence v. Beverly, 2 Keble, 841; cited also in Kettleby v. Attwood, 1 Vern. 741; 2dly, to be subject to the curtesy of the husband, though not to the dower of the wife. Sweetapple v. Bindon, 2 Vern. 536; Otway v. Hudson, 2 Vern. 583; 3dly, to pass as land by will, if subject to the real use at the time the will was made. See ch. 4, § 2, note (n). See also Milner v. Mills, Mosely, 123; Greenhill v. Addenbroke; Fulham v. Jones, cited in a note to Lechmere v. Earl of Carlisle. 3 P. Wms. 222; or by a bequest of all the testator's estate in law and equity. Rushleigh v. Masters, 1 Ves. jun. 204. But Equity will not consider money as land, unless the covenant or direction to lay it out in land be express. Symons v. Rutter, 2 Vern. 227; Curling v. May, M. 8 G. II. cited in Guidott v. Guidott, 3 Atk. 255. And as money agreed or directed to be laid out in land shall in general be considered as land, so land agreed or directed to be sold shall be considered and treated as money. Gilb. Lex. Prætoria, 243; but see Ashby v. Palmer, 1 Merivale's R. 296. As to from what time the conversion shall be supposed, see Sitwell v. Bernard, 6 Ves. 520; Elwin v. Elwin, 8 Ves. 547; and the creditors of the bargainor may compel the heir to convey the land. Best v. Stanford, 1 Salk. 154. But it must not be understood, that where a testator directs his real estate to be sold for purposes, which are answered out of the personal estate, the next of kin may insist upon the real estate's being sold; for 'there is no equity between the next of kin and the heir; but the general principle is, that the heir takes all that, which is not for a defined and specific purpose given by the will.' Chitty v. Parker, 2 Ves. jun. 271; Ex parte Bromfield, 1 Ves. jun. 453; Oxenden v. Lord Compton, 2 Ves. jun. 69; Walker v. Denne, 2 Ves. jun. 170; Lord Compton v. Oxenden, 2 Ves. jun. 361; but see Wheldale v. Partridge, 8 Ves. 235. And where the testator was entitled to a fund, as money or land, his real and personal representatives shall take it as money, or as land, according as the testator would have taken it. See Ackroyd v. Smithson, and the cases there cited, 1 Bro. Ch. Rep. 503; see also Hewitt v. Wright, 1 Bro. Ch. Rep. 86, as to Lord Thurlow's opinion, that money resulting to the heir, as being produced the mere form of agreements, and other instruments; and will give them the precise effect, which [*101] the parties intended, in furtherance of *that intention. It is presumed, that the parties, in directing money to be invested in land, or land to be turned into money, intend, that the property shall assume the very character of the property, into which it is to be converted; whatever may be the manner, in which that direction is given. And no one will deny, that it is competent, at least in a Court of Equity, for the owner of the fund to make land money, or money land, at his sole will and pleasure.<sup>1</sup>

§ 792. But, although these are the general principles adopted by Courts of Equity; yet they are not without limitations and qualifications, standing upon peculiar reasons, but still consistent with those principles. Thus, (as we have seen) nothing is looked upon, in Equity, as done, but what ought to be done; not what might have been done.<sup>2</sup> Nor will Equity consider things as thus done in favor of every body; but only in favor of those, who have a right to pray, that it might be done.<sup>3</sup>

by sale of real estate undisposed of, is to be considered as personal estate of the heir, and as such would go to his executor. Russell v. Smythies, 1 Cox's R. 215. But if the use and possession were not united, it would still be considered as land. Rashleigh v. Masters, 1 Ves. jun. 201; Wheldale v. Patridge, 8 Ves. 235." The same subject is most amply discussed by Mr. Newland with uncommon care, in his Treatise on Contracts, ch. 3, p. 48 to 64. See also Jeremy on Eq. Jurisd. B. 3, Pt. 2, ch. 4, § 1, p. 446, 447. Craig v. Leslie, 3 Wheat. R. 577; 2 Fonbl. on Equity, B. 1, ch. 4, § 2, note (n).

§ 793. Upon the ground of intention also, if it can be collected from any present or subsequent acts of the parties, that it is their intention, notwithstanding any will or deed or other instrument, that the property shall retain its present character, either in whole or in part, Courts of Equity will act upon that intention.<sup>1</sup> Thus, for instance, if money is directed by a will, or other instrument, to be laid out in land, or land is directed to be turned into money, the party entitled to the *beneficial interest may, in either [*102] case, if he elects so to do, prevent any conversion of the property from its present state, and hold it as it is. And this election he may make, as well by acts or declarations, clearly indicating a determination to that effect, as by an application to a Court of Equity. It is this election, however, and not the mere right to make it, which changes the character of the estate, so as to make it real, or personal, at the will of the party entitled to the whole beneficial interest. If he does not make such an election in time to stamp the property with a character different from that, which the will or other instrument gives it, the latter character accompanies it with all its legal consequences into the hands of those, who are entitled to it in that character. So that, in case of the death of the party thus beneficially entitled, without having made an election, the property will pass to his heirs, or personal representatives, in the same manner it would have done, if the trust had been executed, and the conversion had been actually made in his life-time.<sup>2</sup>

§ 793. a. We have already had occasion to remark, that throughout the whole of the preceding discussion, respecting Bills for specific performance of contracts, it has been constantly supposed, that the contract was one founded upon a valuable, or at least upon a meritorious consideration, in the contemplation of law.<sup>1</sup> In respect to voluntary contracts, or such as are not founded in a valuable consideration, we have already had occasion to state, that Courts of Equity do not interfere to enforce them, either as against the party himself, or as against other volunteers claiming under him.<sup>2</sup> Thus, for example, if a party should

This whole subject is most elaborately considered upon all the distinctions stated in the text, in the opinion of the Court, delivered by Mr. Justice Washington, in Craig v. Leslie, 3 Wheat. R. 577 to 588, which will well reward the diligent perusal of the reader. Mr. Cox's note also to Cruse v. Barley, 3 P. Will. 22, note (1), contains a valuable exposition of the doctrine. The question often arises, under wills between personal representatives and real representatives, as to who are entitled ; and the struggle is maintained with great pertinacity on each side. Thus, if a testator should direct, that his lands should be sold for the payment of his debts, or for other purposes, the question would arise, whether he meant to give the produce of his real estate the quality of personalty to all intents and purposes, or only so far as respected the purposes of his will. For unless the testator has sufficiently declared his intention, not only that the realty shall be converted into personalty for the purposes of the will ; but further, that the produce of the real estate shall be taken as personalty, whether such purposes take effect or not, so much of the real estate, of the produce of it, as may not, in the event, be required for any purposes of the will from any cause whatsoever, will result to the heir at law, who will be entitled to hold it in any character, which he may elect. enter into a voluntary agreement to transfer stock to another, or to give him a sum of money, or to convey to him certain real estate, Courts of Equity would not assist in enforcing the agreement, either against the party entering into the agreement, or against his personal representatives ; for he is a mere volunteer.<sup>1</sup> The same rule is applied to imperfect gifts, not testamentary, inter vivos, to imperfect voluntary assignments of debts and other property, to voluntary executory trusts, and to voluntary defective conveyances.<sup>2</sup> A few cases may serve to illustrate this doctrine. Thus, where a parent had assigned certain scrip to his daughter by a written assignment, which operated as an equitable assignment only, and not as a legal transfer, a Court of Equity refused to compel the donor or his executors to perfect the gift.<sup>3</sup> So, where a lady, by a writing, assigned a bond of a third person to her niece, and delivered the bond to the latter, and then died, a Court of Equity refused to enforce the assignment, against the executor, or to decree payment of the money by the obligor to the niece.<sup>4</sup> On the other hand, if the transfer, assignment, trust, or conveyance, is completed at law, so that no further act remains to be done to give full effect to the title, there, Courts of

Equity will enforce it throughout, although it is derived from a mere gift or other voluntary act of the party. Thus for example, if there is a gift of stock, and a transfer is actually made thereof, it will be enforced against the donor and his representatives.<sup>1</sup> So, if an assignment of a debt or other property is consummate, so as to pass the title, and no farther act is to be done by the donor, it will be enforced in equity.<sup>2</sup>

is a very different question, unless he has voluntarily entered into some contract to make a perfect conveyance, or to execute the power. Be this as it may, it has been recently held, on great consideration, that a voluntary contract, in writing, by a father, to make a post-nuptial provision or settlement upon his daughter, may be enforced against him in Equity, as being founded on a meritorious, although not on a valuable consideration.<sup>1</sup> Another exception is, of cases of donations mortis causâ, as contradistinguished from donations inter vivos, in which, though the donation is imperfect as a transfer of the right of property; yet, in Equity, it will be upheld, in order to effectuate the intention of the donor, and enforced against his executors, as it is treated as in the nature of a testamentary act. But of this, sufficient has been already said in another place.<sup>2</sup>

CHAPTER XIX.

COMPENSATION AND DAMAGES.

§ 794. IT is in cases of bills brought for a specific performance, that questions principally (though not exclusively) arise, as to compensation and damages being awarded by Courts of Equity ; and therefore it is convenient, in this place to consider the nature and extent of the jurisdiction exercised by Courts of Equity, as to compensation and damages.<sup>1</sup> It may be stated, as a general proposition, that for breaches of contract and other wrongs and injuries, cognizable at law, Courts of Equity do not entertain jurisdiction to give redress by way of compensation or damages, where these constitute the sole objects of the bill. For, wherever the matter of the bill is merely for damages, and there is a perfect remedy therefor at law, it is far better, that they should be ascertained by a Jury, than by the conscience of the Equity Judge.<sup>2</sup> And, indeed, the just foundation of equitable jurisdiction fails in all such cases, as there is a plain, complete, and adequate remedy at law. Compensation, or damages (it should seem) ought, therefore, to be decreed in Equity only as incidental to other relief sought by the bill, and granted by the Court;<sup>1</sup> or where there is no adequate remedy at law;<sup>2</sup> or where some peculiar equity intervenes.

§ 795. The mode, by which such compensation or damages are ascertained, is either by a reference to a Master, or by directing an issue, quantum damnificatus, which is tried by a jury. The latter used to be almost the invariable course in former times in all cases, where the compensation was not extremely clear, as to its elements and amount; and this course is still commonly resorted to in all cases of a complicated nature. But the same inquiries may be had before a Master; and in cases where such inquiries do not involve much complexity of facts or amounts, this course is now often adopted.<sup>3</sup>

§ 796. Wherever compensation or damages are incidental to other relief, as for instance, where a specific performance is decreed upon the application of either party, with an allowance to be made for any deficiency, as to the quantity, quality, or description of the property, or for any delay in performing

<sup>1</sup> Lord Chief Baron Alexander, Newham v. May, (13 Price, R. 752,) said; "The cases of compensation in Equity I consider to have grown out of the jurisdiction of Courts of Equity, as exercised in respect to contracts for the purchase of real property, where it is often ancillary, as incidentally necessary to effectuate decrees of specific performance." And he added; "It is not in every case of fraud, that relief is to be administered in Equity. In the cases, for instance, of a fraudulent warranty on the sale of a horse, or any fraud in the sale of a chattel, no one, I apprehend, ever thought of filing a bill in Equity." Ante, § 779.

the contract ; there, it seems clear, that the jurisdiction properly attaches in Equity ; for it flows, and is inseparable from the proper relief.<sup>1</sup> So, where upon a bill brought by the vendor against the vendee for a specific performance of the contract, and for a payment of the purchase money, if the decree is for a specific performance, Equity will decree the payment of the purchase money also, as incidental to the general relief, and to prevent a multiplicity of suits, although the vendor might in many cases have a good remedy at law for the purchase money.<sup>2</sup> So, where a contract for the sale of lands has been in part executed by a conveyance of a part of the lands by the vendor, but he is unable to convey the residue, Equity will decree the repayment to the vendee of a proportionate part of the purchase-money with interest, if he has paid more than the part of the lands conveyed entitle the vendor to hold.<sup>3</sup> But, where a specific performance is denied, there is somewhat more difficulty in establishing the propriety of exercising a general jurisdiction for compensation or damages. It was strongly said by the Master of the Rolls,<sup>4</sup> on one occasion, where a specific performance was sought and refused, because the vendor had rendered himself incapable of performing the contract ; “ The party injured by the non-performance of a contract has the choice to resort either to a Court of Law for damages, or to a Court of Equity for a specific performance. If the Court does not think fit to decree a specific performance, or finds, that the contract cannot be specifically performed ; either way I should have thought there was equally an end of its jurisdiction ; for, in the one case the Court does not see reason to exercise the jurisdiction ; in the other the Court finds no room for the exercise of it. It seems, that the consequence ought to be, that the party must seek his remedy at law.” But, upon the footing of authority, he nevertheless proceeded to decree compensation in that case by a reference to a Master.<sup>1</sup>

*§ 797. There is much weight in the reasoning of the Master of the Rolls ; and the only assignable ground, upon which the jurisdiction can be maintained in such a case, is to prevent a multiplicity of suits. But that seems chiefly proper in cases, where the Court has already acquired a clear jurisdiction by a discovery for relief. In a later case, where a bill was framed for the delivery up of a contract, on the ground of the defective title of the defendant, with a prayer, that compensation might be made, it was re-

B. 5, ch. 1, § 5, note (s) ; Ante, § 711, § 714, § 723. In Woodcock v. Bennet, (1 Cowen, R. 711,) the Court held, that where a party has put it out of his power to perform his contract specifically, the bill for a specific performance ought to be retained, and an equivalent in damages awarded, to be assessed, on reference to a Master, or by a jury upon an issue of quantum damnificatus, as the circumstances may require.

fused.<sup>1</sup> Indeed, Lord Eldon seems to have doubted the authority to decree compensation, and to have held the opinion, that a Court of Equity ought not to give relief in the shape of damages, but only compensation out of the purchase-money ; or, at least, that a Court of Equity ought not, except under very particular circumstances, upon a bill for specific performance, to direct an issue, or a reference to a Master, to ascertain damages, as it is a matter purely at law, and has no resemblance to compensation, strictly so called.<sup>2</sup> And his opinion seems to have been adopted on other recent occasions.<sup>3</sup>

§ 798. There is, however, a distinction upon this subject, which is entitled to consideration, and may perhaps reconcile the apparent diversity of judgment in some of the authorities. It is, that Courts of Equity ought not to entertain bills for compensation or damages, except as incidental to other relief, where the contract is of such a nature, that an adequate remedy [*108] lies at law for such compensation or damages. But where no such remedy lies at law, there, a peculiar ground for the interference of Courts of Equity seems to exist, in order to prevent irreparable mischief, or to avoid a fraudulent advantage being taken of the injured party. Thus, where there has been a part performance of a parol contract for the purchase of lands, and the vendor has since sold the same to a bonâ fide purchaser for a valuable consideration with-

In a case cited from Lord Colchester's MSS. (—— v. White, 3 Swanst. R. 109, note,) and decided in the beginning of the last century, a specific performance was refused ; but an issue of quantum damnificatus was awarded. In Phillips v. Thompson, (1 John. Ch. R. 150,) Mr. Chancellor Kent retained the bill, and awarded an issue of quantum damnificatus, founding himself upon the peculiar circumstances of the case before him, which he thought brought it within the reach of Denton v. Stewart, 1 Cox, R. 258, and expressly affirming the jurisdiction. (S. P. Parkhurst v. Van Cortlandt, 1 John. Ch. R. 286.) In another case, however, (Hatch v. Cobb, 4 John. Ch. R. 560,) the learned Chancellor seems to have doubted on the point, and said ; "It is doubtful, how far the Court has jurisdiction to assess damages merely in such a case, in which the plaintiff was aware, when he filed the bill, that the contract could not be specifically performed or decreed. It was properly a matter of legal cognizance." And after citing the cases in 1 Cox, R. 258, 12 Ves. 395, and 17 Ves. 273, he concluded by saying : "And though Equity in very special cases may possibly sustain a bill for a specific performance, it is clearly not the ordinary jurisdiction of the Court." In a later case he expressed a still more decided opinion against the jurisdiction, (Kempshall v. Stone, 5 John. Ch. R. 194, 195.) But in Woodcock v. Bennett, 1 Cowen, R. 711, the jurisdiction was expressly affirmed ; Ante, § 796, note (1). The Supreme Court of the United States seem to have entertained no doubt, that, though a specific performance might not be decreed, an issue of quantum damnificatus would be within the competence of the Court. (Pratt v. Law, 9 Cranch, 492, 494.) In Cud v. Rutter, (1 P. Will. 570, Mr. Cox's note (3)) a specific performance was denied ; and yet damages were decreed by way of compensation. See also Forrest v. Elwes, 4 Ves. 497. Lord Hardwicke, in City of London v. Nash, 3 Atk. 512, 517, refused a specific performance ; but he awarded an issue of quantum damnificatus.

opinion, it is not possible to affirm more, than that the jurisdiction for compensation or damages does not ordinarily attach in Equity, except as ancillary to a specific performance or to some other relief. If it does attach in any other cases, it must be under very special circumstances, and upon peculiar equities ; as, for instance, in cases of fraud ; or in cases, where the party has disabled himself by matters ex post facto from a specific performance ; or in cases, where there is no adequate remedy at law.<sup>1</sup>

§ 799. a. The cases, however, which we have been thus far considering, are cases, where the party sought relief in Equity as a plaintiff, and not where compensation was ordinarily sought by the defendant, in resistance or modification of the plaintiff's claim. In these latter cases the maxim often prevails, that he, who seeks equity, shall do equity. Thus, for example, if a plaintiff in Equity seeks the aid of the Court to enforce his title against an innocent person, who has made improvements on land, supposing himself to be the absolute owner, that aid will be given to him only upon the terms, that he shall make due compensation to such innocent person, to the extent of the benefits, which will be received from those improvements. In such a case, if the plaintiff has fraudulently concealed his title, and has thereby misled the defendant, the title to this compensation is founded in the highest justice.<sup>2</sup> But, independently of any such fraud, if the plaintiff seeks from an innocent person an account of the rents and profits of an estate, on which the latter has made improvements, without any notice of any defect of his title, a Court of Equity, in decreeing an account, will allow him to deduct or recoup therefrom a due compensation for his improvements.<sup>1</sup> So, in cases of partition between tenants in common, compensation is often allowed in Equity to one of the tenants in common, who has made valuable improvements thereon.<sup>2</sup>

§ 799. b. It has been sometimes thought, that as a matter of justice Courts ought to go farther, and, in favor of a bonâ fide possessor of the land, whose title is defective, to decree compensation for the improvements made by him upon the land in good faith against the true owner, who asserts his title to it. The civil law seems to have adopted this broad doctrine, where the improvements were made by a bonâ fide possessor without notice of any adverse title. Certe illud constat, si in possessione constituto ædificatore, soli Dominus petat domum suam esse, nec solvat pretium materiæ et mercedes fabrorum, posse eum per exceptionem doli mali repelli; utique si bonæ fidei possessor fuerit, qui ædificavit.<sup>3</sup> And this also appears to be the rule of countries deriving their jurisprudence from the civil law.<sup>4</sup> But Courts of Equity have never gone to this extent; but have simply confined themselves to the administration of the equity, in cases where their aid

<sup>1</sup> Putnam v. Ritchie, 6 Paige, 390, 403, 404, 405. In this case Mr. Chancellor Wolworth, said:—"This principle of natural equity is constantly acted upon in this court, where the legal title is in one person, who has made the improvements in good faith, and where the equitable title is in another, who is obliged to resort to this court for relief. The court in such cases acts upon the principle, that the party, who comes here, as a complainant, to ask equity, must himself be willing to do, what is equitable. I have not, however, been able to find any case, either in this country or in England, wherein the court of chancery has assumed jurisdiction to give relief to a complainant, who has made improvements upon land, the legal title to which was in the defendant, where there has been neither fraud nor acquiescence on the part of latter, after he had knowledge of his legal rights. I do not, therefore, feel myself authorized to introduce a new principle into the law of this court, without the sanction of the legislature, which principle in its application to future cases might be productive of more injury than benefit. If it is desirable, that such a principle should be introduced into the law of this state, for the purpose of giving the bonâ fide possessor a lien upon the legal title for the beneficial improvements he has made, it would probably be much better to give him a remedy by action at law, where both parties could have the benefit of a trial by jury, than to embarrass the title to real estate with the expense and delay of a protracted chancery in all such cases." ## CHAPTER XX.

INTERPLEADER.

§ 800. WITH these remarks on the jurisdiction of Courts of Equity, as to specific performance, and compensation and damages, we may dismiss the subject, and proceed to another head of concurrent Equitable jurisdiction, arising principally from the peculiar remedies administered therein ; and that is, INTERPLEADER. A learned author has treated this, and one other branch of Equity jurisprudence, (that of interference in cases of irreparable mischief and injury) as not strictly belonging either to the concurrent, or the exclusive, or the auxiliary jurisdiction of Courts of Equity. Perhaps, in strictness, this may be correct ; but it more nearly falls within the former, than within either of the others.<sup>1</sup>

§ 801. The remedy by interpleader was not unknown to the Common Law ; but it had a very narrow range of purpose and application. It was a common practice, in the early times of the English law, for parties by joint agreement to deposit title deeds and other deeds and things in the hands of third persons, to await the performance of covenants, or the doing of some other act, upon which they were to be re-delivered to one or the other of the parties. It often happened, under such circumstances, that questions subsequently arose, whether the act had been properly performed, or the terms strictly complied with ; and if, when either party supposed the crisis, on which the deed or thing was demandable, to have arrived, any dispute existed, as to the right, or as to the fact, an action of detinue (the appropriate action for such a case) became inevitable.<sup>1</sup> Now, by the Common Law, in such a case, the depositary might, if such an action was brought against him, plead for his protection, the fact of such delivery or bailment upon certain conditions, and his willingness to deliver the property to the party entitled to it, and his ignorance, whether the conditions were performed or not; and thereupon he might pray, that a process of garnishment (that is, a process of monition or notice,) might issue to compel the other depositor to appear and become a defendant in his stead. This was properly called the process of garnishment.<sup>2</sup>

§ 802. The process of interpleader was very nearly allied to that of garnishment; and it arose, when both of the parties, who concurred in a joint bailment, brought several actions of detinue against the depositary, under like circumstances, for a re-delivery of the thing deposited. The depositary might then plead the facts of the case, and pray, that the plaintiffs in the several actions might interplead with each other. This was properly the process of interpleader.<sup>3</sup> The proceeding seems highly reasonable in itself, to prevent the depositary from being harassed by suits in which he had no interest.

§ 803. The same process, was also applied to cases, where the thing in controversy came to the possession of the depositary by finding, and he was sued in detinue by different persons, each claiming to *be the owner in severalty.<sup>1</sup> And it seems [112*] also to have been applied to cases of a bailment by A to the depositary to rebail to B; where both A and B sued the depositary in detinue.<sup>2</sup> But, if there was no privity between the parties, but each plaintiff counted upon a several independent bailment against the depositary; there, it was said, the plaintiffs were not compellable to interplead; for it was the depositary's own folly, and he must abide by it.<sup>3</sup>

§ 804. The remedy however, such as it was, was principally confined to actions of detinue; although it was applied to a few other cases, such as writs of quare impedit, and writs of Ward. But it was not allowed in any personal action, except detinue; and then only, as we have seen, when it was founded either in privity of contract, or upon a finding.

§ 805. From this description of the process of interpleader at the Common Law it is obvious, that it could afford a very imperfect remedy in a great variety of cases. Indeed, as the action of detinue has, in modern times, fallen much into disuse, and the action of trover has been substituted in its stead, (in which interpleader did not lie at the common law,) little or no practical advantage could be derived from it in modern times.<sup>4</sup> The only remedy, therefore, now resorted to, (as we are informed from very high authority,) for the relief of a person sued, or in danger of being sued, by several claimants of the same [* 113] *property, is that of filing a bill to compel them, by the authority of a Court of Equity, to interplead, either at Law or in Equity.<sup>1</sup>

§ 806. It is observable, that the jurisdiction of Courts of Equity to compel an interpleader follows to some extent the analogies of the law.<sup>2</sup> It is properly

<sup>1</sup> The reader is referred to the able Report of the Common Law Commissioners, made to Parliament, and printed by the order of the House of Commons, in March, 1830, (p. 24), for further information on this subject. Mr. Reeves has, in his History of the English Law, (Vol. III. p. 448 to 445,) brought together some of the cases of difficulty in the proceedings of interpleader at the Common Law. They abundantly show the inadequacy of the remedy. Mr. Eden's valuable Treatise on Injunctions contains a head of Interpleader, which I have consulted with great advantage, and have freely used. Eden on Injunct. p. 335 to 347.

<sup>2</sup> See Metcalf v. Harvey, 1 Ves. 249; Mitford, Eq. Pl. by Jeremy, 141, 142; Cooper, Eq. Pl. Introd. 35, 36. Lord Redesdale, in his Treatise on Equity Pleadings (Edition by Jeremy, p. 141, 142,) gives the following description of Equity Jurisdiction on this subject. "It has been mentioned," says he, "that where two or more persons claim the same thing by different titles, and another person is in danger of injury from ignorance of the real title to the subject in dispute, Courts of Equity will assume a jurisdiction to protect him; and that the bill exhibited for this purpose is termed a bill of interpleader, the object of it being to compel the claimants to interplead, so that the court may adjudge, to whom the property belongs, and the plaintiff may be indemnified. The principles, upon which the courts of Equity proceed in these cases, are similar to those, by which the Courts of Law are guided in the case of bailment; the Courts of Law compelling interpleader between persons claiming property, for the indemnity of a third person, in whose hands the property is, in certain cases only; as where the property has been bailed to the third person by both claimants, or by those, under whom both make title; or where the property came to the hands of the third person by accident; and the Courts of Equity extending the remedy to all cases, to which, in conscience, it ought to extend, whether any suit has been commenced by any claimant, or only a claim made." In Pearson v. Cardon, 2 Russ & Mylne, 613, Lord Brougham said; "In looking at the rules of Interpleader at Law, you discover the principles, that govern this court; because I hold it to be strictly a concurrent jurisdiction, and that you can have no interpleader here, if upon principle you could not have it at applied to cases, where two or more persons severally claim the same thing under different titles, or in separate interests, from another person, who, not claiming any title, or *interest therein himself, and not know- [*114] ing to which of the claimants he ought of right to render the debt, or duty claimed, or to deliver the property in his custody, is either molested by an action or actions brought against him, or fears, that he may suffer injury from the conflicting claims of the parties. He therefore applies to a Court of Equity to protect him, not only from being compelled to pay or deliver the thing claimed to both the claimants, but also from the vexation attending upon the suits, which are, or possibly may be instituted against him.<sup>1</sup> law.” It is not very clear, what is the precise extent, to which this general remark was intended to reach. With reference to the case before his Lordship, it was perfectly accurate. But there certainly are cases, in which an interpleader will not lie at law, but in which, nevertheless, it will lie in Equity. Indeed, if there be in the case a clear right of Interpleader at Law, that would seem to put an end to the jurisdiction in Equity, which comes in aid of the party only, when there is no remedy at Law, or the remedy is inadequate.

<sup>1</sup> Mitf. Eq. Pl. by Jeremy, 48, 49; 1 Eq. Abr. 80, 1 pl. 1 in marg.; Atkinson v. Manks, 1 Cowen, R. 691, 703; Eden on Injunctions, ch. 16, p. 335 to 343; Moore v. Lord Chief Baron Gilbert, in his Forum Romanum (p. 47) has supposed, that a bill of interpleader bears a close resemblance to the process of intervention in the Civil Law. Mr. Eden, in his Treatise on Injunctions, (p. 336, note a,) has abundantly shown, that the processes are very different. The intervener, or tertius interveniens in the civil law, files his process upon his own independent title, asserting a right to the thing in controversy against both of the parties, who are already contesting it, and insists upon his right to intervene or join in the discussion. On the contrary, a party, who seeks an interpleader in Law or Equity disclaims all title in himself; and requires other persons to engage in the controversy, and to exonerate him. The bill of interpleader in Equity was doubtless borrowed from the process

§ 807. The true origin of the jurisdiction is, that there either is no remedy at all at law, or the legal remedy is inadequate in the given case. If an interpleader at law will lie in the case, and it would be effectual for the protection of the party, then the jurisdiction in Equity fails.<sup>1</sup> So, if the party himself, seeking the aid of the Court by bill of Interpleader, [* 115] er, claims an interest in *the subject-matter, as well as the other parties, there is no foundation for the exercise of the jurisdiction; for in such a case he has other appropriate remedies.<sup>2</sup> And besides; a bill of Interpleader always supposes, that the plaintiff is the mere holder of a stake, which is equally contested by the other parties, and as to which the plaintiff stands wholly indifferent between them; so that when their respective rights are settled, nothing farther remains in controversy. But that can never truly be said to be the case, when the plaintiff asserts a personal right or claim, which remains to be settled between him and the other parties; or the plaintiff seeks relief in the premises against either of them.<sup>3</sup> The

of interpleader at the Common Law. It might have been a far more useful jurisdiction, if it had gone the full length of the intervention of the Civil Law. See Merlin, Repertoire, Intervention. See also Gaill. Pract. Observ. Lib. 1, 69, cited by Mr. Eden.

Hence, it is said, that if upon a sale by an auctioneer, a deposit is made by the purchaser, and the auctioneer is afterwards sued for the deposit by the purchaser, and he claims a right to deduct from the deposit his commission and the auction duty, a bill of Interpleader will not lie by the auctioneer against the vendor and the purchaser to ascertain their title to the deposit; because the auctrue ground, upon which the plaintiff comes into Equity, is, that claiming no right in the subject-matter himself, he is, or may be, vexed by having two legal or other processes in the names of different persons going on against him at the same time. He comes, therefore, into Court upon the most obvious Equity, to insist, that those persons claiming that, to which he makes no claim, should settle that contest among themselves, and not with him or at his expense and hazard.<sup>1</sup> If their respective titles are doubtful, there is so much the more reason, why he should not be harassed by suits to ascertain and fix them; and unless, under such circumstances, Courts of Equity afford him protection, he will, in almost every event, be a sufferer, however innocent and honorable his own conduct may have been.

§ 808. In regard to bills of interpleader, it is not necessary, to entitle the party to come into Equity, that the titles of the claimants should be both purely legal. It is sufficient to found the jurisdiction, that one title is legal and the other is equitable.<sup>2</sup> Indeed, where one of the claims is purely equitable, it seems indispensable to come into Equity; for in such a *case there can be no interpleader awarded at [* 116] law.<sup>3</sup> Thus, for instance, if a debt or other claim has been assigned, and a controversy arises between the assignor and the assignee respecting the title, a bill of interpleader may be brought by the debtor, to have the point settled, to whom he shall pay.<sup>1</sup> Where the title of all the claimants is purely equitable, there is a still broader ground to entertain bills in the nature of a bill of interpleader ; for Courts of Equity, in virtue of their general jurisdiction, may grant relief in such cases. Nor is it necessary (as may be gathered from what has been already said), that a suit shall have been actually commenced by either or both of the conflicting claimants, against the party, either at Law or in Equity. It is sufficient, that a claim is made against him, and that he is in danger of being molested by conflicting rights.<sup>2</sup>

§ 809. But in every case of bill of interpleader, the Court, in order to prevent its being made the instrument of delay, or of collusion with one of the parties, requires, that an affidavit of the plaintiff should be made, that there is no collusion between him and any of the other parties ; and also, if it is a case of money due by him, that he should bring the money into Court ; or, at least, should offer to do so by the bill.<sup>3</sup>

standing of their purport and effect. Thus, where A received money of B upon the terms, that if so much should appear, upon an adjustment of accounts, to be due to C, the same should be paid to the latter, and what was not due should be repaid to B ; and A gave a bond accordingly ; there, B having died before any adjustment of accounts, and the creditors of B and C having severally sued A for the money, the Court, on his bringing the money into Court, decreed an account between the parties, and that the bond should be cancelled, and a perpetual injunction awarded to the proceedings at law.<sup>1</sup> In this case, the Court, as we perceive, went beyond the mere decree of an interpleader, and sustained the bill for an account, as well as for other relief, without sending the parties to law.

§ 811. So, where there were several sets of annuitants, who had distrained for rents upon a tenant's farm, and he brought the rents into Court, and prayed, that the annuitants might interplead, it was decreed accordingly, and referred to a master to settle their priorities.<sup>2</sup> So, where there was an entire rent charge, which had been split into several parts by the owner, and there were different persons claiming the different parts ; it was held, that the tenant might bring a bill of interpleader to compel *the par- [* 118] ties to ascertain their shares respectively.<sup>3</sup> So, where the owner of an estate, upon which a rent charge had been secured, filed a bill to compel the grantee, and the executors of a person, to whom it had been assigned, to interplead, a question having arisen, which of them was entitled to receive, the Court sustained the jurisdiction.<sup>1</sup> So, where a tenant was liable to pay rent, but there were several persons claiming title to it in privity of contract or tenure, he was held entitled to file a bill of interpleader to compel them to ascertain, to whom it was properly payable.<sup>2</sup>

§ 812. And here it may be proper to state, that in the cases of tenants, seeking such relief, it must appear, that the persons, claiming the same rent, claim in privity of contract or tenure, as in the case of mortgagor and mortgagee, or of trustee, and cestui que trust; or, where the estate is settled to the separate use of a married woman, of which the tenant has notice, and the husband has been in receipt of the rent.<sup>3</sup> In cases of this sort, the tenant does not dispute the title of his landlord; but he affirms that title, and the tenure and contract, by which the rent is payable; and puts himself upon the mere uncertainty of the person, to whom he is to pay the rent. But, if a claim to the rent, [*119] should be set up by a mere stranger *under a title paramount, and not in privity of contract or tenure, (as if the stranger should bring ejectment against the tenant,)<sup>4</sup> there, the tenant cannot compel his landlord

<sup>4</sup> Lord Hardwicke, in Metcalf v. Harvey (1 Ves. 249,) said, that a bill of interpleader cannot lie as to the possession of an estate; but it must lie as to the payments of some demand of money. This might be true in the case then under consideration. But a bill of interpleader will also lie as well as to chattels as to money.

to interplead with such a stranger; for it is not a demand of the same nature, or in the same right. The stranger cannot demand the rent, as such; but he has, if successful in the ejectment, only a right to damages for use and occupation; whereas the landlord claims the rent, as such, in privity of contract, tenure, and title. The debt or duty is not the same; and interpleader lies only, when it is so and in privity.<sup>1</sup>

§ 813. These last cases may serve as proofs of the truth of the remark already made, that Equity, in bills of interpleader, follows to some extent the analogies of the law; for we have seen, that privity *of con- [*120] tract is generally necessary to found a jurisdiction at law in cases of bailment upon a writ of interpleader. But in many other respects, the bill of interpleader in Equity differs from that at law. In all the cases above mentioned, no interpleader would lie at law; for they involve no mutual or joint bailment, and no claim, founded upon a finding by the plaintiff.<sup>2</sup>

Angove*, 2 Ves. jr. 310, has expounded this doctrine very satisfactorily. "The reason," says he, "is manifest; for, upon the definition of it, a bill of interpleader is, where two persons claim of a third the same debt, or the same duty. With regard to the relation of landlord and tenant, the right must be the object of an ejectment. The law has taken such anxious care to settle their rights, arising out of that relation, that the tenant attacked throws himself upon his landlord. He has nothing to do with any claim adverse to his landlord. He puts the landlord in his place. If the landlord does not defend for him, he recovers upon his lease a recompense against the landlord. In the case of another person, claiming against the title of his landlord, it is clear, unless he derives under the title of the landlord, he cannot claim the same debt. The rent due upon the demise is a different demand from that, which some other person may have upon the occupation of the premises." See also Crawshay v. Thornton, 2 Mylne & Craig, 1, 20, 21, 22.

§ 813. a. So, where a person is taxed in two different towns for the same property, when he is only liable to be taxed in one, and it is doubtful, to which town the right to tax belongs, he may file a bill of interpleader to compel the tax collectors, or towns, to settle the right between themselves, if there is no dispute about the amount of the tax, which he is to pay.<sup>1</sup> But if the amount is in dispute, and he seeks relief in respect thereto, there, the appropriate remedy is, (as we shall presently see,) a Bill in the nature of a Bill of Interpleader.<sup>2</sup>

§ 813. b. So, where a loss had occurred under a policy of insurance, underwritten for a person, who afterwards became insolvent, and assigned the policy, and there were various creditors, some of whom claimed on the ground of special liens, and others under the assignment, against the underwriters on the policy; it was held, that the latter might well be entitled to maintain a Bill of Interpleader, to compel the various creditors to ascertain and adjust their rights to the fund.<sup>3</sup> So, where there was a fund in the hands of an agent of a party, who had become insolvent, and there were various attaching creditors, as well as the assignees of the insolvent, claiming title to the same fund, it was held that a Bill of Interpleader will lie to ascertain and adjust their conflicting claims.<sup>4</sup> persons claim the same specific chattel or thing from a third person, upon the ground of title as owners, is not a matter perhaps settled by the authorities in a very precise manner.<sup>1</sup> In general, bills of this sort are brought by persons, standing in the situation of mere stake-holders, such as auctioneers, agents, factors, and consignees, between whom and the different claimants there is a privity of contract or duty.<sup>2</sup> In one case, where a banker, with whom public stock was deposited for safe custody by the owner, afterwards refused to deliver it up *to the owner, [*121] who was sued and imprisoned, under actions brought against him as a dormant partner in an insolvent mercantile house, and the banker was served with attachments by the plaintiffs in those actions, and also was held to bail in an action of trover by the owner, it was held to be a clear case for a bill of interpleader. In this case, however, all the parties claimed in privity under the same owner.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Where, upon a bill of interpleader, there is a priority in the different titles, not incompatible with each other, so that it is apparent on the bill or answers, in what order they are to be paid, there is no ground to require an interpleader. Bowyer v. Pritchard, 11 Price, R. 115. Mr. Baron Wood, in the same case, said, "I certainly cannot say, that I am very conversant with the doctrine of interpleader, as entertained in Courts of Equity." The meagre state of the materials to be found in the Reports leads to the conclusion, that the doctrine on this whole subject is not well defined. And I cannot but regret, that it is not in my power to give a more full and clear exposition of it.

§ 815. In another and later case, where a bill of interpleader was brought by the master of a ship against the consignee under a bill of lading, and also against a person, who insisted, that the master ought not to deliver the goods under the bill of lading, because the consignor had acted with fraud towards him, in making the consignment, it was doubted, whether the bill would lie. On that occasion it was said, that, although a master might file a bill of interpleader, where parties claimed adversely at law or in Equity under the bill of lading ; yet it might be doubted, whether the bill would lie, where the adverse claims were not under the bill of lading, but paramount to it. Delivery according to the bill of lading would fully justify the master ; and those, who alleged an equity, paramount to the bill of lading, and against the consignor, should assert it by a bill of their own.<sup>1</sup> But in a still later case, on further consideration, it was decided by the same Court, that the master might file such a bill, although [*122] the adverse claims were *paramount to the bill of lading ; as the right of possession in chattels may be in one person, and the right of property in another. In this case, also, it is to be remarked, that the bill does not seem to have been founded upon any legal adverse titles, wholly independent of each other, and not derived from a common source.<sup>2</sup>

claim the same property under independent titles, not derived from the same common source; the question would then arise, whether a third person, bonâ fide and lawfully in possession of the property, as the agent, consignee, or bailee of one of the parties, could maintain a bill of interpleader against the different claimants, standing in privity with one only of them. It would seem, that he could not; and that the analogies of the law and the doctrines of Courts of Equity equally prohibit it.<sup>1</sup>

§ 817. In the case here stated, the property is supposed to be lawfully in the hands of an agent of one of the claimants. Now, the settled rule of law, in such a case, is, that an agent shall not be allowed to dispute the title of his principal to property, which he has received from or for his principal; or to say, that he will hold it for the benefit of a stranger.<sup>2</sup> And this doctrine seems equally true in Equity also; for it has been held, that property, *put into the hands of an agent by his princi- [*123] pal under a bailment, is not the subject of an interpleader, upon the assertion of a claim to it by a third person against the agent; but the latter must deliver it to the principal, as his possession is the possession of the principal.<sup>3</sup> The like doctrine would prevail in favor of a third person, to whom the principal after the bailment had transferred the right to the property in the possession of the agent, where the transfer had been recognised and assented to by the agent. For, in such a case, the third person, by such transfer and assent, would, in respect to the agent, be treated as the principal.<sup>1</sup> Upon the same ground, it has been held, that, where one person receives money for another, as his agent, and the money is claimed by a third person, who gives notice of his claim, a bill of interpleader will not lie; for a mere agent to receive money for the use of another cannot by notice be converted into an implied trustee. His possession is the possession of his principal.<sup>2</sup>

§ 817. a. But this doctrine is to be taken with its proper qualifications. For, if the principal has created a lien on the funds in the hands of the agent, in favor of a third person, and the nature and extent of that lien is in controversy between the principal and such third person, there, the agent may, for his own protection, file a Bill of Interpleader, to compel them to litigate and adjust their respective titles to the fund.<sup>3</sup> So, if an agent has possession of a fund, and an equitable assignment or arrangement has been made between the party, entitled to the fund, and a third person, and a controversy subsequently arises between them respecting it, the same rule will apply.<sup>4</sup>

§ 818. A distinction has also been taken upon this subject between the case of a mere private agent or bailee, and that of a public agent or bailee. Thus, for instance, if a private warehouseman should receive goods, as agent of the principal, it is said, that he must account solely to the latter for them. But, if the goods are deposited in a public bonded warehouse, the warehouseman is treated as a public agent, holding the same for the person entitled to the goods. The ground for the distinction (if it is at all maintainable) would seem to be, the policy of protecting public agents in the discharge of their duty from the burthens of suits, in which they have no interest, and have undertaken no private trust ; and also the propriety of treating them, as they in reality are, merely as public depositaries or stake-holders, and not in any just sense as mere agents of the parties interested.<sup>1</sup>

§ 819. Another case may be put, where a person is in possession of property, as bailee, to which the bailor himself has no possessory title ; but he is a mere tortious possessor ; and the rightful owner *de- [*124] mands it of the bailee. In such a case, the question

<sup>1</sup> Cooper v. De Tastet, 1 Tamlyn, R. 171, 181. Lord Brougham, in commenting on the case of Cooper v. De Tastet, in Pearson v. Cardon, (2 Russ. & Mylne, 606, 609,) said ; “ And now, entirely adopting the doctrine of that case before the Master of the Rolls, though the Report must be incorrect, or that learned Judge has not in his judgment expressed himself with his usual very remarkable accuracy ; for, doubtless he there meant to point to the distinction between a party, who was, and a party, who was not agent, to the distinction between an agent and a mere stakeholder, and not to the distinction between a public and a private agent ; I have no hesitation in stating it to be clear law, that an agent cannot as an agent, if there be nothing to distinguish his situation from the common case, have a bill of interpleader against his principal.” Lord Cottenham, in Crawshay v. Thornton, 2 M. & Craig, 1, 22, seems to have doubted the soundness of the distinction.

may arise, whether he can compel bailor and the rightful owner to interplead with each other. Upon principle, it would seem, that he cannot; for not only is there no privity between him and the rightful owner; but he is himself liable to be deemed a wrongful possessor, if he should, after notice, withhold the property from the rightful owner.<sup>1</sup>

§ 820. The true doctrine would seem to be, that in cases of adverse independent titles, the party holding the property must defend himself, as well as he can, at law; and he is not entitled to the assistance of a Court of Equity; for that would be to assume the right to try merely legal titles, upon a controversy between different parties, where there is no privity of contract between them and the third person, who calls for an interpleader.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup> It is difficult to understand, what was the particular ground, upon which the Vice Chancellor held the case of Mason v. Hamilton, 5 Sim. R. 19, to be a plain case of interpleader. The wharfinger there was clearly a bailee of Livermore, and afterwards of Hamilton, to whom Livermore transferred the goods. But it does not appear, what was the title of Emmerson, Price & Co. to the goods; whether it was in privity with Livermore, or by a paramount and adverse title. And yet this might have been most material to the question, whether it was a case for an interpleader or not. This case has, since the former edition of this work, been commented on by Lord Cottenham, in Crawshay v. Thornton, (2 M. & Craig, 1, 23,) who treated it as no longer an authority upon the point of interpleader, not only upon its own circumstances, but also upon the subsequent deliberate opinion of the Vice Chancellor himself, in another case, that of Crawshay v. Thornton, 7 Sim. R. 391. The case of Pearson v. Cardon (4 Sim. R. 218) before the Vice Chancellor, also contains some language not unattended with difficulty. That was a case, where the plaintiffs, who were warehousemen, and with whom A. & Co. (of which firm B. was a partner,) had deposited some bags of wool, which were the goods in question. A. & Co. afterwards gave an order to the plaintiffs to transfer the goods to the name of B. and to be at his disposal, reserving the privilege of drawing samples from the wool in these bags. The plaintiffs accordingly transferred them in their books to B.; and then C., claiming them as owner, and as having put them into the hands of A. &

§ 821. A bill of interpleader cannot be maintained by any person, who does not admit a title in two claimants, and does not also show, two claimants in existence, capable of interpleading.<sup>1</sup> Thus, a sheriff, who seizes goods on execution, cannot sue a bill of interpleader upon account of adverse claims *exist- [*125] ing to the property ; for, as to one of the defendants, he necessarily admits himself to be a wrongdoer.<sup>2</sup> It is essential, also, in every bill of interpleader, that the plaintiff should show, that each of the defendants claims a right, and such a right, as they may interplead for ; for otherwise both the defendants may demur ; the one, because the bill shows no claim of right against him ; the other, because the

Co. as his agents, gave notice of his title thereto, and denied the title of B., and offered an indemnity against B's title. The plaintiffs brought a Bill of Interpleader ; and it was held by the Vice Chancellor, that the Bill was maintainable, admitting the plaintiffs to be the agents of A. & Co. ; for here there was a claim made by C. under a paramount title. This language would seem to intimate, that an agent might maintain a Bill of Interpleader against his principal, and a third person claiming by a paramount title. When the same case came before the Lord Chancellor, (Lord Brougham) he affirmed the decree upon the special ground of the reservation as to the samples, (2 Russ. & Mylne, 606.) But he expressly held, as we have seen, (ante, § 818, note,) that an agent, as such, could not maintain a Bill of Interpleader upon the ground of a claim by a stranger under a paramount title. In the case of Crawshay v. Thornton, (2 Mylne & Craig, 1, 23,) in which the decision of the Vice Chancellor in Pearson v. Cardon was cited, Lord Cottenham said, that there must be some mistake in the Report ; for Interpleader, as between agent and principal, was admissible, only where the claim was under a derivative, and not under an adverse title. Ibid. p. 23. The cases of Pearson v. Cardon, 2 Russ. & Mylne, 606, 609, 610, and Crawshay v. Thornton, 2 Mylne & Craig, 1, 22, 23, 24, have now settled the doctrine precisely as it is laid down in the text.

§ 822. From the language used in some of the authorities it might perhaps be thought that, in cases of bills of interpleader, Courts of Equity had authority only to order the defendants to interplead at law. This would certainly be a very erroneous view of the jurisdiction. Indeed, it has been so rare, that interpleading bills have gone to a decree, that some doubts have been entertained, as to what is the proper course. The result, upon a full examination of the subject, will be found to be, that Courts of Equity dispose of questions, arising upon bills of interpleader, in various modes, according to the nature of the question, and the manner, in which it is brought before the Court. An interpleading bill is considered as putting the defend- [*126] ants to contest their respective *claims, just as a bill does, which is brought by an executor or trustee to obtain the direction of the Court upon the adverse claims of different defendants. If, therefore, at the hearing, the question between the defendants is ripe for decision, the Court will decide it. And, if it is not ripe for decision, the Court will direct an issue, or a reference to a Master, to ascertain contested facts, as may be best suited to the nature of the case.<sup>2</sup> Indeed, an issue, or a direction to interplead at law, would be obviously improper in all cases, except those, where the titles on each side are purely legal. Equitable titles can only be disposed of by Courts of Equity; and, even as to legal titles, it is obvious, that in many cases a resort to an issue, or an interpleader, to be had at law, would be unnecessary, or inexpedient.

§ 823. The remedy by bill of interpleader, although it has cured many defects in the proceedings at law, has yet left many cases of hardship unprovided for. No attempt has been made in America, (as far as I know) to remedy these grievances. But in England an Act of Parliament, recently passed, has given a far more expanded reach to the remedy of interpleader in the Courts of Law, and extended its benefits to many cases of honest but unavoidably doubtful litigation.<sup>1</sup> The jurisdiction in Equity *seems, however, to [* 127] have been left substantially upon its old foundations.

§ 824. But although a bill of interpleader, strictly so called, lies only, where the party applying claims an interest in the subject-matter ; yet there are many cases, where a bill, in the nature of a bill of inter-

<sup>1</sup> The Act is the Stat. of 1 and 2 Will. IV. ch. 58. It recites, that it often happens, that a person, sued at law for the recovery of money or goods, wherein he has no interest, and which are also claimed of him by some third party, has no means of relieving himself from such adverse claims, but by a suit in Equity against the plaintiff and such third party, usually called a bill of interpleader. It then enacts, that upon application of a defendant, sued in the Courts of Law in any action of assumpsit, debt, detinue, or trover, showing, that the defendant does not claim any interest in the subject-matter of the suit ; but that the right thereto is claimed or supposed to belong to some third party, who has sued or is expected to sue for the same ; and that such defendant does not in any manner collude with such third party, but is ready to bring the money into Court, &c., the Court may make an order on such third party to appear and state his claim, &c. And powers are given to the Courts to direct an issue to try the same. See 2 Chitty's General Practice, ch. 5, § 3, p. 342, 343, 344.

pleader, will lie by a party in interest, to ascertain and establish his own rights, where there are other conflicting rights between third persons. As, for instance, if a plaintiff is entitled to equitable relief against the owner of property, and the legal title thereto is in dispute between two or more persons, so that he cannot ascertain, to which it actually belongs, he may file a bill against the several claimants in the nature of a bill of interpleader for relief.<sup>1</sup> So, it seems, that a purchaser may file a bill, in the nature of a bill of interpleader, against the vendor or his assignee and any creditor, who seeks to avoid the title of the assignee, and pray the direction of the Court, as to whom the purchase money shall be paid.<sup>2</sup> So, if a mortgagor wishes to redeem the mortgaged estate, and there are conflicting claims between third persons, as to their title to the mortgage money, he may bring them before the Court, to ascertain their rights, and to have a decree for a redemption, and to make a secure payment to the party entitled to the money.<sup>3</sup> In these cases, the plaintiff seeks relief for himself; whereas in an interpleading bill, strictly so called, the plaintiff only asks, that he may be at liberty to pay the money, or deliver the property to the party, to whom it of right belongs, and

This same doctrine would apply to a case, where a person was taxed in two towns for the same property, and did not know, to which town the tax should properly belong; and asked by his bill to have the amount of tax with which he was chargeable, as well as the persons, to whom it was payable, ascertained. *Ibid. may thereafter be protected against the claims of both.<sup>1</sup> In the latter case the only decree, to which the plaintiff is entitled, is a decree, that the bill is properly filed ; *or, in other words, that he shall be at liberty [*128] to pay the money, or bring the property into Court, and have his costs ; and that the defendants interplead, and settle the conflicting claims between themselves.<sup>2</sup> So, a bill, in the nature of an interpleading bill, will lie by a bank, which has offered a reward for the recovery of money stolen, and a proportionate reward for a part recovered, where there are several claimants of the reward, or a proportion thereof, one or more of whom have sued the bank. And in such a bill all the claimants may be made parties, in order to have their respective claims adjusted.<sup>3</sup>

CHAPTER XXI.

BILLS QUIA TIMET.

§ 825. IN the next place let us proceed to the consideration of another class of cases, where the peculiar remedies administered by Courts of Equity constitute the principal, though not the sole ground of jurisdiction; and that is, BILLS QUIA TIMET. We have already had occasion, in another place, to explain in some measure the nature of these bills and the origin of the appellation; and to show their application to cases of covenants and contracts with sureties and others, where a specific performance is necessary to prevent future mischief.<sup>1</sup> They are called (as we have seen) Bills quia timet, in analogy to certain writs of the Common Law, whose objects are of a similar nature. Lord Coke has explained this matter very clearly in his Commentary on Littleton. "And note, (says he,) that there be six writs in law, that may be maintained, quia timet, before any molestation, distress, or impleading. As, (1.) A man may have a Writ of Mesne, (whereof Littleton here speaks,) before he be distrained. (2.) A Warrantia Chartæ, before he be impleaded. (3.) A Monstraverunt, before any distress or vexation. (4.) An Audita Querela, before any execution sued. (5.) A Curia Claudenda, before any default of inclosure. (6.) A Ne injuste vexes, before any distress or molestation. And these be called Brevia anticipantia, writs of prevention.”<sup>1</sup>

§ 826. Now, Bills in Equity quia timet answer precisely to this latter description. They are in the nature of writs of prevention to accomplish the ends of precautionary justice. They are ordinarily applied to prevent wrongs or anticipated mischiefs, and not merely to redress them when done. The party seeks the aid of a Court of Equity, because he fears (quia timet) some future probable injury to his rights or interests; and not because an injury has already occurred, which requires any compensation or other relief. The manner, in which this aid is given by Courts of Equity, is of course dependent upon circumstances. They interfere sometimes by the appointment of a receiver to receive rents, or other income; sometimes by an order to pay a pecuniary fund into Court; sometimes by directing security to be given, or money paid over; and sometimes by the mere issuing of an injunction or other remedial process; thus adapting their relief to the precise nature of the particular case, and the remedial justice required by it.<sup>2</sup>

§ 827. In regard to equitable property, the jurisdiction is equally applicable to cases, where there is a present right of enjoyment, and to cases, where the right of enjoyment is future, or contingent. The object of the bill in all such cases is to secure the preservation of the property to its appropriate uses and ends; and wherever there is danger of its being converted to other purposes, or diminished, or lost by gross negligence, the interference of a Court of Equity becomes indispensable. It will accordingly take the [*131] *fund into its own hands, or secure its due management and appropriation, either by the agency of its own officers, or otherwise. Thus, for instance, if property in the hands of a trustee for certain specific uses or trusts (either express or implied) is in danger of being diverted or squandered, to the injury of any claimant, having a present or future fixed title thereto, the administration will be duly secured by the Court according to the original purposes, in such a manner, as the Court may, in its discretion, under all the circumstances, deem best fitted to the end; as by the appointment of a receiver; or by payment of the fund, if pecuniary, into Court; or by requiring security for its due preservation and appropriation.<sup>1</sup>

§ 828. The same principle is applied to the cases of executors and administrators, who are treated as trustees of the personal estate of the deceased party. If there is danger of waste of the estate, or collusion between the debtors of the estate and the executors or administrators, whereby the assets may be subtracted, Courts of Equity will interfere and secure the fund; and in the case of collusion with debtors they will order the latter to pay the amount of their debts into Court.<sup>2</sup> rected, is made for the benefit and on behalf of all the parties in interest, and not for the benefit of the plaintiff, or of one defendant only.<sup>1</sup> It may be *granted in any case of equitable property [*132] upon suitable circumstances. And where there are creditors, annuitants, and others, some of whom are creditors at law, claiming under judgments, and others are creditors, claiming upon equitable debts; if the property be of such a nature, that, if legal, it may be taken in execution, it may, if equitable, be put into the possession of a receiver, to hold the same and apply the profits under the direction of the Court, for the benefit of all the parties, according to their respective rights and priorities.<sup>2</sup> The same rule applies to cases, where the property is legal, and judgment creditors have taken possession of it under writs of elegit; for it is competent for the Court to appoint a receiver in favor of annuitants and equitable creditors, not disturbing the just prior rights, if any, of the judgment creditors.<sup>3</sup> Hence, the appointment of a receiver, in cases of this sort, is often called an equitable execution.<sup>4</sup>

§ 830. It has been said that the general rule of Equity, to appoint a receiver for an equitable creditor against a person, having an equitable estate, without prejudice to persons, who have prior estates, is to be understood in this limited sense, that it is to be without prejudice to persons having prior legal estates, and so that it will not prevent their proceeding to obtain possession, if they think proper. And with regard to persons having prior equitable estates, the Court will [*133] take *care, in appointing a receiver, not to disturb their prior equities ; and for that purpose it will direct inquiries to determine the priorities among equitable incumbrancers ; permitting legal creditors to act against the estates at law ; and settling the priorities of equitable creditors.<sup>1</sup>

§ 831. The appointment of a receiver is a matter, resting in the sound discretion of the Court ;<sup>2</sup> and the receiver, when appointed, is treated as virtually an officer and representative of the Court, and subject to its orders.<sup>3</sup> Lord Hardwicke considered this power of appointment to be of great importance and most beneficial tendency ; and he significantly said ; “ It is a discretionary power, exercised by the Court, with as great utility to the subject, as any authority, which belongs to it ; and it is provisional only, for the more speedy getting in of a party’s estate, and securing it for the benefit of such person, who shall appear to be entitled ; and it does not at all affect the right.”<sup>4</sup>

scope of these Commentaries. As, however, the equitable rights and incidents to such an appointment are often highly important to the parties in interest, and may affect the rights and remedies of third persons, having adverse claims, it will be *proper, [*134] in this place, to state some of the principles, by which this discretion is regulated.

§ 833. Before doing so, it may not be without use to suggest, what some of those rights and incidents are; and the more so, as similar rights and incidents belong to cases of sequestration.<sup>1</sup> In the first place, upon the appointment of a receiver of the rents and profits of real estate, if there are tenants in possession of the premises, they are compellable to attorn; and the Court thus becomes virtually, pro hac vice, the landlord.<sup>2</sup> In the next place, the appointment of such a receiver is generally deemed to entitle him to possession of the premises. It does not, indeed, in all cases, amount to a turning of the other party out of possession; for, in many cases, as in the case of an infant's estate, the receiver's possession is that of the infant. But where the rights are adverse in the different parties in the suit, the possession of the receiver is treated, as the possession of the party, who ultimately establishes his right to it.<sup>3</sup> The receiver, however, cannot proceed in any ejectment against the tenants, except by the authority of the Court.<sup>4</sup> In the next place, a receiver, when in possession, has very little discretion allowed him ; but he must apply from time to time to the Court for authority to do such acts, as may be beneficial to the estate. Thus, he is not at liberty to bring or to defend actions ; or to let the estate ; [* 135] *or to lay out money ; unless by the special leave of the Court.<sup>1</sup> In the next place, when such a receiver is in possession under the process or authority of the Court, in execution of a decree or decretal order, his possession is not to be disturbed, even by an ejectment under an adverse title, without the leave of the Court. For his possession is deemed the possession of the Court ; and the Court will not permit itself to be made a suitor in a Court of Law.<sup>2</sup> The proper and usual mode, adopted under such circumstances, is, for the party, claiming an adverse interest, to apply to the Court, to be permitted to come in, and be examined pro interesse suo. He is then allowed to go before the Master, and to state his title, upon which he may, in the first instance, have the judgment of the Master, and ultimately, if necessary, that of the Court. And where the question to be tried is a pure matter of title, which can be tried in an ejectment, the Court, from a sense of convenience and justice, will generally authorize such a suit to be brought, taking care, however, to protect the possession by giving proper directions.<sup>3</sup> 1

have already seen, that, in cases of elegit and conflicting legal and equitable debts and rights upon the estate, it is a common course to appoint a receiver for the benefit of all concerned.<sup>1</sup> In cases, *also, [* 136] where an estate is held by a party under a title obtained by fraud, actual or constructive, a receiver will be appointed.<sup>2</sup>

§ 835. But it is not infrequent for a bill quia timet to ask for the appointment of a receiver against a party, who is rightfully in possession, or who is entitled to the possession of the fund, or who has an interest in its due administration. In such cases, Courts of Equity will pay a just respect to such legal and equitable rights and interests of the possessor of the fund, and will not withdraw it from him by the appointment of a receiver, unless the facts, averred and established in proof, show, that there has been an abuse, or a danger of abuse, on his own part. For the rule of such Courts is, not to displace a bonâ fide possessor from any of the just rights attached to his title, unless there be some equitable ground for interference.<sup>3</sup>

§ 836. This principle may be easily illustrated in the common case of executors and administrators. They are by law entrusted with authority to collect and administer the assets of the deceased party ; and Courts of Equity will not interfere with their management and administration of such assets upon slight grounds. Whenever, therefore, the appointment of a receiver is sought against an executor or administrator, it is necessary to establish by suitable proofs, that there is some positive loss, or danger of loss, of the funds ; as, for instance, some waste or misapplication of the funds, or some apprehended danger from the bankruptcy, [* 137] insolvency, or personal fraud, misconduct, *or negligence of the executor or administrator.<sup>1</sup> Mere poverty of the party will not, of itself, constitute a sufficient ground ; but there must be other ingredients to justify the appointment.<sup>2</sup>

§ 837. So, where there are several incumbrances on an estate, as the first incumbrancer is entitled to the possession of the estate and the receipt of the rents and profits, a Court of Equity will not deprive him of such possession and profits, unless upon sufficient cause shown.<sup>3</sup> But if the first incumbrancer is not in possession, and does not desire it ; or if he has been paid off ; or if he refuses to receive what is due to him ; there, a receiver may be appointed, upon the application of a subsequent incumbrancer.<sup>4</sup> But in all cases of this sort, where the Court acts in favor of subsequent incumbrancers, it is cautious in thus interfering not to disturb any prior rights or equities ; and, therefore, before it acts finally, it will endeavor to ascertain the priorities and equities of all the incumbrancers ; and then it will apply the funds, which are received, according to such priorities and equities, in case the incumbrancers entitled thereto shall make a seasonable application for the purpose.<sup>5</sup>

§ 838. So, where the tenants of particular estates for life, or in tail, neglect to keep down the interest, due upon incumbrances upon the estates, Courts of Equity will appoint a receiver to receive the rents and profits, in order to keep down the interest ; for this is but a mere act of justice to the incumbrancers, and also to those, who may be otherwise interested in the estates.<sup>1</sup> But, here, again, it is to be remembered, that the Court will not force incumbrancers to receive their interest ; and therefore, if they would avail themselves of the privileges of receiving their interest, they must make a seasonable application for the purpose.<sup>2</sup>

§ 839. But although Courts of Equity will not appoint a receiver, except upon special grounds, justifying such an interference, in the nature of a bill quia timet ; yet there are cases, in which it will interpose, and require money to be paid into Court by a party, who stands in the relation of a trustee to the property, without any ground being laid to show, that there has been any abuse, or any danger to the fund.<sup>3</sup> Thus, in cases of bills brought by creditors, or legatees, or distributees against executors or administrators for a settlement of the estate, if the executors or administrators by their answers admit assets in their hands, and the Court takes *upon itself a settlement of [* 139] the estate, it will direct the assets to be paid into Court.<sup>4</sup>

of the estate in the hands of a banker, avowedly as assets. In such cases, upon the application of a party in interest, as, for instance, of a creditor or a legatee, the banker will be directed to pay the money into Court; for it is a rule in Equity to follow trust money, whenever it may be found in the hands of any person, who has not primâ facie a right to hold it, and to order him to bring it into Court. And this may be done even without making the executor or administrator a party to the suit; especially if there be a doubt of the safety of the fund.<sup>1</sup>

§ 841. The general rule, upon which Courts of Equity proceed, in requiring money to be paid into Court, is this; that the party, who is entitled to the fund, is also entitled to have it secured. And this rule is equally applicable to cases, where the plaintiffs, seeking the payment, are solely entitled to the whole fund, and to cases, where they have acquired in the whole fund such an interest, together with others, as entitles them, on their own behalf and the behalf of others, to have the fund secured in Court.<sup>2</sup> Now, this [*140] is precisely the case in what is *commonly called a creditor's bill for the administration of an estate.<sup>3</sup>

§ 842. And Courts of Equity will, in cases of this sort, not only order money to be paid into Court; but they will also direct, that papers and writings in the hands of executors and administrators shall be deposited with a Master for the benefit of those interested, unless there are other purposes, which require, that they should be retained in the hands of the executors or administrators.<sup>1</sup>

§ 843. The preceding remarks are principally (but not exclusively) applicable to cases of equitable property, whether the right of enjoyment thereof be present, or future, or contingent. In regard to legal property, it is obvious, that, where the right of enjoyment is present, the legal remedies will be generally found sufficient for the protection and vindication of that right. But where the right of enjoyment is future or contingent, the party entitled is often without any adequate remedy at law for any injury, which he may in the mean time sustain by the loss, destruction, or deterioration of the property in the hands of the party, who is entitled to the present possession of it. Thus, for instance, if personal property should be given by a will to A for life, and after his death to B ; there is (as we have seen) at law no remedy to secure the legacy to B, whether it be of specific chattels, or of a pecuniary nature.<sup>2</sup>

§ 844. Indeed, by the ancient Common Law, there could in general be no future property, to take place in expectancy, created in personal goods *and chattels ; for they were considered of so [*141] transitory a nature, and so liable to be lost, destroyed, or otherwise impaired, that future interests in them were not in the law treated as of any account.<sup>3</sup> An exception was permitted at an early period, as to goods and chattels given by will in remainder, after a bequest for life. But that was at first allowed only, where the use of the goods or chattels and not the goods or chattels themselves was given to the first legatee, the property being supposed to continue all the time in the executor of the testator.<sup>1</sup> That distinction has since been disregarded; and the limitation in remainder is now equally respected, whether the first legatee takes the use, or the goods and chattels themselves for life.<sup>2</sup>

[*142] *§ 845. In all cases of this sort, where there is a future right of enjoyment of personal property, Courts of Equity will now interpose and grant relief upon a bill quia timet, where there is any danger of loss or deterioration, or injury to it, in the hands of the party, who is entitled to the present possession. We have already

This subject is discussed very much at large in Mr. Fearne's Essay on Contingent Remainders and Executory Devises, from p. 401 to 407, (7th edition,) by Butler. There is in the same work a very valuable discussion upon the rights of the tenant for life in the goods and chattels, and how far the same may be taken in execution by his creditors. The result of the whole discussion seems to be, that the creditors cannot subject the property to their claims beyond the rights of the tenant for life therein. Mr. Fearne seems to consider, that the validity of executory dispositions of personal chattels (i. e. in remainder after a life estate,) was originally founded, and still rests on the doctrine and interposition of Courts of Equity. But he admits, that, in chattels real, the right is recognised at law. Fearne on Conting. Rem. p. 412, 413, 7th edit.; Mathew Manning's case, 8 Co. R. 95; Lampett's case, 10 Co. R. 47. had occasion to take notice of the manner, in which this remedial jurisdiction is applied in cases of legacies, whether pecuniary or specific, and whether vested or contingent.<sup>1</sup> The same doctrine is applied to cases of annuities charged on the personal estate.<sup>2</sup>

§ 846. The same remedial justice will be applied to other cases, as well as to legacies and personal annuities. Thus, for instance, where a future interest in personal property is assigned by the owner to his creditors; the latter may come into a Court of Equity to have the property secured to their future use.<sup>3</sup> On one occasion of this sort, Lord Hardwicke said, that nothing was better settled, than that "wherever a demand was made out of assets certainly due, but payable at a future time, the person entitled thereto might come against the executor to have it secured for his benefit, and set apart in the mean time, that he might not be obliged to pursue those assets through several hands. Nor is there any ground for the distinction taken between a legacy and a demand by contract."<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Flight v. Cook, 2 Ves. 619 ; Post, § 955. This doctrine is discussed at large in 1 Eq. Abridg. 360, pl. 4 ; and the following extract shows the gradual establishment of it. " But what seems most proper to be inquired into under this head, is ; the reason and practice of limiting remainders in personal goods or chattels ; for they in their own nature seem incapable of such a limitation, because being things transitory, and by many accidents subject to be lost, destroyed or otherwise impaired ; and also the exigences of trade and commerce requiring a frequent circulation thereof, it would put a stop to all trading, and occasion perpetual suits and quarrels, if such limitations were generally tolerated and allowed. But yet in last wills and testaments, such limitations over of personal goods or chattels have sometimes prevailed, especially where the first devisee had only the use or occupation thereof devised to him. For then they held the property to continue in the executors of the testator, and that the first devisee had no power to alter or take it from them. Yet, in either case, if the first devisee did actually give, grant, or sell such personal goods or chattels, the judges would very rarely allow of actions to be brought by those in remainder for recovery thereof. Hence it came to pass, that it was a long while, ere the judges of the Common Law could be prevailed on to have any regard for a devise over, even of a chattel real, or a term for years after an estate for life limited thereon ; because the estate for life being in the eye of the law of greater regard and consideration, than an estate for years, they thought, he, who had it devised to him for life, had therein included all that the deviser had a power to dispose of. And though they have now gained that point upon the ancient Common Law, by establishing such remainders, and have thereby brought that branch out of the Chancery, (where they frequently helped the remainder-man, by allowing of bills to compel the first devisee to give security) ; yet it was at first introduced into the Common Law, under the new name of Executory Devise, and took all the sanction it has since received from thence, and not as a remainder, (for which vide title Devise). But as to personal goods and chattels, the Common Law has provided no sufficient remedy for the devisee in the remainder of them, either during the life of the first devisee, or after his death ; therefore, the Chancery seems to have taken that branch to themselves in lieu of the other, which they lost, and to allow of the same remedy for such devisee in remainder of personal goods and chattels, as they before did to the devisee in remainder of chattels real, or terms for years." See also Fearne on Conting. Rem. and Ex. Dev. p. 401 to 415, by Butler, 7th edit. Ante, § 843, 844 ; Bacon Abridg. Uses and Trusts, G. 2, by Gwillim.

§ 848. So, where a party seised of lands in fee grants a rent charge in fee issuing thereout, and afterwards devises the lands to A for life, with remainder to B in fee; B may maintain a bill quia timet to compel A to pay the arrears during [144*] his life, for fear, that otherwise the whole would fall on his reversionary estate.<sup>1</sup> And the like principle would apply, under like circumstances, to a legacy payable in futuro and chargeable on land, to compel the tenant for life to pay or secure a proportion of the legacy.<sup>2</sup>

§ 849. Another case of the application of the remedial justice of Courts of Equity by a bill quia timet is in cases of sureties of debtors and others. We have already seen, that if a surety, after the debt has become due, has any apprehension of loss or injury from the delay of the creditor to enforce the debt against the principal debtor, he may file a bill of this sort to compel the debtor to discharge the debt or other obligation, for which the surety is responsible.<sup>3</sup> Nay, it has been insisted, (as we *have also seen) that the surety may come into [*145] Equity and compel the creditor to sue the principal, and collect the debt from him in discharge of the surety, at least, if the latter will undertake to indemnify the creditor for the risk, delay, and expense of the suit.<sup>4</sup>

§ 850. So, Courts of Equity will decree the specific performance of a general covenant to indemnify, although it sounds in damages only, upon the same principle, that they will entertain bill quia timet; and this, not only at the instance of the original covenantee, but of his executors and administrators.<sup>1</sup> Thus, where a party had assigned several shares of the excise to A, and the latter covenanted to save the assignor harmless in respect of that assignment, and, to stand in his place, touching the payments to the king and other matters, and afterwards the king sued the assignor for money, which the assignee ought to have paid; the Court decreed, that the agreement should be specifically performed, and referred it to a Master, and directed, that toties quoties any breach should happen, he should report the [*146] *same specially to the Court; so that the Court might, if there should be occasion, direct a trial at law in a quantum damnificatus. The Court farther decreed, that the assignee should clear the assignor from all these suits and incumbrances within a reasonable time.<sup>2</sup> The case was compared to that of a

Simpson* (6 Ves. 734), Lord Eldon seems to admit, that the surety might have a right to compel the creditor to proceed against the debtor under some circumstances. But, then, in such a case, the surety is compellable to deposit the money in Court for the payment of the creditor. So, that, in fact, it is but the case of an indirect subrogation to the rights of the creditor, upon a virtual payment of the debt by such a deposit. See Hayes v. Ward, 4 John. Ch. R. 129 to 134, where this subject is much discussed; and the principles of the Roman Law are fully stated.

counter bond, where, although the surety is not molested, or troubled for the debt, yet, after the money becomes payable, the Court will decree the principal to pay it.<sup>1</sup>

There are other cases, where a remedial justice is applied in the nature of bills quia timet; as where Courts of Equity interpose to prevent the waste, or destruction, or deterioration of property pendente lite, or to prevent irreparable mischief. ## CHAPTER XXII.

BILLS OF PEACE.

§ 852. WE come, in the next place, to the consideration of what are technically called BILLS OF PEACE.<sup>1</sup> These Bills sometimes bear a resemblance to Bills quia timet, which latter (as has been already stated) seem to have been founded upon analogy to certain proceedings at the Common Law, quia timet.<sup>2</sup> Bills quia timet, however are quite distinguishable from the former in several respects, and are always used as a preventive process, before a suit is actually instituted; whereas Bills of Peace, though sometimes brought before any suit is instituted to try a right, are most generally brought after the right has been tried at law. It is not my design, in this place, to enter upon the subject of the cases generally, in which Courts of Equity will decree a perpetual injunction; for that will more properly be examined under another head;<sup>3</sup> but simply to treat of bills seeking such an injunction, and strictly falling under the denomination of Bills of Peace.

§ 853. By a Bill of Peace we are to understand a bill brought by a person to establish and perpetuate a right, which he claims, and which, from its nature, may be controverted by different persons, at different times, and by different actions; or where separate attempts have already been unsuccessfully made to overthrow the same right, and justice requires, that the party should be quieted in the right, if it is already sufficiently established, or if it should be sufficiently established under the direction of the Court.<sup>1</sup> The obvious design of such a bill is to procure repose from perpetual litigation, and, therefore, it is justly called a Bill of Peace. The general doctrine of public policy, which, in some form or other, may be found in the jurisprudence of every civilized country, is, that an end ought to be put to litigation, and above all to fruitless litigation; Interest reipublicæ, ut sit finis Litium. If suits might be perpetually brought to litigate the same questions between the same parties or their privies, as often as either should choose, it is obvious, that remedial justice would soon become a mere mockery; for the termination of one suit would only become the signal for the institution of a new one; and the expenses might become ruinous to all the parties. The obvious ground of the jurisdiction of Courts of Equity in cases of this sort is, to suppress useless litigation, and to prevent multiplicity of suits.

§ 854. One class of cases, to which this remedial process is properly applied, is, where there is one general right to be established against a great number of persons. And it may be resorted to, either where one person claims or defends a right against many; or where many claim or defend a right against one.<sup>2</sup> In such cases, Courts of Equity

converted to other purposes, or diminished, or lost by gross negligence, the interference of a Court of Equity becomes indispensable. It will accordingly take the [*131] *fund into its own hands, or secure its due management and appropriation, either by the agency of its own officers, or otherwise. Thus, for instance, if property in the hands of a trustee for certain specific uses or trusts (either express or implied) is in danger of being diverted or squandered, to the injury of any claimant, having a present or future fixed title thereto, the administration will be duly secured by the Court according to the original purposes, in such a manner, as the Court may, in its discretion, under all the circumstances, deem best fitted to the end ; as by the appointment of a receiver ; or by payment of the fund, if pecuniary, into Court ; or by requiring security for its due preservation and appropriation.<sup>1</sup>

§ 828. The same principle is applied to the cases of executors and administrators, who are treated as trustees of the personal estate of the deceased party. If there is danger of waste of the estate, or collusion between the debtors of the estate and the executors or administrators, whereby the assets may be subtracted, Courts of Equity will interfere and secure the fund ; and in the case of collusion with debtors they will order the latter to pay the amount of their debts into Court.<sup>2</sup>

rected, is made for the benefit and on behalf of all the parties in interest, and not for the benefit of the plaintiff, or of one defendant only.<sup>1</sup> It may be *granted in any case of equitable property [*132] upon suitable circumstances. And where there are creditors, annuitants, and others, some of whom are creditors at law, claiming under judgments, and others are creditors, claiming upon equitable debts; if the property be of such a nature, that, if legal, it may be taken in execution, it may, if equitable, be put into the possession of a receiver, to hold the same and apply the profits under the direction of the Court, for the benefit of all the parties, according to their respective rights and priorities.<sup>2</sup> The same rule applies to cases, where the property is legal, and judgment creditors have taken possession of it under writs of elegit; for it is competent for the Court to appoint a receiver in favor of annuitants and equitable creditors, not disturbing the just prior rights, if any, of the judgment creditors.<sup>3</sup> Hence, the appointment of a receiver, in cases of this sort, is often called an equitable execution.<sup>4</sup>

to be understood in this limited sense, that it is to be without prejudice to persons having prior legal estates, and so that it will not prevent their proceeding to obtain possession, if they think proper. And with regard to persons having prior equitable estates, the Court will [*133] take *care, in appointing a receiver, not to disturb their prior equities ; and for that purpose it will direct inquiries to determine the priorities among equitable incumbrancers ; permitting legal creditors to act against the estates at law ; and settling the priorities of equitable creditors.<sup>1</sup>

§ 831. The appointment of a receiver is a matter, resting in the sound discretion of the Court ;<sup>2</sup> and the receiver, when appointed, is treated as virtually an officer and representative of the Court, and subject to its orders.<sup>3</sup> Lord Hardwicke considered this power of appointment to be of great importance and most beneficial tendency ; and he significantly said ; “It is a discretionary power, exercised by the Court, with as great utility to the subject, as any authority, which belongs to it ; and it is provisional only, for the more speedy getting in of a party’s estate, and securing it for the benefit of such person, who shall appear to be entitled ; and it does not at all affect the right.”<sup>4</sup>

scope of these Commentaries. As, however, the equitable rights and incidents to such an appointment are often highly important to the parties in interest, and may affect the rights and remedies of third persons, having adverse claims, it will be *proper, [*134] in this place, to state some of the principles, by which this discretion is regulated.

§ 833. Before doing so, it may not be without use to suggest, what some of those rights and incidents are; and the more so, as similar rights and incidents belong to cases of sequestration.<sup>1</sup> In the first place, upon the appointment of a receiver of the rents and profits of real estate, if there are tenants in possession of the premises, they are compellable to attorn; and the Court thus becomes virtually, pro hac vice, the landlord.<sup>2</sup> In the next place, the appointment of such a receiver is generally deemed to entitle him to possession of the premises. It does not, indeed, in all cases, amount to a turning of the other party out of possession; for, in many cases, as in the case of an infant's estate, the receiver's possession is that of the infant. But where the rights are adverse in the different parties in the suit, the possession of the receiver is treated, as the possession of the party, who ultimately establishes his right to it.<sup>3</sup> The receiver, however, cannot proceed in any ejectment against the tenants, except by the authority of the Court.<sup>4</sup> In the next place, a receiver, when in possession, has very little discretion allowed him ; but he must apply from time to time to the Court for authority to do such acts, as may be beneficial to the estate. Thus, he is not at liberty to bring or to defend actions ; or to let the estate ; [* 135] *or to lay out money ; unless by the special leave of the Court.<sup>1</sup> In the next place, when such a receiver is in possession under the process or authority of the Court, in execution of a decree or decretal order, his possession is not to be disturbed, even by an ejectment under an adverse title, without the leave of the Court. For his possession is deemed the possession of the Court ; and the Court will not permit itself to be made a suitor in a Court of Law.<sup>2</sup> The proper and usual mode, adopted under such circumstances, is, for the party, claiming an adverse interest, to apply to the Court, to be permitted to come in, and be examined pro interesse suo. He is then allowed to go before the Master, and to state his title, upon which he may, in the first instance, have the judgment of the Master, and ultimately, if necessary, that of the Court. And where the question to be tried is a pure matter of title, which can be tried in an ejectment, the Court, from a sense of convenience and justice, will generally authorize such a suit to be brought, taking care, however, to protect the possession by giving proper directions.<sup>3</sup> ¶

have already seen, that, in cases of elegit and conflicting legal and equitable debts and rights upon the estate, it is a common course to appoint a receiver for the benefit of all concerned.<sup>1</sup> In cases, *also, [* 136] where an estate is held by a party under a title obtained by fraud, actual or constructive, a receiver will be appointed.<sup>2</sup>

§ 835. But it is not infrequent for a bill quia timet to ask for the appointment of a receiver against a party, who is rightfully in possession, or who is entitled to the possession of the fund, or who has an interest in its due administration. In such cases, Courts of Equity will pay a just respect to such legal and equitable rights and interests of the possessor of the fund, and will not withdraw it from him by the appointment of a receiver, unless the facts, averred and established in proof, show, that there has been an abuse, or a danger of abuse, on his own part. For the rule of such Courts is, not to displace a bonâ fide possessor from any of the just rights attached to his title, unless there be some equitable ground for interference.<sup>3</sup>

§ 836. This principle may be easily illustrated in the common case of executors and administrators. They are by law entrusted with authority to collect and administer the assets of the deceased party ; and Courts of Equity will not interfere with their management and administration of such assets upon slight grounds. Whenever, therefore, the appointment of a receiver is sought against an executor or administrator, it is necessary to establish by suitable proofs, that there is some positive loss, or danger of loss, of the funds ; as, for instance, some waste or misapplication of the funds, or some apprehended danger from the bankruptcy, [* 137] insolvency, or personal fraud, misconduct, *or negligence of the executor or administrator.<sup>1</sup> Mere poverty of the party will not, of itself, constitute a sufficient ground ; but there must be other ingredients to justify the appointment.<sup>2</sup>

§ 837. So, where there are several incumbrances on an estate, as the first incumbrancer is entitled to the possession of the estate and the receipt of the rents and profits, a Court of Equity will not deprive him of such possession and profits, unless upon sufficient cause shown.<sup>3</sup> But if the first incumbrancer is not in possession, and does not desire it ; or if he has been paid off ; or if he refuses to receive what is due to him ; there, a receiver may be appointed, upon the application of a subsequent incumbrancer.<sup>4</sup> But in all cases of this sort, where the Court acts in favor of subsequent incumbrancers, it is cautious in thus interfering not to disturb any prior rights or equities ; and, therefore, before it acts finally, it will endeavor to ascertain the priorities and equities of all the incumbrancers ; and then it will apply the funds, which are received, according to such priorities and equities, in case the incumbrancers entitled thereto shall make a seasonable application for the purpose.<sup>5</sup>

§ 838. So, where the tenants of particular estates for life, or in tail, neglect to keep down the interest, due upon incumbrances upon the estates, Courts of Equity will appoint a receiver to receive the rents and profits, in order to keep down the interest ; for this is but a mere act of justice to the incumbrancers, and also to those, who may be otherwise interested in the estates.<sup>1</sup> But, here, again, it is to be remembered, that the Court will not force incumbrancers to receive their interest ; and therefore, if they would avail themselves of the privileges of receiving their interest, they must make a seasonable application for the purpose.<sup>2</sup>

§ 839. But although Courts of Equity will not appoint a receiver, except upon special grounds, justifying such an interference, in the nature of a bill quia timet ; yet there are cases, in which it will interpose, and require money to be paid into Court by a party, who stands in the relation of a trustee to the property, without any ground being laid to show, that there has been any abuse, or any danger to the fund.<sup>3</sup> Thus, in cases of bills brought by creditors, or legatees, or distributees against executors or administrators for a settlement of the estate, if the executors or administrators by their answers admit assets in their hands, and the Court takes *upon itself a settlement of [* 139] the estate, it will direct the assets to be paid into Court.<sup>4</sup>

of the estate in the hands of a banker, avowedly as assets. In such cases, upon the application of a party in interest, as, for instance, of a creditor or a legatee, the banker will be directed to pay the money into Court; for it is a rule in Equity to follow trust money, whenever it may be found in the hands of any person, who has not primâ facie a right to hold it, and to order him to bring it into Court. And this may be done even without making the executor or administrator a party to the suit; especially if there be a doubt of the safety of the fund.<sup>1</sup>

§ 841. The general rule, upon which Courts of Equity proceed, in requiring money to be paid into Court, is this; that the party, who is entitled to the fund, is also entitled to have it secured. And this rule is equally applicable to cases, where the plaintiffs, seeking the payment, are solely entitled to the whole fund, and to cases, where they have acquired in the whole fund such an interest, together with others, as entitles them, on their own behalf and the behalf of others, to have the fund secured in Court.<sup>2</sup> Now, this [*140] is precisely the case in what is *commonly called a creditor's bill for the administration of an estate.<sup>3</sup>

§ 842. And Courts of Equity will, in cases of this sort, not only order money to be paid into Court; but they will also direct, that papers and writings in the hands of executors and administrators shall be deposited with a Master for the benefit of those interested, unless there are other purposes, which require, that they should be retained in the hands of the executors or administrators.<sup>1</sup>

§ 843. The preceding remarks are principally (but not exclusively) applicable to cases of equitable property, whether the right of enjoyment thereof be present, or future, or contingent. In regard to legal property, it is obvious, that, where the right of enjoyment is present, the legal remedies will be generally found sufficient for the protection and vindication of that right. But where the right of enjoyment is future or contingent, the party entitled is often without any adequate remedy at law for any injury, which he may in the mean time sustain by the loss, destruction, or deterioration of the property in the hands of the party, who is entitled to the present possession of it. Thus, for instance, if personal property should be given by a will to A for life, and after his death to B ; there is (as we have seen) at law no remedy to secure the legacy to B, whether it be of specific chattels, or of a pecuniary nature.<sup>2</sup>

§ 844. Indeed, by the ancient Common Law, there could in general be no future property, to take place in expectancy, created in personal goods *and chattels ; for they were considered of so [*141] transitory a nature, and so liable to be lost, destroyed, or otherwise impaired, that future interests in them were not in the law treated as of any account.<sup>3</sup> An exception was permitted at an early

§ 822. From the language used in some of the authorities it might perhaps be thought that, in cases of bills of interpleader, Courts of Equity had authority only to order the defendants to interplead at law. This would certainly be a very erroneous view of the jurisdiction. Indeed, it has been so rare, that interpleading bills have gone to a decree, that some doubts have been entertained, as to what is the proper course. The result, upon a full examination of the subject, will be found to be, that Courts of Equity dispose of questions, arising upon bills of interpleader, in various modes, according to the nature of the question, and the manner, in which it is brought before the Court. An interpleading bill is considered as putting the defend- [*126] ants to contest their respective *claims, just as a bill does, which is brought by an executor or trustee to obtain the direction of the Court upon the adverse claims of different defendants. If, therefore, at the hearing, the question between the defendants is ripe for decision, the Court will decide it. And, if it is not ripe for decision, the Court will direct an issue, or a reference to a Master, to ascertain contested facts, as may be best suited to the nature of the case.<sup>2</sup> Indeed, an issue, or a direction to interplead at law, would be obviously improper in all cases, except those, where the titles on each side are purely legal. Equitable titles can only be disposed of by Courts of Equity; and, even as to legal titles, it is obvious, that in many cases a resort to an issue, or an interpleader, to be had at law, would be unnecessary, or inexpedient.

§ 823. The remedy by bill of interpleader, although it has cured many defects in the proceedings at law, has yet left many cases of hardship unprovided for. No attempt has been made in America, (as far as I know) to remedy these grievances. But in England an Act of Parliament, recently passed, has given a far more expanded reach to the remedy of interpleader in the Courts of Law, and extended its benefits to many cases of honest but unavoidably doubtful litigation.<sup>1</sup> The jurisdiction in Equity *seems, however, to [* 127] have been left substantially upon its old foundations.

§ 824. But although a bill of interpleader, strictly so called, lies only, where the party applying claims an interest in the subject-matter ; yet there are many cases, where a bill, in the nature of a bill of inter-

<sup>1</sup> The Act is the Stat. of 1 and 2 Will. IV. ch. 58. It recites, that it often happens, that a person, sued at law for the recovery of money or goods, wherein he has no interest, and which are also claimed of him by some third party, has no means of relieving himself from such adverse claims, but by a suit in Equity against the plaintiff and such third party, usually called a bill of interpleader. It then enacts, that upon application of a defendant, sued in the Courts of Law in any action of ~~assumpsit~~, debt, detinue, or trover, showing, that the defendant does not claim any interest in the subject-matter of the suit ; but that the right thereto is claimed or supposed to belong to some third party, who has sued or is expected to sue for the same ; and that such defendant does not in any manner collude with such third party, but is ready to bring the money into Court, &c., the Court may make an order on such third party to appear and state his claim, &c. And powers are given to the Courts to direct an issue to try the same. See 2 Chitty's General Practice, ch. 5, § 3, p. 342, 343, 344.

pleader, will lie by a party in interest, to ascertain and establish his own rights, where there are other conflicting rights between third persons. As, for instance, if a plaintiff is entitled to equitable relief against the owner of property, and the legal title thereto is in dispute between two or more persons, so that he cannot ascertain, to which it actually belongs, he may file a bill against the several claimants in the nature of a bill of interpleader for relief.<sup>1</sup> So, it seems, that a purchaser may file a bill, in the nature of a bill of interpleader, against the vendor or his assignee and any creditor, who seeks to avoid the title of the assignee, and pray the direction of the Court, as to whom the purchase money shall be paid.<sup>2</sup> So, if a mortgagor wishes to redeem the mortgaged estate, and there are conflicting claims between third persons, as to their title to the mortgage money, he may bring them before the Court, to ascertain their rights, and to have a decree for a redemption, and to make a secure payment to the party entitled to the money.<sup>3</sup> In these cases, the plaintiff seeks relief for himself; whereas in an interpleading bill, strictly so called, the plaintiff only asks, that he may be at liberty to pay the money, or deliver the property to the party, to whom it of right belongs, and

This same doctrine would apply to a case, where a person was taxed in two towns for the same property, and did not know, to which town the tax should properly belong; and asked by his bill to have the amount of tax with which he was chargeable, as well as the persons, to whom it was payable, ascertained. *Ibid. may thereafter be protected against the claims of both.<sup>1</sup> In the latter case the only decree, to which the plaintiff is entitled, is a decree, that the bill is properly filed ; *or, in other words, that he shall be at liberty [*128] to pay the money, or bring the property into Court, and have his costs ; and that the defendants interplead, and settle the conflicting claims between themselves.<sup>2</sup> So, a bill, in the nature of an interpleading bill, will lie by a bank, which has offered a reward for the recovery of money stolen, and a proportionate reward for a part recovered, where there are several claimants of the reward, or a proportion thereof, one or more of whom have sued the bank. And in such a bill all the claimants may be made parties, in order to have their respective claims adjusted.<sup>3</sup>

CHAPTER XXI.

BILLS QUIA TIMET.

§ 825. IN the next place let us proceed to the consideration of another class of cases, where the peculiar remedies administered by Courts of Equity constitute the principal, though not the sole ground of jurisdiction; and that is, BILLS QUIA TIMET. We have already had occasion, in another place, to explain in some measure the nature of these bills and the origin of the appellation; and to show their application to cases of covenants and contracts with sureties and others, where a specific performance is necessary to prevent future mischief.<sup>1</sup> They are called (as we have seen) Bills quia timet, in analogy to certain writs of the Common Law, whose objects are of a similar nature. Lord Coke has explained this matter very clearly in his Commentary on Littleton. “And note, (says he,) that there be six writs in law, that may be maintained, quia timet, before any molestation, distress, or impleading. As, (1.) A man may have a Writ of Mesne, (whereof Littleton here speaks,) before he be distrained. (2.) A Warrantia Chartæ, before he be impleaded. (3.) A Monstraverunt, before any distress or vexation. (4.) An Audita Querela, before any execution sued. (5.) A Curia Claudenda, before any default of inclosure. (6.) A Ne injuste vexes, before any distress or

§ 826. Now, Bills in Equity quia timet answer precisely to this latter description. They are in the nature of writs of prevention to accomplish the ends of precautionary justice. They are ordinarily applied to prevent wrongs or anticipated mischiefs, and not merely to redress them when done. The party seeks the aid of a Court of Equity, because he fears (quia timet) some future probable injury to his rights or interests; and not because an injury has already occurred, which requires any compensation or other relief. The manner, in which this aid is given by Courts of Equity, is of course dependent upon circumstances. They interfere sometimes by the appointment of a receiver to receive rents, or other income; sometimes by an order to pay a pecuniary fund into Court; sometimes by directing security to be given, or money paid over; and sometimes by the mere issuing of an injunction or other remedial process; thus adapting their relief to the precise nature of the particular case, and the remedial justice required by it.<sup>2</sup>

§ 827. In regard to equitable property, the jurisdiction is equally applicable to cases, where there is a present right of enjoyment, and to cases, where the right of enjoyment is future, or contingent. The object of the bill in all such cases is to secure the preservation of the property to its appropriate uses and ends; and wherever there is danger of its being

converted to other purposes, or diminished, or lost by gross negligence, the interference of a Court of Equity becomes indispensable. It will accordingly take the [*131] *fund into its own hands, or secure its due management and appropriation, either by the agency of its own officers, or otherwise. Thus, for instance, if property in the hands of a trustee for certain specific uses or trusts (either express or implied) is in danger of being diverted or squandered, to the injury of any claimant, having a present or future fixed title thereto, the administration will be duly secured by the Court according to the original purposes, in such a manner, as the Court may, in its discretion, under all the circumstances, deem best fitted to the end ; as by the appointment of a receiver ; or by payment of the fund, if pecuniary, into Court ; or by requiring security for its due preservation and appropriation.<sup>1</sup>

§ 828. The same principle is applied to the cases of executors and administrators, who are treated as trustees of the personal estate of the deceased party. If there is danger of waste of the estate, or collusion between the debtors of the estate and the executors or administrators, whereby the assets may be subtracted, Courts of Equity will interfere and secure the fund ; and in the case of collusion with debtors they will order the latter to pay the amount of their debts into Court.<sup>2</sup>

rected, is made for the benefit and on behalf of all the parties in interest, and not for the benefit of the plaintiff, or of one defendant only.<sup>1</sup> It may be *granted in any case of equitable property [*132] upon suitable circumstances. And where there are creditors, annuitants, and others, some of whom are creditors at law, claiming under judgments, and others are creditors, claiming upon equitable debts; if the property be of such a nature, that, if legal, it may be taken in execution, it may, if equitable, be put into the possession of a receiver, to hold the same and apply the profits under the direction of the Court, for the benefit of all the parties, according to their respective rights and priorities.<sup>2</sup> The same rule applies to cases, where the property is legal, and judgment creditors have taken possession of it under writs of elegit; for it is competent for the Court to appoint a receiver in favor of annuitants and equitable creditors, not disturbing the just prior rights, if any, of the judgment creditors.<sup>3</sup> Hence, the appointment of a receiver, in cases of this sort, is often called an equitable execution.<sup>4</sup>

to be understood in this limited sense, that it is to be without prejudice to persons having prior legal estates, and so that it will not prevent their proceeding to obtain possession, if they think proper. And with regard to persons having prior equitable estates, the Court will [*133] take *care, in appointing a receiver, not to disturb their prior equities ; and for that purpose it will direct inquiries to determine the priorities among equitable incumbrancers ; permitting legal creditors to act against the estates at law ; and settling the priorities of equitable creditors.<sup>1</sup>

§ 831. The appointment of a receiver is a matter, resting in the sound discretion of the Court ;<sup>2</sup> and the receiver, when appointed, is treated as virtually an officer and representative of the Court, and subject to its orders.<sup>3</sup> Lord Hardwicke considered this power of appointment to be of great importance and most beneficial tendency ; and he significantly said ; “ It is a discretionary power, exercised by the Court, with as great utility to the subject, as any authority, which belongs to it ; and it is provisional only, for the more speedy getting in of a party’s estate, and securing it for the benefit of such person, who shall appear to be entitled ; and it does not at all affect the right.”<sup>4</sup>

scope of these Commentaries. As, however, the equitable rights and incidents to such an appointment are often highly important to the parties in interest, and may affect the rights and remedies of third persons, having adverse claims, it will be *proper, [*134] in this place, to state some of the principles, by which this discretion is regulated.

§ 833. Before doing so, it may not be without use to suggest, what some of those rights and incidents are; and the more so, as similar rights and incidents belong to cases of sequestration.<sup>1</sup> In the first place, upon the appointment of a receiver of the rents and profits of real estate, if there are tenants in possession of the premises, they are compellable to attorn; and the Court thus becomes virtually, pro hac vice, the landlord.<sup>2</sup> In the next place, the appointment of such a receiver is generally deemed to entitle him to possession of the premises. It does not, indeed, in all cases, amount to a turning of the other party out of possession; for, in many cases, as in the case of an infant's estate, the receiver's possession is that of the infant. But where the rights are adverse in the different parties in the suit, the possession of the receiver is treated, as the possession of the party, who ultimately establishes his right to it.<sup>3</sup> The receiver, however, cannot proceed in any ejectment against the tenants, except by the authority of the Court.<sup>4</sup> In the next place, a receiver, when in possession, has very little discretion allowed him ; but he must apply from time to time to the Court for authority to do such acts, as may be beneficial to the estate. Thus, he is not at liberty to bring or to defend actions ; or to let the estate ; [* 135] *or to lay out money ; unless by the special leave of the Court.<sup>1</sup> In the next place, when such a receiver is in possession under the process or authority of the Court, in execution of a decree or decretal order, his possession is not to be disturbed, even by an ejectment under an adverse title, without the leave of the Court. For his possession is deemed the possession of the Court ; and the Court will not permit itself to be made a suitor in a Court of Law.<sup>2</sup> The proper and usual mode, adopted under such circumstances, is, for the party, claiming an adverse interest, to apply to the Court, to be permitted to come in, and be examined pro interesse suo. He is then allowed to go before the Master, and to state his title, upon which he may, in the first instance, have the judgment of the Master, and ultimately, if necessary, that of the Court. And where the question to be tried is a pure matter of title, which can be tried in an ejectment, the Court, from a sense of convenience and justice, will generally authorize such a suit to be brought, taking care, however, to protect the possession by giving proper directions.<sup>3</sup> 4

have already seen, that, in cases of elegit and conflicting legal and equitable debts and rights upon the estate, it is a common course to appoint a receiver for the benefit of all concerned.<sup>1</sup> In cases, *also, [* 136] where an estate is held by a party under a title obtained by fraud, actual or constructive, a receiver will be appointed.<sup>2</sup>

§ 835. But it is not infrequent for a bill quia timet to ask for the appointment of a receiver against a party, who is rightfully in possession, or who is entitled to the possession of the fund, or who has an interest in its due administration. In such cases, Courts of Equity will pay a just respect to such legal and equitable rights and interests of the possessor of the fund, and will not withdraw it from him by the appointment of a receiver, unless the facts, averred and established in proof, show, that there has been an abuse, or a danger of abuse, on his own part. For the rule of such Courts is, not to displace a bonâ fide possessor from any of the just rights attached to his title, unless there be some equitable ground for interference.<sup>3</sup>

§ 836. This principle may be easily illustrated in the common case of executors and administrators. They are by law entrusted with authority to collect and administer the assets of the deceased party ; and Courts of Equity will not interfere with their management and administration of such assets upon slight grounds. Whenever, therefore, the appointment of a receiver is sought against an executor or administrator, it is necessary to establish by suitable proofs, that there is some positive loss, or danger of loss, of the funds ; as, for instance, some waste or misapplication of the funds, or some apprehended danger from the bankruptcy, [* 137] insolvency, or personal fraud, misconduct, *or negligence of the executor or administrator.<sup>1</sup> Mere poverty of the party will not, of itself, constitute a sufficient ground ; but there must be other ingredients to justify the appointment.<sup>2</sup>

§ 837. So, where there are several incumbrances on an estate, as the first incumbrancer is entitled to the possession of the estate and the receipt of the rents and profits, a Court of Equity will not deprive him of such possession and profits, unless upon sufficient cause shown.<sup>3</sup> But if the first incumbrancer is not in possession, and does not desire it ; or if he has been paid off ; or if he refuses to receive what is due to him ; there, a receiver may be appointed, upon the application of a subsequent incumbrancer.<sup>4</sup> But in all cases of this sort, where the Court acts in favor of subsequent incumbrancers, it is cautious in thus interfering not to disturb any prior rights or equities ; and, therefore, before it acts finally, it will endeavor to ascertain the priorities and equities of all the incumbrancers ; and then it will apply the funds, which are received, according to such priorities and equities, in case the incumbrancers entitled thereto shall make a seasonable application for the purpose.<sup>5</sup>

§ 838. So, where the tenants of particular estates for life, or in tail, neglect to keep down the interest, due upon incumbrances upon the estates, Courts of Equity will appoint a receiver to receive the rents and profits, in order to keep down the interest ; for this is but a mere act of justice to the incumbrancers, and also to those, who may be otherwise interested in the estates.<sup>1</sup> But, here, again, it is to be remembered, that the Court will not force incumbrancers to receive their interest ; and therefore, if they would avail themselves of the privileges of receiving their interest, they must make a seasonable application for the purpose.<sup>2</sup>

§ 839. But although Courts of Equity will not appoint a receiver, except upon special grounds, justifying such an interference, in the nature of a bill quia timet ; yet there are cases, in which it will interpose, and require money to be paid into Court by a party, who stands in the relation of a trustee to the property, without any ground being laid to show, that there has been any abuse, or any danger to the fund.<sup>3</sup> Thus, in cases of bills brought by creditors, or legatees, or distributees against executors or administrators for a settlement of the estate, if the executors or administrators by their answers admit assets in their hands, and the Court takes *upon itself a settlement of [* 139] the estate, it will direct the assets to be paid into Court.<sup>4</sup>

of the estate in the hands of a banker, avowedly as assets. In such cases, upon the application of a party in interest, as, for instance, of a creditor or a legatee, the banker will be directed to pay the money into Court; for it is a rule in Equity to follow trust money, whenever it may be found in the hands of any person, who has not primâ facie a right to hold it, and to order him to bring it into Court. And this may be done even without making the executor or administrator a party to the suit; especially if there be a doubt of the safety of the fund.<sup>1</sup>

§ 841. The general rule, upon which Courts of Equity proceed, in requiring money to be paid into Court, is this; that the party, who is entitled to the fund, is also entitled to have it secured. And this rule is equally applicable to cases, where the plaintiffs, seeking the payment, are solely entitled to the whole fund, and to cases, where they have acquired in the whole fund such an interest, together with others, as entitles them, on their own behalf and the behalf of others, to have the fund secured in Court.<sup>2</sup> Now, this [*140] is precisely the case in what is *commonly called a creditor's bill for the administration of an estate.<sup>3</sup>

§ 842. And Courts of Equity will, in cases of this sort, not only order money to be paid into Court; but they will also direct, that papers and writings in the hands of executors and administrators shall be deposited with a Master for the benefit of those interested, unless there are other purposes, which require, that they should be retained in the hands of the executors or administrators.<sup>1</sup>

§ 843. The preceding remarks are principally (but not exclusively) applicable to cases of equitable property, whether the right of enjoyment thereof be present, or future, or contingent. In regard to legal property, it is obvious, that, where the right of enjoyment is present, the legal remedies will be generally found sufficient for the protection and vindication of that right. But where the right of enjoyment is future or contingent, the party entitled is often without any adequate remedy at law for any injury, which he may in the mean time sustain by the loss, destruction, or deterioration of the property in the hands of the party, who is entitled to the present possession of it. Thus, for instance, if personal property should be given by a will to A for life, and after his death to B ; there is (as we have seen) at law no remedy to secure the legacy to B, whether it be of specific chattels, or of a pecuniary nature.<sup>2</sup>

§ 844. Indeed, by the ancient Common Law, there could in general be no future property, to take place in expectancy, created in personal goods *and chattels ; for they were considered of so [*141] transitory a nature, and so liable to be lost, destroyed, or otherwise impaired, that future interests in them were not in the law treated as of any account.<sup>3</sup> An exception was permitted at an early period, as to goods and chattels given by will in remainder, after a bequest for life. But that was at first allowed only, where the use of the goods or chattels and not the goods or chattels themselves was given to the first legatee, the property being supposed to continue all the time in the executor of the testator.<sup>1</sup> That distinction has since been disregarded; and the limitation in remainder is now equally respected; whether the first legatee takes the use, or the goods and chattels themselves for life.<sup>2</sup>

[*142] *§ 845. In all cases of this sort, where there is a future right of enjoyment of personal property, Courts of Equity will now interpose and grant relief upon a bill quia timet, where there is any danger of loss or deterioration, or injury to it, in the hands of the party, who is entitled to the present possession. We have already

This subject is discussed very much at large in Mr. Fearne's Essay on Contingent Remainders and Executory Devises, from p. 401 to 407, (7th edition,) by Butler. There is in the same work a very valuable discussion upon the rights of the tenant for life in the goods and chattels, and how far the same may be taken in execution by his creditors. The result of the whole discussion seems to be, that the creditors cannot subject the property to their claims beyond the rights of the tenant for life therein. Mr. Fearne seems to consider, that the validity of executory dispositions of personal chattels (i. e. in remainder after a life estate,) was originally founded, and still rests on the doctrine and interposition of Courts of Equity. But he admits, that, in chattels real, the right is recognised at law. Fearne on Conting. Rem. p. 412, 413, 7th edit.; Mathew Manning's case, 8 Co. R. 95; Lampett's case, 10 Co. R. 47. had occasion to take notice of the manner, in which this remedial jurisdiction is applied in cases of legacies, whether pecuniary or specific, and whether vested or contingent.<sup>1</sup> The same doctrine is applied to cases of annuities charged on the personal estate.<sup>2</sup>

§ 846. The same remedial justice will be applied to other cases, as well as to legacies and personal annuities. Thus, for instance, where a future interest in personal property is assigned by the owner to his creditors; the latter may come into a Court of Equity to have the property secured to their future use.<sup>3</sup> On one occasion of this sort, Lord Hardwicke said, that nothing was better settled, than that "wherever a demand was made out of assets certainly due, but payable at a future time, the person entitled thereto might come against the executor to have it secured for his benefit, and set apart in the mean time, that he might not be obliged to pursue those assets through several hands. Nor is there any ground for the distinction taken between a legacy and a demand by contract."<sup>4</sup>

§ 848. So, where a party seised of lands in fee grants a rent charge in fee issuing thereout, and afterwards devises the lands to A for life, with remainder to B in fee; B may maintain a bill quia timet to compel A to pay the arrears during [144*] his life, for fear, that otherwise the whole would fall on his reversionary estate.<sup>1</sup> And the like principle would apply, under like circumstances, to a legacy payable in futuro and chargeable on land, to compel the tenant for life to pay or secure a proportion of the legacy.<sup>2</sup>

§ 849. Another case of the application of the remedial justice of Courts of Equity by a bill quia timet is in cases of sureties of debtors and others. We have already seen, that if a surety, after the debt has become due, has any apprehension of loss or injury from the delay of the creditor to enforce the debt against the principal debtor, he may file a bill of this sort to compel the debtor to discharge the debt or other obligation, for which the surety is responsible.<sup>3</sup> Nay, it has been insisted, (as we *have also seen) that the surety may come into [*145] Equity and compel the creditor to sue the principal, and collect the debt from him in discharge of the surety, at least, if the latter will undertake to indemnify the creditor for the risk, delay, and expense of the suit.<sup>4</sup>

So, Courts of Equity will decree the specific performance of a general covenant to indemnify, although it sounds in damages only, upon the same principle, that they will entertain bill quia timet; and this, not only at the instance of the original covenantee, but of his executors and administrators.<sup>1</sup> Thus, where a party had assigned several shares of the excise to A, and the latter covenanted to save the assignor harmless in respect of that assignment, and, to stand in his place, touching the payments to the king and other matters, and afterwards the king sued the assignor for money, which the assignee ought to have paid; the Court decreed, that the agreement should be specifically performed, and referred it to a Master, and directed, that toties quoties any breach should happen, he should report the [*146] *same specially to the Court; so that the Court might, if there should be occasion, direct a trial at law in a quantum damnificatus. The Court farther decreed, that the assignee should clear the assignor from all these suits and incumbrances within a reasonable time.<sup>2</sup> The case was compared to that of a

Simpson* (6 Ves. 734), Lord Eldon seems to admit, that the surety might have a right to compel the creditor to proceed against the debtor under some circumstances. But, then, in such a case, the surety is compellable to deposit the money in Court for the payment of the creditor. So, that, in fact, it is but the case of an indirect subrogation to the rights of the creditor, upon a virtual payment of the debt by such a deposit. See Hayes v. Ward, 4 John. Ch. R. 129 to 134, where this subject is much discussed; and the principles of the Roman Law are fully stated.

CHAPTER XXII.

BILLS OF PEACE.

§ 852. WE come, in the next place, to the consideration of what are technically called BILLS OF PEACE.<sup>1</sup> These Bills sometimes bear a resemblance to Bills quia timet, which latter (as has been already stated) seem to have been founded upon analogy to certain proceedings at the Common Law, quia timet.<sup>2</sup> Bills quia timet, however are quite distinguishable from the former in several respects, and are always used as a preventive process, before a suit is actually instituted; whereas Bills of Peace, though sometimes brought before any suit is instituted to try a right, are most generally brought after the right has been tried at law. It is not my design, in this place, to enter upon the subject of the cases generally, in which Courts of Equity will decree a perpetual injunction; for that will more properly be examined under another head;<sup>3</sup> but simply to treat of bills seeking such an injunction, and strictly falling under the denomination of Bills of Peace.

§ 853. By a Bill of Peace we are to understand a bill brought by a person to establish and perpetuate a right, which he claims, and which, from its nature, may be controverted by different persons, at different times, and by different actions; or where separate attempts have already been unsuccessfully made to overthrow the same right, and justice requires, that the party should be quieted in the right, if it is already sufficiently established, or if it should be sufficiently established under the direction of the Court.<sup>1</sup> The obvious design of such a bill is to procure repose from perpetual litigation, and, therefore, it is justly called a Bill of Peace. The general doctrine of public policy, which, in some form or other, may be found in the jurisprudence of every civilized country, is, that an end ought to be put to litigation, and above all to fruitless litigation; Interest reipublicæ, ut sit finis Litium. If suits might be perpetually brought to litigate the same questions between the same parties or their privies, as often as either should choose, it is obvious, that remedial justice would soon become a mere mockery; for the termination of one suit would only become the signal for the institution of a new one; and the expenses might become ruinous to all the parties. The obvious ground of the jurisdiction of Courts of Equity in cases of this sort is, to suppress useless litigation, and to prevent multiplicity of suits.

§ 854. One class of cases, to which this remedial process is properly applied, is, where there is one general right to be established against a great number of persons. And it may be resorted to, either where one person claims or defends a right against many; or where many claim or defend a right against one.<sup>2</sup> In such cases, Courts of Equity interpose in order to prevent multiplicity of suits;<sup>1</sup> for, as each separate party may sue, or may be sued, in a separate action, and each suit would only decide the particular right in question between the plaintiff and defendant in that action, litigation might become interminable. Courts of Equity, therefore having a power to bring all the parties before them, will at once proceed to the ascertainment of the general right; and, if it be necessary, they will ascertain it by an action or issue at law, and then make a decree finally binding upon all the parties.<sup>2</sup>

right of common of the freehold tenants of a manor.<sup>1</sup> So, it will lie to establish a duty, claimed by a municipal corporation against many persons, although there is no privity between them.<sup>2</sup>

§ 857. But to entitle a party to maintain a Bill of Peace, it must be clear, that there is a right claimed, which affects many persons, and that a suitable number of parties in interest are brought before the Court ; for, if the right is disputed between two persons only, not for themselves, and all others in interest, but for themselves alone, the bill will be dismissed ; for it cannot then conclude any persons, but the very defendants.<sup>3</sup>

§ 858. It seems, too, that Courts of Equity will not, upon a bill of this nature, decree a perpetual injunction for the establishment or the enjoyment, of the right of a party, who claims in contradiction to a public right; as if he claims an exclusive right to a highway, or to a common navigable river, or an exclusive right to a rope ferry across a river ; for it is said, that this would be to enjoin all the people of the state or country.<sup>4</sup> But the true principle is, that Courts of Equity will not, in such cases, upon principles of public policy, intercept the assertion of public rights.

§ 859. Another class of cases, to which Bills of Peace are now ordinarily applied, is, where the plaintiff has, after repeated and satisfactory trials, established his right at law; and yet is in danger of farther litigation and obstruction to his right from new attempts to controvert it. Under such circumstances, Courts of Equity will interfere, and grant a perpetual injunction to quiet the possession of the plaintiff, and to suppress future litigation of the right.<sup>1</sup> This exercise of jurisdiction was formerly much questioned. Lord Cowper, in a celebrated case, where the title to land had been five several times tried in an ejectment, and five verdicts given in favor of the plaintiff, refused to sustain the jurisdiction for a perpetual injunction; and said, that the application was new, and did not fall under the general notion of a Bill of Peace, as this was only a suit between A and B, and one man is able to contend against another. But his decision was overruled by the House of Lords, and a perpetual *injunction was decreed, upon the [* 153] ground, that it was the only adequate means of sup-

R. 281.—Lord Redesdale thus describes this jurisdiction. “In many cases the Courts of ordinary jurisdiction admit, at least for a certain time, of repeated attempts to litigate the same question. To put an end to the oppression occasioned by the abuse of this privilege, the Courts of Equity have assumed a jurisdiction. Thus, actions of ejectment having become the usual mode of trying titles at the Common Law, and judgments in those actions not being in any degree conclusive, the Courts of Equity have interfered; and, after repeated trials, and satisfactory determinations of questions, have granted perpetual injunctions to restrain further litigation; and thus have in some degree put that restraint upon litigation, which is the policy of the Common Law in the case of real actions.” Mitford, Pl. Eq. by Jeremy, 143, 144.

pressing oppressive litigation and irreparable mischief.<sup>1</sup> And this doctrine has ever since been steadily adhered to. However, Courts of Equity will not interfere in such cases before a trial at law ; nor until the right has been satisfactorily established at law. But, if the right is satisfactorily established, it is not material, what number of trials have taken place, whether two only, or more.<sup>2</sup>

§ 860. These seem to be the only classes of cases, in which Bills of Peace, technically so called, will lie.<sup>3</sup> But there are other cases, bearing a close analogy to them, in which a like relief is granted ; as, for instance, cases of confusion of boundaries, which, however, require some superinduced equity ; and cases of quit rents, where the remedy at law is either lost or deficient.<sup>4</sup> Cases of mines and collieries may also be mentioned, where Courts of Equity will entertain bills in the nature of bills quia timet, and Bills of Peace, where there is danger, that the mine may be ruined in the mean time, before the right can be established ; and upon such a bill the Court will grant an adequate remedy by quieting the party in the enjoyment of his right, by restoring things to their old condition and by establishing the right

CHAPTER XXIII.

INJUNCTIONS.

§ 861. THE last subject, which is proposed to be treated under the second head of concurrent Equity Jurisdiction, viz. where the peculiar remedies, afforded by Courts of Equity, constitute the principal, although not the sole ground of jurisdiction, is that of INJUNCTIONS. A Writ of Injunction may be described to be a judicial process, whereby a party is required to do a particular thing, or to refrain from doing a particular thing, according to the exigency of the writ.<sup>1</sup> The most common sort of injunctions is that, which operates as a restraint upon the party in the exercise of his real or supposed rights; and this is sometimes called the Remedial Writ of Injunction. The other sort, commanding an act to be done, is

It has been remarked by Mr. Eden, that wherever a plaintiff appears entitled to equitable relief, if it consists in restraining the commission or the continuance of some act of the defendant, a Court of Equity administers that relief by injunction, In many cases it enforces it by means of the process of the writ of injunction, properly so called. But he proceeds to remark; "But as the known forms of that remedy are by no means adapted to every case, in which the Court has jurisdiction to interpose, the prohibition has in numerous cases been issued and conveyed in the shape merely of an order in the nature of an injunction. And as the Court treats the neglect or disobedience of all orders as a contempt, and enforces the performance of them by imprisonment, the object sought is equally attained by an order of this nature as by a writ. The distinction is consequently disregarded in practice, and these orders, though not enforced by means of the writ of injunction, have indiscriminately obtained the name of injunctions." Eden on Injunct. ch. 14, p. 290.

sometimes called the Judicial Writ, because it issues after a decree, and is in the nature of an execution to enforce the same ; as, for instance, it may contain a direction to the party defendant to yield up, or to quiet, or to continue, the possession of the land or other property, which constitutes the subject-matter of the decree in favor of the other party.<sup>1</sup>

§ 862. The object of this process, which is most extensively used in Equity proceedings, is generally preventive, and protective, rather than restorative ; although it is by no means confined to the former.<sup>2</sup> It seeks to prevent a meditated wrong more often than to redress an injury already done. It is not confined to cases falling within the exercise of the concurrent jurisdiction of the Court ; but it equally applies to cases belonging to its exclusive and auxiliary jurisdiction.<sup>3</sup> It is treated of, however, in this place,

principally because it forms a broad foundation for the exercise of concurrent jurisdiction in Equity. In cases, calling for such a redress, there is always a prayer in the bill for this process and relief ; and, hence, bills of this sort are commonly called Injunction Bills.<sup>1</sup>

§ 863. Indeed, unless an injunction is specifically prayed for by the bill, it is the settled practice not to grant this remedial process; because (it has been said) the defendant might make a different case by his answer against the general words of the bill, from what he would have done against the specific prayer for an injunction. This, at least, constitutes an exception from the general doctrine, as to the efficacy of the prayer for general relief.<sup>2</sup> The granting or refusal of injunctions is, however, a matter resting in the sound discretion of the Court ; but injunctions are now more liberally granted than in former times.<sup>3</sup>

§ 864. The writ of injunction is peculiar to Courts of Equity, although there are some cases, where Courts of Law may exercise analogous powers; such as by the writ of prohibition and estrepement in cases of waste.<sup>4</sup> The cases, however, to which these

<sup>4</sup> In the case of Jefferson v. the Bishop of Durham, (1 Bos. & Pull. 105, 120 to 132,) the subject of these remedies in Courts of Law, in cases of waste, is very learnedly discussed. A single passage from the opinion of Lord Chief Justice Eyre may serve to explain them, and show their inadequacy, as a remedy. "The state of the Common Law," said he "with respect to waste, has been so fully laid open by the bar, that I need do little more than allude to it. At Common Law, the proceeding in waste was by writ of prohibition from the Court of Chancery, which legal processes are applicable, are so few, and so utterly inadequate for the purposes of justice, that was considered as the foundation of a suit between the party suffering by the waste, and the party committing it. If that writ was obeyed, the ends of justice were answered. But if that was not obeyed and an alias and pluries produced no effect, then came the original writ of attachment out of Chancery, returnable in a Court of Common Law, which was considered as the original writ of the Court. The form of that writ shows the nature of it. It was the same original writ of attachment, which was and is the foundation of all the proceedings in prohibition, and of many other proceedings in this Court at this day.—Si A. B. fecerit te securum, &c. tunc pone, &c. quod sit coram justiciariis nostris, &c. ostensura, quare fecit vastam, &c. contra prohibitionem nostram, &c. That writ being returnable in a Court of Common Law, and most usually in the Court of Common Pleas, on the defendant appearing the plaintiff counted against him; he pleaded; the question was tried; and if the defendant was found guilty, the plaintiff recovered single damages for the waste committed. Thus the matter stood at Common Law. It has been said, (and truly so, I think, so far as can be collected from the text writers,) that at the Common Law this proceeding lay only against tenant in dower, tenant by the curtesy, and guardian in chivalry. It was extended by different statutes to farmers, tenants for life, and tenants for years, and, I believe, to guardians in socage. That, which these statutes gave by way of remedy, was not so properly the introduction of a new law, as the extension of an old one to a new description of persons. The course of proceeding remained the same as before these statutes were made. The first act, which introduced any thing substantially new, was that, which gave a writ of waste or estrepement pending the suit. It follows of course, that this was a judicial writ, and was to issue out of the Courts of Common Law. But, except for the purpose of staying proceedings pending a suit, there is no intimation in any of our text writers, that any prohibition could issue from those Courts. By the Stat. of West. 2, the writ of prohibition from the Chancery, which existed at Common Law, is taken away, and the writ of summons substituted in its place. And although it is said by Lord Coke, when treating of prohibitions at the Common Law, that it ‘may be used at this day,’ those words, if true at all, can only apply to that very ineffectual writ directed to the sheriff, empowering him to take the posse comitatus to prevent the commission of waste intended to be done. The writ directed to the party was certainly taken away by the statute. At least, as far as my researches go, no such writ has issued even from Chancery, in the common cases of waste by tenant in dower, tenants by the curtesy, and guardians in chivalry, tenants for life, &c. &c. since it was taken away by the Statute of West. 2. Thus the Common Law remedy

the processes themselves have fallen into disuse; and almost all the remedial justice of this sort is now administered through the instrumentality of Courts of Equity.<sup>1</sup> The jurisdiction in these Courts, then, has its true origin in the fact, that there is either no remedy at all at law, or the remedy is imperfect and inadequate. The jurisdiction was for a long time most pertinaciously resisted by the Courts of Common Law, especially when it was applied by an injunction to stay suits and judgments in these Courts.<sup>2</sup> But it was firmly established in the reign of King James the First, upon an express appeal to that monarch; and it is now in constant and unquestioned exercise.<sup>3</sup> stood with the alteration above mentioned, and with the judicial writ of estrepement introduced pendente lite."

the processes themselves have fallen into disuse; and almost all the remedial justice of this sort is now administered through the instrumentality of Courts of Equity.<sup>1</sup> The jurisdiction in these Courts, then, has its true origin in the fact, that there is either no remedy at all at law, or the remedy is imperfect and inadequate. The jurisdiction was for a long time most pertinaciously resisted by the Courts of Common Law, especially when it was applied by an injunction to stay suits and judgments in these Courts.<sup>2</sup> But it was firmly established in the reign of King James the First, upon an express appeal to that monarch; and it is now in constant and unquestioned exercise.<sup>3</sup>

by which he directed something to be restored, as when he commanded possession to be restored to any one, who had been ejected from the possession by force; exhibitory, by which he ordered a person or thing to be produced.<sup>1</sup> After this definition or description of the various sorts of Interdicts, the Institutes proceed to state, that some persons nevertheless have supposed that those only can be properly called interdicts, which were prohibitory; because to interdict is properly to denounce and prohibit; and that the restitutory and exhibitory interdicts should properly be called decrees. But that by usage they are all called interdicts, because they are pronounced between two persons. *Sunt tamen, qui putent, propriè Interdicta ea vocari, quæ prohibitoria sunt, quia interdiceret sit denuntiare et prohibere; Restitutoria autem et Exhibitoria, propriè Decreta vocari. § 867. Another division of Interdicts in the Roman Law was into those, which were (1) to gain or acquire possession; or (2) to retain possession; or (3) to recover possession.<sup>3</sup> And again, another division was into those, which were (1) single, in which each of the litigant parties sustained one character, that of Plaintiff or Actor, or Defendant or Reus; or (2) double, in which each of the litigant parties sustained two characters, that of Plaintiff or Actor, and that of Defendant or Reus.<sup>4</sup>

§ 868. From this summary account of the Roman Interdicts, which were, after a time, superseded by what were called extraordinary actions, in which judgment was pronounced without any antecedent interdict, and in the same manner, as if a beneficial action had been given in consequence of an interdict,<sup>1</sup> it is easy to perceive, that they partake very much of the nature of injunctions in Courts of Equity, and were applied to the same general purposes; that is to say, to restrain the undue exercise of rights, to prevent threatened wrongs, to restore violated possessions, and to secure the permanent enjoyment of the rights of property.

§ 869. In the early course of Chancery proceedings, injunctions to quiet the possession of the parties before the hearing were indiscriminately granted to either party, plaintiff, or defendant, in cases where corporeal hereditaments were the subject of the suit; the object of them being to prevent a forcible change of possession by either party, pending the litigation.<sup>2</sup> These injunctions bore a very close resemblance to the interdict, Uti possidetis, of the Roman Law, which was granted to either party in a *suit, who was then in possession, in order [*162] that he might be secured therein as the legal possessor during the litigation.<sup>3</sup> Hoc Interdictum (Uti

The practice of granting injunctions of this sort has (it is said) become obsolete in England, if not altogether, at least in so great a degree, that there are few instances of it in modern times.<sup>4</sup>—But injunctions of the nature of an interdict Unde vi of the Roman Law, to restore a possession, from which the party has been forcibly ejected, are, under the name of possessory bills, said to be still common in [*163] *Ireland.<sup>5</sup> The interdict Unde vi in the Roman Law was granted to restore a possession forcibly

The case is a good deal like that of Hughes v. Trustees of Morden College, 1 Ves. 188. § 871. It is obviously incompatible with the object of these Commentaries to enumerate in detail (even if such a task were practicable) the various cases, in which a writ of injunction will be granted in Courts of Equity. Many cases of this sort have already been incidentally taken notice of in the preceding pages; and others again will occur hereafter. What is proposed to be done in this place is, to enumerate some only of the more common cases, in which it is applied, rather as illustrations of the nature and extent of the jurisdiction, than as a complete analysis of it.

§ 872. A learned writer, whose work on this subject is in high estimation, has enumerated, among the most ordinary objects of the remedial writ of injunctions, the following; “To stay proceedings in Courts of Law, in the Spiritual Courts, the Courts of Admiralty, or in some other Court of Equity; to restrain the endorsement or negotiation of notes and bills of exchange, the sale of land, the sailing of a ship, the transfer of stock, or the alienation of a specific chattel; to prevent the wasting of assets or *other property pending litigation; to re- [*164] strain a trustee from assigning the legal estate, or from setting up a term of years, or assignees from making a dividend; to prevent the removing out of the jurisdiction, marrying, or having any intercourse, which the Court disapproves of, with a ward; to restrain the commission of every species of waste to houses, mines, timber, or any other part of the inheritance; to prevent the infringement of patents, and the violation of copyright, either by publication or theatrical representation; to suppress the continuance of public or private nuisances; and by the various modes of interpleader, restraint upon multiplicity of suits, or quieting possession before the hearing, to stop the progress of vexatious litigation." But he immediately adds; "These, however, are far from being all the instances, in which this species of equitable interposition is obtained. It would indeed be difficult to enumerate them all; for in the endless variety of cases, in which a plaintiff is entitled to equitable relief, if that relief consists in restraining the commission or the continuance of some act of the defendant, a Court of Equity administers it by means of the writ of injunction."<sup>1</sup>

§ 873. The illustrations of the jurisdiction, which will be attempted in our pages, will be principally limited to cases of injunctions to stay proceedings at law; to restrain vexatious suits; to restrain the alienation of property; to restrain waste; to restrain nuisances; to restrain trespasses; and to prevent other irreparable mischiefs. We shall then add some few instances of special injunctions, in order [*165] more fully to develop the nature and extent of this most beneficial process of preventive and remedial justice. It should be premised, however, that

injunctions, when granted on bills, are either temporary, as until the coming in of the defendant's answer ; or until the farther order of the Court ; or until the hearing of the cause ; or until the coming in of the report of a Master ; or they are perpetual, as when they form a part of the decree after the hearing upon the merits, and the defendant is perpetually inhibited from any assertion of a particular right, or perpetually restrained from the doing of a particular act.<sup>1</sup>

§ 874. And in the first place, as to injunctions to stay proceedings at law. Injunctions of this sort are sometimes granted to stay trial ; or after verdict to stay judgment ; or after judgment, to stay execution ; or, if the execution has been effected, to stay the money in the hands of the sheriff ; or, if part only of the judgment debt has been levied by a fi: facias, to restrain the suing out of another fi: fac :, or a ca: sa :, according to the exigency of the particular case.<sup>2</sup> This jurisdiction of granting injunctions, in an especial manner, met the decided opposition and hostility of the Courts of Common Law, from a very early period of the exercise of Equity Jurisprudence. The common mode, in which this relief was granted, was after a judgment at law, by enjoining the plaintiff not to sue out execution upon the judgment.<sup>3</sup> This was supposed to trench upon the jurisdiction of the Courts of Common Law, from its tendency to destroy *the conclusiveness, and to make nullities of their [*166] judgments ; since an execution is properly said to be fructus, finis, et effectus legis ; and therefore is the life of the law.<sup>1</sup> The exercise of this jurisdiction, however, can be distinctly traced back to the beginning of the reign of Henry the Seventh ;<sup>2</sup> and though it was constantly struggled against, and even constituted one of the articles of impeachment against Cardinal Wolsey, in the reign of Henry the Eighth ; yet it was constantly upheld by the chancellors, and was finally and conclusively established in the reign of King James, in the manner already mentioned.<sup>3</sup>

§ 875. There does not seem to be any just foundation for the opposition of the Courts of Common Law to this jurisdiction. A writ of injunction is in no just sense a prohibition to those courts in the exercise of their jurisdiction. It is not addressed to those courts. It does not even affect to interfere with them. The process, when its object is to restrain proceedings at law, is directed only to the parties. It neither assumes any superiority over the court, in which those proceedings are had, nor denies its jurisdiction. It is granted on the sole ground, that from certain equitable circumstances, of which the Court of Equity, granting the process, has cognizance, it is against conscience, that the party inhibited should proceed in the cause.<sup>4</sup> The object, therefore, really is, to prevent an unfair use being made of the process of a Court of Law, in order to deprive another [* 167] party of his just rights, or *to subject him to some unjust vexation or injury which is wholly irremediable by a Court of Law.<sup>5</sup>

§ 876. One of the plainest cases, which can be put, of the propriety of granting an injunction to a judgment at law, is, where it has been in fact satisfied, and yet the judgment creditor attempts to set it up, and enforce it, either against the judgment debtor, or against some person claiming under him, who is thereby injured in his property or rights.<sup>1</sup> In such cases, a Court of Law would often be exceedingly embarrassed in giving the proper redress, if it could give it at all. But Courts of Equity deal with it at once, and apply the most complete remedial relief.

§ 877. Indeed, without a jurisdiction of this sort, to control the proceedings, or to injoin the judgments of parties at law, it is most obvious, that Equity jurisprudence, as a system of remedial justice, would be grossly inadequate to the ends of its institution. In a great variety of cases, as we shall presently see, Courts of Law cannot afford any redress to the party sued, although it is most manifest, that he has in conscience and justice, but not at law, a perfect defence. He may be deprived of his rights by fraud, or accident, or mistake. Nay, the very facts, on which he relies, may be exclusively within the knowledge of the party, who sues him, and without a discovery (which a Court of Law cannot grant) he may be unable to establish his defence ; and, if proceedings cannot in the mean time be stayed at law, until a discovery can be had in Equity, he will be subjected *to intolerable oppression or injury.<sup>2</sup> Many [* 168] cases of this sort have already been suggested under the preceding heads, and especially in cases of accident, mistake, and fraud ; and others again will occur in our subsequent inquiries.<sup>1</sup>

§ 878. A single case under each of the heads of accident, mistake, and fraud will sufficiently show the beneficial operation, nay, the necessity of the interposition of Courts of Equity, to restrain proceedings at law under circumstances of the most simple character. Suppose an executor or administrator should be in possession of abundant assets to pay all the debts of the deceased, and by an accidental fire a great portion of them should be destroyed, so that the estate should be deeply insolvent. In such a case he might be sued by a creditor at law, and the loss of the assets by accident would be no defence ; for when he once becomes chargeable with the assets at law, he is for ever chargeable, notwithstanding any intervening casualties. But Courts of Equity will injoin proceedings at law, in cases of this sort, upon the purest principles of justice.<sup>2</sup>

§ 879. Suppose a party is sued at law for a debt of long standing ; and a judgment is obtained against [* 169] *him for the amount, although he has actually paid it ; but he is unable, after due search, to find a receipt or release, which would establish the fact ;

<sup>1</sup> Mr. Eden has collected under this head many cases of accident, mistake, fraud, account, illegal and immoral contracts, penalties and forfeitures, breaches of covenants, decrees for the administration of assets, election of remedies at law or in Equity, marshalling of securities, discharge of sureties, &c., where an injunction is the appropriate remedy ; and to this work and the authorities there cited the learned reader is referred for more full information. Eden on Injunctions, ch. 2, p. 3 to 44. See also 1 Madd. Ch. Pr. 109, 110.

and then, after judgment, the paper is unexpectedly found, either in his own possession, or in that of a third person. At law, there would be no redress under such circumstances. The judgment would be conclusive. But a Court of Equity would in such a case afford relief, by a perpetual injunction of the judgment.<sup>1</sup> Such a suit may be brought without fraud, as by a representative of a deceased party; and, therefore, it may be a case of innocent mistake.

§ 880. Suppose a judgment should be obtained at law by fraud for a sum larger, than is justly due to the party, upon a mutual understanding of the parties, that certain set-offs should be allowed and deducted. There would be no remedy at law; and yet a Court of Equity would not hesitate to injoin the judgment upon due proofs, to the extent of the set-offs. Or, suppose a party were surprised at the trial by proofs of a claim, of which, from the nature of the declaration, he could have no notice, and was in no default; and thus a recovery should be had for an amount not legally due; the like relief would be granted in Equity. But, at law the party might be utterly without redress; for he might not be able to bring the case within the ordinary rules for granting a new trial.

§ 881. Another case may easily be supposed, where the defendant at law has a perfect defence; but where the facts, upon which it depends, are exclusively within *the knowledge of the plaintiff in the suit. [* 170] In such a case, a bill of discovery is indispensable, to enable the party to make good his defence at law.

But if, in the mean time, the plaintiff were permitted to go on at law, and to insist upon a trial before the discovery was obtained, it is obvious, that the law would be an instrument of the grossest injustice. In such a case a Court of Equity would decree an injunction to stay proceedings, until the discovery was duly obtained.<sup>1</sup>

§ 882. In some of the cases, which have been above supposed, the defendant would have had a complete remedy at law, if at the time he had been in possession of the appropriate proofs. But the great mass of cases, in which an injunction is ordinarily applied for to stay proceedings at law, are, where the rights of the party are wholly equitable in their own nature, or are incapable, under the circumstances, of being asserted in a Court of Law. A ready illustration of the former class may be found in the attempt of a trustee, in violation of his trust, to oust the possession of the cestui que trust of an estate, to the beneficial enjoyment of which he is entitled; or of a landlord to oust the possession of a tenant, with whom he has contracted for a lease, by an ejectment in violation of that contract; or of a party, setting up a satisfied term, or an outstanding legal incumbrance, to defeat the possession of another person, having a better conscientious and equitable title to it. An illustration of the latter class may be [*171] *found in the common cases of bonds and mortgages and other penal securities and covenants, where, by the strict rules of law, the party after forfeiture can obtain no relief; in cases of set-offs in Equity, which are not recognised at all at law, as such; and in cases of partnership property, seized in execution by a creditor of one of the partners, where an injunction will be awarded to stay proceedings, until an account of the partnership funds and rights is taken.

§ 823. It seems proper, too, in this place, to take notice of the application of this same remedial process, upon larger principles, to the case of sureties, who are often discharged from their liability according to the doctrines of Courts of Equity, when they would be held responsible upon their bond or other security at law. It is, for instance, well settled (as we have seen), that wherever a creditor, in pursuance of a valid agreement for such a purpose, gives time for payment to the principal debtor on a bond or other security, without the consent of the surety, the latter will be held discharged in Equity, though he might still be held bound at law.<sup>1</sup> In such a case, it is of no consequence, whether the surety has sustained any actual damage or not. Nay, the arrangement may be for his benefit; and yet he will in Equity be discharged; for the rights of the creditor, as to his debtor, have been voluntarily suspended, and of course the relation of the surety to both changed without his consent. Under such circumstances, the surety has a right to restrain the creditor from proceeding at law against *him to recover the [*172] debt; and a perpetual injunction constitutes the true and effectual remedy.<sup>2</sup>

§ 884. We might here also advert to the important branches of Equity Jurisprudence in the administration and marshalling of assets, and the marshalling of securities, as furnishing other appropriate illustrations of the beneficial interposition of Courts of Equity, to control the rights and proceedings of creditors and others at law by the remedial process of injunction, upon principles almost purely of an equitable and conscientious nature. In most of the cases of this nature, there is no pretence to assert the jurisdiction upon any of the ordinary grounds of accident, mistake, fraud, or confidence. It stands upon the more enlarged principles of general justice, and was probably derived from that great reservoir of general principles, the Roman Civil Law, where (as we have seen) Equities of this sort were not unfrequently entertained.<sup>1</sup>

§ 885. Indeed, the occasions, on which an injunction may be used to stay proceedings at law, are almost infinite in their nature and circumstances.<sup>2</sup> In general it may be stated, that in all cases, where by accident, or mistake, or fraud, or otherwise, a party has an unfair advantage in proceeding in a Court of Law, [*173] *which must necessarily make that Court an instrument of injustice, and it is, therefore, against conscience, that he should use that advantage, a Court of Equity will interfere, and restrain him from using the advantage, which he has thus improperly gained ; and it will also generally proceed to administer all the relief, which the particular case requires, whether it be by a partial or by a total restraint of such proceedings. If any such unfair advantage has been already obtained by proceedings at law to a judgment, it will, in like manner, control the judgment, and restore the injured party to his original rights.<sup>1</sup>

§ 886. The injunction is not confined to any one point of the proceedings at law ; but it may, upon a proper case being presented to the Court, be granted at any stage of the suit.<sup>2</sup> Thus, an injunction is sometimes granted to stay trial ; sometimes after verdict to stay judgment ; sometimes after judgment to stay execution ; sometimes after execution to stay the money in the hands of the sheriff, if it be a case of a feri facias ; or to stay the delivery of possession, if it be a writ of possession.<sup>3</sup> And, as has been already intimated, the injunction may be temporary or perpetual, total or partial, qualified or unconditional.<sup>4</sup>

§ 887. In regard to injunctions after a judgment at law, it may be stated, as a general principle, that any fact, which proves it to be against conscience *to execute such judgment, and of which the [*174] injured party could not have availed himself in a Court of Law, or of which he might have availed himself at law, but was prevented by fraud or accident, unmixed with any fault or negligence in himself or his agents, will authorize a Court of Equity to interfere by injunction, to restrain the adverse party from availing himself of such judgment.<sup>1</sup> Bills of this sort are usually called Bills for a New Trial.<sup>2</sup>

§ 888. It has been remarked by Lord Redesdale, that bills of this description have not of late years been much countenanced. In general, it has been considered, that the ground for a bill, to obtain a new trial after judgment in an action at law, must be such as would be the ground for a bill of review of a decree in a Court of Equity, upon the discovery of new matter.<sup>3</sup>

§ 889. Courts of Equity will not only award an injunction to stay proceedings at law ; but they will also, where the party is proceeding at law and in Equity for the same matter at the same time, compel him to make an election of the suit, in which he will proceed, and will stay the proceedings in the other Court.<sup>4</sup> [*175] And if, after a decree in Equity, a *party should proceed at law for the same matter, they will interfere by way of injunction. So, if a decree is made against a party upon the merits, and he afterwards brings a bill in a foreign Court for the same subject matter, a Court of Equity will grant an injunction against proceeding in such foreign suit.<sup>1</sup> Indeed, wherever, after a bill is filed in Equity, the party institutes a suit at law for the same matter, it is treated as a contempt of the Court; for the jurisdiction has already attached in Equity; and it is gross oppression to vex another with a double suit for the same cause of action.<sup>2</sup>

Sall*, 1 Sch. & Lefr. 176; Rogers v. Vosburgh, 4 John. Ch. R. 84. There are some exceptions to this doctrine. One is, that a mortgagee may proceed on his mortgage in Equity, and on his bond at law at the same time. But this right is not unqualified; for the mortgagor will not be compelled to pay upon his bond, unless secure of his title deeds being delivered up. Schoole v. Sall, 1 Sch. & Lefr. 176; Eden on Injunct. ch. 3, p. 36.

§ 890. Another class of cases, in which injunctions are granted to proceedings at law, is, where there has already been a decree upon a Creditor's Bill for the administration of assets. Such a decree is considered in Equity to be in the nature of a judgment for all the creditors; and, therefore, if subsequently to it, a bond creditor should sue at law, the Court of Equity, in which the decree is made, will (as we have seen), in the assertion of its jurisdiction, restrain him from proceeding in his suit.<sup>3</sup> The reason is, that Courts of Law do not take notice of a decree in Equity; and, therefore, the Court of Equity is compelled to establish its jurisdiction over all the assets, and the administration thereof, by preventing creditors from going elsewhere at law to assert their rights.<sup>4</sup> An injunction in cases of this sort was formerly granted only upon a bill filed ; but it may now be obtained upon motion after notice given to the creditor.<sup>1</sup> And it [*176] *makes no difference (it should seem), as to granting an injunction, whether the bill be brought by one or more creditors against the executor or administrator for the administration of the assets, solely on his or their own behalf, or whether it be brought on behalf of themselves and all other creditors ; provided that upon such bill a general decree is made for the benefit of all the creditors. For then it is in the nature of a judgment for all the creditors ; and all are entitled to have notice, and to come in, and to prove their debts before the Master.<sup>2</sup>

§ 891. Courts of Equity will not only grant an injunction, restraining suits at law, between parties upon equitable circumstances ; but they will exercise the same jurisdiction to protect their own officers, who execute their processes, against any suits brought against them for acts done under or in virtue of such processes.<sup>3</sup> The ground of this assertion of jurisdiction is, that Courts of Equity will not suffer their processes to be examined by any other Courts ; and Courts of Law cannot know any thing of their nature and effect. If they are irregularly issued or executed, it is the duty of Courts of Equity themselves to apply the proper remedy, and to make satisfaction.<sup>1</sup> And for this purpose in a proper case it will be referred to a master to ascertain and settle the proper compensation.<sup>2</sup> Therefore, where an arrest was made by virtue of a process, which issued irregularly out of a Court of Equity, and an action for false imprisonment was brought against the officer who made the arrest, an injunction was issued *restraining the suit.<sup>3</sup> [*177] The same principle is applied to protect sequestrators in possession under a decree of a Court of Equity, against suits brought against them; for the Court will not permit itself to be made a suitor at law; but it will examine for itself the nature of any adverse title upon application of the party.<sup>4</sup>

§ 892. Injunctions to restrain suits at law are usually spoken of as common or special. The common injunction (as it is called), so frequently alluded to in the books of Reports and Practice, is the writ of injunction, issued upon and for the default of the defendant, in not appearing to, or answering the bill. It is also granted, where the defendant obtains an order for further time to answer, or for a commission, (commonly called a dedimus,) to take his answer.<sup>5</sup> In all these cases the injunction is of course.<sup>6</sup> In its terms the writ recites, that the defendant has not appeared or answered the bill, and yet is proceeding at law; and it commands the defendant to desist from all further proceedings at law, touching the matters in the bill, until he shall have fully answered the bill, cleared his contempt, and the court shall make other orders to the contrary. But the defendant is nevertheless at liberty to call for a plea, and to proceed to trial thereon, and for want of a plea to enter up judgment; but execution is *thereby stayed.<sup>1</sup> Such is the exigency of the writ. All other injunctions granted upon other occasions, or involving other directions, are called special injunctions.<sup>2</sup>

§ 893. There are, however, cases, in which Courts of Equity will not exercise any jurisdiction by way of injunction to stay proceedings at law. In the first place, they will not interfere to stay proceedings in any criminal matters, or in any cases not strictly of a civil nature. As for instance, they will not grant an injunction to stay proceedings on a mandamus, or an indictment, or an information, or a writ of prohibition.<sup>3</sup> But this restriction applies only to cases, where the parties, seeking redress by such proceedings, are not the plaintiffs in Equity; for if they are, the Court possesses power to restrain them personally from proceeding at the same time upon the same matter of right for redress in the form of a civil suit, and of a criminal prosecution.<sup>1</sup> In such cases the injunction is merely incidental to the ordinary power of the Court to impose terms upon parties, who seek its aid in furtherance of their rights.

*§ 894. In the next place, Courts of Equity [*179] will not relieve against a judgment at law, where the case in Equity proceeds upon a defence equally available at law ; but the plaintiff ought to establish some special ground for relief.<sup>2</sup> The doctrine goes yet farther ; and it may be asserted to be a general rule, that a defence cannot be set up, as the ground of a bill in Equity for an injunction, which has been fully and fairly tried at law, although it may be the opinion of a Court of Equity, that the defence ought to have been sustained at law.<sup>3</sup> If there are any exceptions to this rule, they must be of a very special nature.<sup>4</sup> But relief will be granted, where the defence could not at the time or under the circumstances be made available at law, without any laches of the party.<sup>5</sup> Thus, for instance, if a party should recover a judgment at law for a debt ; and the defendant should afterwards find a receipt under the plaintiff's own hand for the very money in question, the defendant (where there was no laches on his part) would be relieved by a perpetual injunction in Equity.<sup>1</sup> So, if [*180] a fact material to the merits *should be discovered after a trial, which could not by ordinary diligence have been ascertained before, the like relief would be granted.<sup>2</sup>

§ 895. And this leads us to remark, in the next place, that relief will not be granted by staying proceedings at law after a verdict, if the party applying has been guilty of laches as to the matter of defence, or might by reasonable diligence have procured the requisite proofs before the trial.<sup>3</sup> Thus, if a defendant has omitted to file a bill for a discovery of facts, known to him, and material to his defence, and has suffered the case to go to trial without adequate proof of such facts, he cannot afterwards claim an injunction, or a new trial from a Court of Equity ; for it was his own folly not to have prepared himself with such proof, or to have filed a bill for a discovery, and to have procured a

But I have given in the text, what seems the fair result of the leading authorities. The case of the receipt stated in Gainsborough v. Gifford, 2 P. Will. 424, seems to have been doubted by Lord Eldon in Protheroe v. Forman, 2 Swanst. R. 232, 233. But it has been recognised, either absolutely, or in a qualified manner, in other cases. stay of the trial until the discovery.<sup>1</sup> So, if the facts, on which the bill is founded, although discovered since *the trial, might have been established at the [*181] trial, upon the cross examination of a witness, and the party was put upon the inquiry, relief will be refused.<sup>2</sup> So, where a verdict has been obtained at law against a defendant, and he has neglected to apply for a new trial within the time appointed by the rules of the proper Court of Law, Courts of Equity will not entertain a bill for an injunction upon the alleged ground, that the original demand was unconscientious, or the subject-matter of an account; provided it was competent for the party to have laid those grounds before the jury on the trial, or before the Court of Law upon the motion for a new trial.<sup>3</sup>

§ 895. a. Indeed; this doctrine is not limited to mere cases decided in the Courts of common law; but it is applicable to all cases, where the matter of the controversy has been already decided on by another Court of competent jurisdiction, even though it be a foreign Court, or where it might have been made available in that Court as a matter of claim or defence in a suit pending in such Court. For it has been truly said, not to be the practice of Courts of Equity, to assume jurisdiction in favor of parties, who, having had an opportunity of asserting their title in another Court, where the matter has been properly the subject of adjudication, have either missed that opportunity, or have not thought proper to bring their title forward.<sup>1</sup>

§ 896. The general reasoning, upon which this doctrine is maintained, is the common maxim, that Courts of Equity, like Courts of Law, require due and reasonable diligence from all parties in suits; and that it is sound policy to suppress multiplicity of suits. Lord Redesdale has stated it with great clearness and force. “It is not sufficient (said he) to show, that injustice has been done; but that it has been done under circumstances, which authorize the Court to interfere. Because, if a matter has been already investigated in a Court of Justice, according to the common and ordinary rules of investigation, a Court of Equity cannot take on itself to enter into it again. Rules are established, some by the Legislature, [* 182] some by the Courts themselves, *for the purpose of putting an end to litigation. And it is more important, that an end should be put to litigation, than that justice should be done in every case. The truth is, that, owing to the inattention of parties and several other causes, exact justice can very seldom be done.”<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Marquess of Breadalbane v. Marquess of Chandos, 2 Mylne & Craig, 721, 732, 733; Norton v. Woods, 5 Paige, R. 249. A foreign judgment is now generally held to be as conclusive as a domestic judgment, when it has been rendered upon the merits. But still it may be affected by fraud; and if it is sought to be made available here, an injunction will lie to it, in the same way as it will lie to any other security or any judgment here; Bowles v. Orr, 1 Younge & Coll. 464, 473.

“The inattention of parties in a Court of Law can scarcely be made a subject for the interference of a Court of Equity. There may be cases cognizable at law and also in Equity, and of which cognizance cannot be effectually taken at law ; and therefore Equity does sometimes interfere ; as in cases of complicated accounts, where the party has not made defence, because it was impossible for him to do it effectually at law. So, where a verdict has been obtained by fraud ; or, where a party has possessed himself improperly of something, by means of which he has an unconscientious advantage at law, which Equity will either put out of the way, or restrain him from using. But without circumstances of that kind, I do not know, that Equity ever does interfere to grant a trial of a matter, which has been already discussed in a Court of Law ; a matter capable of being discussed there ; and over which the Court of Law had full jurisdiction.”<sup>1</sup>—“A bill for a new trial is watched by Equity with extreme jealousy. It must see, that injustice has been done, not merely through the inattention of the parties ; but some such reasons, as those, I have mentioned must exist.”<sup>2</sup>

*§ 897. In the next place, Courts of Equity [*183] will not relieve a party, by an injunction to a judgment or other proceedings at law, against a mistake in pleading, or in the conduct of the cause ; or when he has failed in obtaining fresh evidence ; or merely to let in new corroborative evidence ;<sup>3</sup> or, because a question of law has been erroneously decided by the Court of Law.<sup>1</sup>

§ 898. In the next place, Courts of Equity will not grant an injunction to stay proceedings at law, merely on account of any defect of jurisdiction of the the Court, where such proceedings are pending. It has been said, that, although Courts of Equity do not profess to proceed upon the ground of any such defect of jurisdiction ; yet, that it is remarkable, that one of the most ordinary instances of this species of interposition by the Equity Courts in England seems exclusively founded upon it ; namely, where a suit is instituted in the Spiritual Court for tithes, and a modus is set up as a defence.<sup>2</sup> Perhaps this criticism is a little too refined. The Spiritual Courts have a general jurisdiction in matters of tithes ; and if the defendant should plead a modus in a suit there for tithes, and the modus should be admitted, the Spiritual Courts are not ousted of their jurisdiction. But if the modus should be denied, then the Spiritual Courts cannot proceed, [* 184] propter triationis defectum ; and *a prohibition lies. The jurisdiction then attaches in Equity in such cases, not upon the ground of a want of original jurisdiction of the Spiritual Courts over the suit ; but upon the ground of the remedy there, under such circumstances, not being adequate and complete ; and the injunction follows as a natural result of the necessity of exercising an exclusive jurisdiction.<sup>3</sup> Lord Hardwicke, in a case of this sort, said ; “ Injunctions in this Court are granted upon a suggestion of something, which affects the rights or convenience of the party in the proceedings in the other Court ; or where there is a concurrent jurisdiction.”<sup>1</sup> The same remarks apply to the exercise of exclusive jurisdiction by Courts of Equity in cases of legacies ; where an injunction is issued against proceedings in the Spiritual Courts.<sup>2</sup>

§ 899. It has sometimes been made a question, whether Courts of Equity have authority to stay proceedings in the Courts of foreign countries. Nothing can be clearer, than the proposition, that the Courts of one country cannot exercise any control or superintending authority over those of another country. The independence, equality, and sovereignty of every country would repudiate any such interference, as inconsistent with its own supremacy within its own territorial domains. But although the Courts of one country have no authority to stay proceedings in the Courts of another, they have an undoubted authority to control all persons and things within their own territorial limits. Where, therefore, both *parties to a suit in a foreign country, are [*185] resident within the territorial limits of another country, the Courts of Equity in the latter may act in personam upon those parties, and direct them, by injunction, to proceed no farther in such suit. In such a case these Courts act upon acknowledged principles of public law in regard to jurisdiction. They do not pretend to direct, or control the foreign Court ; but without regard to the situation of the subject-matter of the

Baker, 2 Freem. 125 ; 1 Ch. Ca. 67. In Love v. Baker it appears, that one only of several parties who had begun proceedings in the Court of Leghorn was resident within the jurisdiction here, and the Court allowed the subpœna to be served on him, and that this should be good service on the rest. So far there seems to have been very little scruple in extending the jurisdiction. Lord Clarendon refused the injunction to restrain those proceedings at Leghorn, after advising with the other Judges. But the report adds, ‘sed quære, for all the bar was of another opinion ;’ and it is said that, when the argument against issuing it was used, that this Court had no authority to bind a foreign Court, the answer was given, that the injunction was not directed to the foreign Court, but to the party within the jurisdiction here. A very sound answer, as it appears to me ; for the same argument might apply to a Court within this country, which no order of this Court ever affects to bind, our orders being only pointed at the parties to restrain them from proceeding. Accordingly, this case of Love v. Baker has not been recognised or followed in later times. Two instances are mentioned in Mr. Hargrave’s collection of the jurisdiction being recognised ; and in the case of Wharton v. May, 5 Ves. 71 ; see also Kennedy v. Earl of Cassillis, 2 Swans. 313 ; Bushby v. Munday, 5 Mad. 297 ; Harrison v. Gurney, 2 J. & W. 563 ; Beauchamp v. Marquis of Huntley, Jac. 546, which underwent so much discussion, part of the decree was to restrain the defendants from entering up any judgment, or carrying on any action, in what is called ‘the Court of Great Session in Scotland,’ meaning, of course, the Court of Session. I have directed a search to be made for precedents in case the jurisdiction had been exercised in any instances, which have not been reported ; and one has been found directly in point. It is the case of Campbell v. Houlditch in 1820, where Lord Eldon ordered an injunction to restrain the defendant from further proceeding in an action, which he had commenced before the Court of Session in Scotland. From the note, which his Lordship himself wrote upon the petition, requiring a further affidavit, and from his refusing the injunction to the extent prayed, it is clear, that he paid particular attention to it. This precedent, therefore, is of very high authority. In truth, nothing can be more unfounded than the doubts of the jurisdiction. That is grounded, like all other jurisdiction of the Court, not upon any pretension to the exercise of judicial and administrative rights abroad, but on the circumstance of the person of the party, on whom this order is made, being within the power of the Court. If the Court can command him to bring home goods from abroad, or to assign chattel interests, or to convey real property locally situate abroad; if, for instance, as in Penn v. Lord Baltimore, 1 Ves. sen. 444, it can decree the performance of an agreement touching the boundary of a province in North America; or, as in the case of Toller v. Carteret, 2 Vern. 494, can foreclose a mortgage in the isle of Sark, one of the channel islands; in precisely the like manner it can restrain the party, being within the limits of its jurisdiction, from doing any thing abroad, whether the thing forbidden be a conveyance or other act in pais, or the instituting or prosecution of an action in a foreign Court. It is upon these grounds, I must add, and these precedents, that I choose to rest the jurisdiction, and not upon certain others of a very doubtful nature, such as the power assumed in the year 1682, in Arglasse v. Muschamp, 1 Vern. 75, and again by Lord Macclesfield in the year 1724, in Fryer v. Bernard, 2 P. Wms. 261, of granting a sequestration against the estates of a defendant situated in Ireland. The reasons given by that great Judge in the latter case plainly show, that he went upon a ground, which would now be untenable, viz., what he terms the superintendent power of the Courts in this country over those in Ireland. And indeed he supports his order by expressly referring to the right then claimed by the King's Bench in England to reverse the judgments of the King's Bench in Ireland. This pretension, however, has long ago been abandoned, and has indeed been discontinued by parliamentary interposition; and the power of enforcing in Ireland judgments pronounced here, and vice versâ, is at the present time the subject of legislative consideration." § 900. Notwithstanding the clearness of the general principle, the jurisdiction to stay proceedings in suits in foreign countries, by injunction in personam upon parties resident within the realm, was greatly doubted in the time of Lord Clarendon ; and his Lordship, after taking the opinion of the Judges, decided against the jurisdiction. His decision, [*186] *however, was not satisfactory to the Bar ;<sup>1</sup> and the doctrine has, in modern times, been completely established the other way. It is now held, that wherever the parties are resident within a country, the Courts of that country have full authority to act upon them personally with respect to the subject of suits in a foreign country, as the ends of justice may require ; and with that view, to order them to take, or to omit to take, any steps and proceedings in any other Court of Justice, whether in the same country, or in any foreign country.<sup>2</sup> There is a recognised exception to this doctrine in America ; and that is, that the State Courts cannot injoin proceedings in the Courts of the United States ; nor the latter in the former Courts. But this exception proceeds upon peculiar grounds of municipal and constitutional law, the

*§ 901. Another class of cases of an analogous nature, to which the process of injunction is also most beneficially applied, is, to suppress undue and vexatious litigation.<sup>2</sup> We have already seen the manner, in which it is applied in cases of Bills of Peace.<sup>3</sup> But Courts of Equity are not limited in their jurisdiction to cases of this sort. On the contrary, they possess the power to restrain and injoin parties in all other cases of vexatious litigation. Thus, for instance, where a party is guilty of continual and repeated breaches of his covenants ; although it may be said, that such breaches may be recompensed by repeated actions of covenant ; yet a Court of Equity will interpose, and injoin the party from further violations of such covenants. For, it has been well

<sup>1</sup> Diggs v. Wolcott, 4 Cranch, 179; McKim v. Voorhes, 7 Cranch R. 279. See also Cruikshanks v. Robarts, 6 Madd. R. 104. In Mead v. Merritt, (2 Paige, R. 404, 405,) Mr. Chancellor Walworth, after admitting the general principles, said, that it had frequently been decided in that Court, (the Court of Chancery of New York,) that it would not sustain an injunction bill to restrain a suit or proceeding previously commenced in a sister State, or in any of the Federal Courts. That not only comity, but public policy, forbade the exercise of such a power. In Mitchill v. Bunch, (2 Paige, 606,) the same Court not only asserted jurisdiction to decree the application of real property, situate out of the jurisdiction of the Court, but to compel the defendant, either to bring the property in dispute within the jurisdiction of the Court, or to execute a conveyance or transfer thereof, so as to vest the legal title, as well as the possession, according to the lex rei sitæ. Ante, § 743, 744.

<sup>2</sup> The prevention of multiplicity of suits is a distinct ground, upon which Courts of Equity maintain jurisdiction in a variety of cases. Hence it is, that, where a Court of Equity has acquired a jurisdiction for a discovery, it will, in many cases, proceed to make a final decree upon the merits, in order to prevent multiplicity of suits. Ante, § 64, 546.

remarked, that the power has, in many instances, been recognised at law, as resting on the very circumstance, that without such interposition the party can do nothing but repeatedly resort to law ; and when suits have proceeded to such an extent, as to become vexatious, for that very reason the jurisdiction of a Court of Equity attaches.<sup>1</sup>

— § 902. Upon the same ground Courts of Equity have interposed, by way of injunction, to prevent a party, who has been discharged from a contract by [*188] *the sentence of a foreign Court, from being again sued on the same contract in the Courts of Law of another State. Such a sentence, if obtained upon the merits, is, or certainly ought to be, conclusive between the parties ; and as such, there would seem to be a complete defence at law against such new suit by the plea of res judicata. But Courts of Equity have deemed it right, nevertheless, to sustain the jurisdiction ; because the nature and effect of a foreign judgment may not be without hazard and embarrassment in a suit at law ; and there is great difference between domestic and foreign judgments in their forms, as well as in their effects, as records.<sup>2</sup>

§ 903. With a view to the same beneficial purpose, and to suppress undue and mischievous litigation, Courts of Equity will, in like manner, prevent a party from setting up an unconscientious defence at law, or from interposing impediments to the just rights of the other party.<sup>3</sup> In such cases Courts of Equity act by injunction, and by that process prohibit the party from asserting such an unconscientious defence, or from setting up such an impediment to the obstruction of justice. In cases of this sort they act, as ancillary to the administration of justice in other Courts. Thus, for instance, if an ejectment is brought to try a right to land in a Court of Common Law, a Court of Equity will, under proper circumstances, restrain the party in possession from setting up any title, which may prevent the fair trial of the right ; as, for example, a term of years or other outstanding interest in a *trustee, or lessee, or mortgagee. But this will [*189] not be done in every case ; for, as the Court proceeds upon the principle, that the party in possession ought not in conscience to use an accidental advantage, to protect his possession against a real right in his adversary, if there is any counter Equity in the circumstances of the case, which meets the reasoning upon this principle, the Court will not interfere. Thus, it will not interfere against the possessor, who is a bonâ fide purchaser for a valuable consideration, without notice of the adverse claim at the time of his purchase.<sup>1</sup>

§ 904. Cases often arise, in which a party may be entitled to proceed in a suit at law for damages, when a complete equitable defence exists, which is yet incapable of being asserted at law. In such cases the suit at law is treated as vexatious, and will be stayed by an injunction. Thus, for instance, if a decree has been made against a vendor for a specific performance of a contract for the sale of land, notwithstanding the vendee has not strictly complied with the terms of the contract, and subsequently a suit is brought by the vendor against vendee for the breach of the contract ; a Court of Equity will restrain the suit, as being unjustifiable, and vexatious.<sup>1</sup> So, (as has been already stated,) if a creditor should give time to his debtor, and should thereby release the surety in Equity ; and he should afterwards proceed at law against the surety ; the suit would be stopped by injunction upon a similar *ground.<sup>2</sup> Indeed, there can scarcely be found an end to the enumeration of cases, in which vexatious suits of this sort have been suppressed by injunctions, when there was no redress at law, and yet when, upon the principles of justice, the party was entitled to complete protection against such litigation.

§ 905. In the next place let us proceed to the consideration of the granting of injunctions to restrain the alienation of property in the largest sense of the words. The propriety of this sort of relief will at once be seen by considering a very few cases, in which it is indispensable to secure the enjoyment of specific property ; or to preserve the title to such property ; or to prevent frauds, or gross and irremediable injustice in respect to such property.

§ 906. We have already had occasion to speak of the interposition of Courts of Equity, in directing the delivery of title deeds and other instruments to the parties properly entitled to them ;<sup>3</sup> and also in directing the delivery of chattels of a peculiar value, and not capable of compensation, to the lawful owners.<sup>4</sup> This remedial justice is administered by means of the process of injunction. In regard to negotiable securities, as by their being transferred to a bonâ fide holder without notice, the latter may be entitled to recover upon them, notwithstanding any fraud in their original concoction, or the loss of them by the real owner, it is often indispensable to the *security of the party, [* 191] against whose rights they may be thus made available, to obtain an injunction, prohibiting any such transfer.<sup>1</sup>

§ 907. The same principle is applied to restrain the transfer of stocks. Thus, for instance, where there is a controversy respecting the title to stock under different wills, an injunction will be granted to restrain any transfer pendente lite.<sup>2</sup> So an injunction will be granted, where the title to stock is controverted between principal and agent;<sup>3</sup> or where a trustee or agent attempts to transfer it for his own benefit, and to the injury of the party beneficially entitled to it.<sup>4</sup> So, an injunction will be granted to restrain the payment of money, where it is injurious to the party, to whom it belongs; or where it is in violation of the trust, to which it should be devoted.<sup>5</sup> So, it will be granted to restrain the transfer of dia-

§ 908. In like manner, an injunction will be granted to restrain a party from making vexatious alienations [*192] of real property pendente lite.<sup>2</sup> So, also, to *restrain a vendor from conveying the legal title to real estate, pending a suit for the specific performance of a contract for the sale of that estate.<sup>3</sup> For in every such case, the plaintiff may be put to the expense of making the vendor a party to the proceedings; and, at all events, his title, if he prevails in the suit, may be embarrassed by such new outstanding title under the transfer.<sup>4</sup> Although the maxim is, pendente lite nil innovetur, that maxim is not to be understood, as warranting the conclusion, that the conveyance so made is absolutely null and void at all times, and for all purposes. The true interpretation* of the maxim is, that the conveyance does not vary the rights of the parties in that suit; and they are not bound to take notice of the title acquired under it; but with regard to them, the title is to be taken, as if it had never existed. Otherwise, suits would be indeterminable, if one party, pending the suit, could, by conveying to others, create a necessity for introducing new parties.<sup>5</sup>

§ 909. In the next place, let us proceed to the consideration of injunctions in cases of waste.<sup>1</sup> The state of the Common Law, with regard to waste, was very learnedly expounded by Lord Chief Justice Eyre, in a celebrated case;<sup>2</sup> and it can be best stated in his own words. “At Common Law, (said he) the proceeding in waste was by writ of prohibition from the Court of Chancery, which was considered as the foundation of a suit between the party suffering by the waste, and the party committing it. If that writ was obeyed, the ends of justice were answered. But, if that was not obeyed, and an alias and pluries produced no effect, then came the original writ of attachment out of Chancery, returnable in a Court of Common Law, which was considered, as the original writ of the Court. The form of that writ shows the nature of it. It was the same original writ of attachment, which was and is the foundation of all proceedings in prohibition, and of many other proceedings in this Court at this day, &c. That writ being returnable in a Court of Common Law, and most usually in the Court of Common Pleas, on the defendant appearing the plaintiff counted against him; he pleaded; the question was tried; and, if the defendant was found guilty, the plaintiff recovered single damages for the waste committed. Thus the matter stood at Common Law. It has been said (and truly so, I think, so far as can be collected from the text writers,) that, at the Common Law, this proceeding lay only against tenant in dower, tenant by the curtesy, and [*194] *guardian in chivalry. It was extended by different Statutes, (Stat. of Marlbridge, ch. 24; Stat. of Gloucester, ch. 5), to farmers, tenants for life, and tenants for years, and, I believe, to guardians in socage.<sup>1</sup> That, which these statutes gave by way of remedy, was not so properly the introduction of a new law, as the extension of an old one to a new description of persons. The course of proceeding remained the same as before these statutes were made. The first act, which introduced any thing substantially new, was that (Stat. of Gloucester, ch. 13), which gave a writ of waste or estrepement, pending the suit. It follows, of course, that this was a judicial writ, and was to issue out of the Courts of Common Law. But, except for the purpose of staying proceedings pending a suit, there is no intimation in any of our text writers, that any prohibition could issue from those Courts. By the Statute of Westminster 2nd, the writ of prohibition is taken away, and the writ of summons is substituted in its place; and, although it is said by Lord Coke, when treating of prohibition at the Common Law, that it 'may be used at this day,' those words, if true at all, can only apply to that very ineffectual writ, directed to the Sheriff, empowering him to take the posse comitatus to prevent the commission of waste intended to be done. The writ directed to the party was certainly taken away by the Statute. At least, as far as my researches go, no such *writ has issued even from Chancery, in the [*195] common cases of waste by tenants in dower, tenants by the curtesy, and guardians in chivalry, tenants for life, &c. &c., since it was taken away by the Statute of Westminster 2nd. Thus the Common Law remedy stood, with the alteration above mentioned, and with the judicial writ of estrepement introduced pendente lite.”<sup>1</sup>

(See Echcliff v. Baldwin, 16 Ves. 267; Daly v. Kelly, 4 Dow, R. 435.) But the true doctrine seems to be that asserted in the text. If, however, the purchaser, pendente lite, be a purchaser of the legal estate, and not of a mere equitable estate, it may, after the determination of the pending suit, be necessary, in order to compel a surrender of his title, or to declare it void, to institute a new suit against him. Bishop of Winchester v. Paine, 11 Ves. 197; Murray v. Ballou, 1 John. Ch. R. 576 to 581; Murray v. Lylburn, 2 John. Ch. R. 444, 445; Metcalf v. Pulvertoft, 2 Ves. & B. 204, 205; Story on Equity Plead. § 156, § 351.

<sup>1</sup> Mr. Reeves (Hist. of the Law, vol. 1, p. 186, vol. 2, p. 73, 74, 148, note) seems to suppose, that these Statutes were but an affirmation of the Common Law. In this opinion he is opposed by Lord Coke and other great authorities; and Mr. Eden (on Injunct. ch. 8, p. 145, note) very properly considers the weight of authority decidedly against Mr. Reeves.

<sup>1</sup> Ibid. p. 121, 122. Mr. Justice Blackstone has given a very full view of the action of waste at the Common Law, and as awarded by Statute. He says, “A writ of waste is also an action, partly founded upon the Common Law and partly upon the Statute of Gloucester, (6 Edw. 1, ch. 5,) and may be brought by him, who hath the immediate estate of inheritance in reversion or remainder, against the tenant for life, tenant in dower, tenant by the curtesy, or tenant for years. This action is also maintainable in pursuance of statute (13 Edw. 1, c. 22) Westminster 2, by one tenant in common of the inheritance against another, who makes waste in the estate holden in common. The equity of which statute extends to joint-tenants, but not to coparceners: because by the old law coparceners might make partition, whenever either of them thought proper, and thereby prevent future waste. But tenants in common and joint-tenants could not; and therefore the statute gave them this remedy, compelling the defendant either to make partition, and take the place wasted to his own share, or to give security not to commit any farther waste, (2 Inst. 403, 404.) But these tenants in common and joint-tenants are not liable to the penalties of the Statute of Gloucester, which extends only to such as have life-estates, and do waste to the prejudice of the inheritance. The waste however must be something considerable; for if it amount only to twelve pence, or some such petty sum, the plaintiff shall not recover in an action of waste: Nam de minimis non curat lex.” Finch. L. 29; see 3 Black. Comm. 227, 228.

the Common Law, it may be added, that there was, by the Common Law, another remedy of a preventive nature in the writ of estrepement. This lay after a judgment obtained in a real action, before possession was delivered by the sheriff, to prevent the tenant from committing waste in the lands recovered.<sup>1</sup> And the Statute of Gloucester, which gave the writ of estrepement pendente lite, also directed, (ch. 5,) that the tenant should forfeit the place wasted, and also treble damages.<sup>2</sup>

§ 911. The remedy by writ of estrepement was applicable only to cases of real actions; and when the proceeding by ejectment became the usual mode of trying a title to land, as the writ of estrepement did not apply, Courts of Equity, acting upon the prin-

*§ 912. But Courts of Equity have by no [*196] means limited themselves to an interference in cases of this sort. They have, indeed, often interfered in restraining waste by persons having limited interests in property, on the mere ground of the Common Law rights of the parties, and the difficulty of obtaining the immediate preservation of the property from destruction or irreparable injury by the process of the Common Law. But they have also extended this salutary relief to cases, where the remedies provided in the Courts of Common Law could not be made to apply ; and where the titles of the parties were purely of an equitable nature ;<sup>2</sup> and where the waste is, what is commonly, although with no great propriety of language, called equitable waste ;<sup>3</sup> meaning acts, which are deemed waste only in Courts of Equity.

§ 913. In order to show the beneficial nature of the remedial interference of Courts of Equity in cases of waste, it may not be without use to suggest a few cases, where it is indispensable for the purposes of justice, and there is either no remedy at all at law, or none, which is adequate. In the first place, there are many cases, where a person is punishable at law for committing waste, yet a Court of Equity will enjoin him. As where there is a tenant for life,

§ 914. In the next place Courts of Equity will grant an injunction in cases, where the aggrieved party has equitable rights only ; and, indeed, it has been said, that these Courts will grant it more strongly, where there is a trust estate.<sup>5</sup> Thus, for instance, in cases of mortgages, if the mortgagor or mortgagee in possession commits waste, or threatens to commit it, an injunction will be granted, although there is no remedy at law.<sup>6</sup> So, where there is a contingent estate, or an executory devise over, dependent upon a legal estate, Courts of Equity will not permit waste to be done to the injury of such estate; more especially not, if it is an executory devise of a trust [*198] estate.<sup>1</sup>

§ 915. In the next place, in regard to equitable waste, which may be defined to be such acts as at law would not be esteemed to be waste, under the circumstances of the case, but which, in the view of a Court of Equity, are so esteemed, from their manifest injury to the inheritance, although they are not inconsistent with the legal rights of the party committing them. Thus, for example, if there be a tenant for life without impeachment for waste, and he should pull down houses, or do other waste wantonly or maliciously, a Court of Equity would restrain him; for, it is said, a Court of Equity ought to moderate the exercise of such a power, and, pro bono publico, restrain extravagant humorous waste.<sup>2</sup> Upon this ground, tenants for life without impeachment for waste, and tenants in tail, after possibility of issue extinct, have been restrained, not only from acts of waste to the destruction of the estate, but also from cutting down trees planted for the ornament or shelter of the premises.<sup>3</sup> In all such cases the party is deemed guilty of a wanton and unconscientious abuse of his rights, ruinous to the interests of other parties.

[* 199] *§ 916. Upon similar grounds, although Courts of Equity will not interfere by injunction to prevent waste in cases of tenants in common, or coparceners, or jointenants, because they have a right to enjoy the estate, as they please ; yet they will interfere in special cases ; as where the party committing the waste is insolvent ; or where the waste is destructive of the estate, and not within the usual legitimate exercise of the right of enjoyment of the estate.<sup>1</sup>

§ 917. From this very brief view of some of the more important cases of equitable interference in cases of waste, the inadequacy of the remedy at Common Law, as well to prevent waste, as to give redress for waste already committed, is so unquestionable, that there is no wonder, that the resort to the Courts of Law has, in a great measure, fallen into disuse. The action of waste is of rare occurrence in modern times ;<sup>2</sup> an action on the case for waste being generally substituted in its place, whenever any remedy is sought at law. The remedy by a bill in Equity is so much more easy, expeditious, and complete, that it is almost invariably resorted to.<sup>3</sup> By such a bill, not only may future waste be prevented ; but, as we have already seen, an account may be decreed, and compensation given for past waste.<sup>1</sup> Besides ; an action on the case will not lie at law for permissive waste ;<sup>2</sup> but in Equity an injunction will be granted to restrain permissive waste, as well as voluntary waste.<sup>3</sup>

§ 918. The interference of Courts of Equity in restraint of waste was originally confined to cases founded in privity of title ; and for the plaintiff to state a case, in which the defendant pretended, that the plaintiff was not entitled to the estate, or in which the defendant was asserted to claim under an adverse right, was said to be for the plaintiff to state himself out of Court. But at present the Courts have, by insensible degrees, enlarged the jurisdiction to reach cases of adverse claims and rights, not founded in privity ; as, for instance, to cases of trespass, attended with irreparable mischief, which we shall have occasion hereafter to consider.<sup>4</sup>

§ 919. The jurisdiction, then of Courts of Equity to interpose, by way of injunction, in cases of waste, may be referred to the broadest principles of social justice. It is exerted, where the remedy at law is imperfect, or is wholly denied ; where the nature of the injury is such, that a preventive remedy is indispensable, and it should be permanent ; where matters of discovery and account are incidental to the proper relief ;<sup>5</sup> and where equitable rights and equitable injuries call for redress, to prevent a malicious, wanton, and capricious abuse of their legal rights and authorities by persons having but temporary and limited interests in the subject-matter. On the other hand, Courts of Equity will often interfere in cases, where the tenant in possession is impeachable for waste, and direct timber to be felled, which is fit to be cut, and in danger of running into decay, and thus will secure the proceeds for the benefit of those, who are entitled to it.<sup>1</sup>

§ 920. In the next place, let us proceed to the consideration of the granting of injunctions in cases of nuisance. Nuisances may be of two sorts ; (1) such, as are injurious to the public at large, or to public rights ; (2) such as are injurious to the rights and interests of private persons.

§ 921. In regard to public nuisances, the jurisdiction of Courts of Equity seems to be of a very ancient date ; and has been distinctly traced back to the reign of Queen Elizabeth.<sup>2</sup> The jurisdiction is applicable, not only to public nuisances, strictly so called ; but also to purprestures upon public rights and property. Purpresture, according to Lord Coke, signifies a close, or enclosure, that is, when one encroaches, or makes that several to himself, which ought to be common to many.<sup>3</sup> The term was in the old law writers applied to cases of encroachment, not only upon the king, but upon subjects. But in its common acceptation, it is now understood to mean an encroachment upon the king, either upon part of his demesne lands, or upon rights and easements held by the crown for the public, such as upon highways, public rivers, forts, streets, squares, bridges, quays and other public accommodations.<sup>1</sup>

§ 922. In cases of purpresture, the remedy for the crown is either by an information of intrusion at the common law, or by an information at the suit of the Attorney General in Equity. In the case of a judgment upon an information of intrusion, the erection complained of, whether it be a nuisance or not, is abated. But upon a decree in Equity, if it appear to be a mere purpresture, without being at the same time a nuisance, the Court may direct an inquiry to be made, whether it is most beneficial to the crown to abate the purpresture, or to suffer the erections to remain and be arrented.<sup>2</sup> But if purpresture be also a public nuisance, this cannot be done; for the crown cannot sanction a public nuisance.<sup>3</sup>

§ 923. In cases of public nuisances, properly so called, an indictment lies to abate them, and to punish the offenders. But an information also lies in Equity to redress the grievance by way of injunction. The instances of the interposition of the Court, however, are (it is said) rare, and principally confined to informations seeking preventive relief. Thus, informations in Equity have been maintained against a public nuisance by stopping a highway. Analogous [*203] *to that, there have been many cases in the Court of Exchequer of nuisance to harbors, which are a species of highway. If the soil belongs to the crown, there is the species of remedy for purpresture abovementioned for that. If the soil does not belong to the crown, but it is merely a common nuisance to all the public, an information in Equity lies. But the question of nuisance or not must, in cases of doubt, be tried by a jury; and the injunction will be granted or not, as that fact is decided.<sup>1</sup> And the Court, in the exercise of its jurisdiction, will direct the matter to be tried upon an indictment, and reserve its decree accordingly.<sup>2</sup>

§ 924. The ground of this jurisdiction of Courts of Equity in cases of purpresture, as well as of public nuisances, undoubtedly is, their ability to give a more complete and perfect remedy, than is attainable at law, in order to prevent irreparable mischief, and also to suppress oppressive and vexatious litigations.<sup>3</sup> In the first place, they can interpose, where the Courts of Law cannot, to restrain and prevent such nuisances, which are threatened or in progress, as well as to abate those already existing.<sup>1</sup> In the next place, by a perpetual injunction the remedy is made complete through all future time; whereas, an information or indictment at the common Law can only dispose of the present nuisance; and for future acts new prosecutions must be brought. In the next * place, the remedial justice in Equity may be [*204] prompt and immediate, before irreparable mischief is done; whereas, at law nothing can be done, except after a trial, and upon the award of judgment. In the next place, a Court of Equity will not only interfere upon the information of the Attorney General, but also upon the application of private parties, directly affected by the nuisance; whereas, at law, in many cases the remedy is, or may be, solely through the instrumentality of the Attorney General.<sup>2</sup>

Genl. v. Forbes 2 Mylne & Craig, 129, 130. On this occasion Lord Cottenham said: "With respect to the question of jurisdiction, it was broadly asserted, that an application to this Court to prevent a nuisance to a public road, was never heard of. A little research, however, would have found many such instances. Many cases might have been produced, in which the Court has interfered to prevent nuisances to public rivers and to public harbors. And the Court of Exchequer, as well as this Court, acting as a court of equity, has a well-established jurisdiction, upon a proceeding by way of information, to prevent nuisances to public harbors and public roads; and, in short, generally, to prevent public nuisances. In Bor v. Allen, this Court interfered to stay the proceedings of parties, whose jurisdiction is quite as high as that of the court of quarter sessions over bridges, namely, the Commissioners of Sewers. Those commissioners possess a jurisdiction founded on acts of parliament, and they have a right, within the due limits of their authority, to do all necessary acts in the execution of their functions. Nevertheless, if they so execute what they conceive to be their duty, as to create or occasion a public nuisance, this Court has an undoubted right to interpose. The same

§ 924. a. But in all cases of this sort Courts of Equity will grant an injunction to restrain a public nuisance, only in cases where fact is already made out upon determinate and satisfactory evidence. For if the evidence be conflicting, and the injury to the public doubtful, that alone will constitute a ground for withholding this extraordinary interposition.<sup>1</sup> And, indeed, question occurred in Kerrison v. Sparrow before Lord Eldon, in which his Lordship, under the circumstances of the case, considered, that he ought not to interfere; but the jurisdiction of the Court was not there denied or disputed. In Attorney-General v. Johnson the objection to the jurisdiction was attempted to be raised. The defendants in that case, the corporation of the city of London, were authorized by act of parliament to do what was necessary to be done in the exercise of their duty, as conservators of the river Thames. But, in that particular instance, they had assumed to themselves a right to carry on, or sanction operations, which created a nuisance to the King's subjects; and the Court accordingly interfered to prevent them from so exercising their undoubted legal powers. To say that this Court, when it interferes in such a case, is acting as a court of appeal from the court of quarter sessions, is any thing but a correct representation of the fact. The jurisdiction is exercised, not for the purpose of overruling the power of others, by way of appeal from their authority, but for the purpose of exerting a salutary control over all, for the protection of the public. See also Spencer v. London & Birmingham Railway Comp'y. 8 Sim. R. 193; Sampson v. Smith, 8 Sim. R. 272.

<sup>1</sup> Earl of Ripon v. Hobart, 1 Cooper, Sel. Cas. 333; S. C. 3 Mylne & Keen, 159. In this last case Lord Brougham, said; "In considering more generally the question, which is raised by the present motion, I certainly think we shall not go beyond what both principle and authority justify, if we lay down the rule respecting the relief by injunction, as applied to such cases as this. If the thing, sought to be prohibited, is in itself a nuisance, the court will interfere to stay irreparable mischief without waiting for the result of a trial; and will, according to the circumstances, direct an issue, or allow an action, and, if need be, expedite the proceedings, the injunction being in the mean time continued. But where the thing sought to be restrained is not unavoidably and in itself noxious, but only something, which may according to circumstances prove so, then the court will refuse to interfere, until the matter has been tried at law, generally by an action, though in particular cases an issue may be directed for the satisfaction of the court, where an action could not be framed so as to meet the question. The distinction between the two the same doctrine is equally applicable to cases of private nuisance.<sup>1</sup>

kinds of erection or operation is obvious, and the soundness of that discretion seems undeniable, which would be very slow to interfere, where the thing to be stopped, while it is highly beneficial to one party, may very possibly be prejudicial to none. The great fitness of pausing much before we interrupt men in those modes of enjoying or improving their property, which are prima facie harmless or even praiseworthy, is equally manifest. And it is always to be borne in mind, that the jurisdiction of this court over nuisance by injunction at all is of recent growth, has not till very lately been much exercised, and has at various times found great reluctance on the part of the learned judges to use it even in cases, where the thing or the act complained of was admitted to be directly and immediately hurtful to the complainant. All that has been said in the cases, where this unwillingness has appeared, may be referred to in support of the proposition, which I have stated; as in the Attorney General v. Nicholl, 16 Ves. 338; Attorney General v. Cleaver, 18 Ves. 211; and an Anonymous case before Lord Thurlow, in 1 Ves. jun., 140, and others. It is also very material to observe, what is indeed strong authority of a negative kind, that no instance can be produced of the interposition by injunction in the case of what we have been regarding as eventual or contingent nuisance. But some authorities approach very near the ground, upon which I have relied. Lord Hardwicke, in Attorney General v. Doughty, 2 Ves. sen., 453, speaks of plain nuisances, and a plain case of nuisance, as contradistinguished from others, and entitling the court to grant an injunction before answer. Lord Eldon appeared at one time—(Attorney General v. Cleaver)—to think, that there was no instance of an injunction to restrain nuisance without trial. But though this cannot now be maintained it is clear, that in other cases where there appeared a doubt, as in Chalk v. Wyatt, 3 Mer. 688, the injunction was said only to be granted, because damages had been recovered at law. The course, which has been pursued at law, with respect to different kinds of obstructions and other violations of right, furnishes a strong analogy of the same kind. Lord Hale, in a note to Fitzherbert's Nat. Brev. 184, a, speaking of a market holden in derogation of a franchise, says, that if it be kept on the same day, it shall be intended a nuisance; but if it be on another day it shall be put to issue, whether it be a nuisance or not. And the case of Yard v. Ford, 2 Saund. 172, seems to recognise the same distinction." See Mohawk Bridge Company v. Utica and Schenectady Rail Road Company, 6 Paige, R. 559, 563; Spencer v. London and Birmingham Railway Company, 8 Sim. 193.

ference of Courts of Equity by way of injunction is undoubtedly founded upon the ground of restraining irreparable mischief, or of suppressing oppressive and interminable litigation, or of preventing multiplicity of suits.<sup>1</sup> It is not every case, which will furnish a right of action against a party for a nuisance, which will justify the interposition of Courts of Equity to redress the injury, or to remove the annoyance. But there must be such an injury, as from its nature is not susceptible of being adequately compensated by damages at law, or such as, from its continuance or permanent mischief, must occasion a constantly recurring grievance, which cannot be otherwise prevented, but by an injunction.<sup>2</sup> Thus, it has been said, that every common trespass is not a foundation for an injunction, where it is only contingent, fugitive, or temporary. [*205] *But if it is continued so long as to become a nuisance, in such a case an injunction ought to be granted to restrain the person from committing it.<sup>3</sup> So, a mere diminution of the value of property by the nuisance, without irreparable mischief, will not furnish any foundation for equitable relief.<sup>4</sup> ruin to property, may or will ensue from the wrongful act or erection ; in every such case Courts of Equity will interfere by injunction, in furtherance of justice and the violated rights of the party.<sup>1</sup> Thus, for example, where a party builds so near the house of another party, as to darken his windows, against the clear rights of the latter, either by contract, or by ancient possession, Courts of Equity will interfere by injunction to prevent the nuisance, as well as to remedy it, if already done, although an action for damages would lie at law ; for the latter can in no just sense be deemed an adequate relief in such a case.<sup>2</sup> The injury is material, and operates daily to destroy or diminish the comfort and use of the neighboring house ; and the remedy by a multiplicity of actions, for the continuance of it, would furnish no substantial compensation.

<sup>2</sup> Coats v. The Clarence Railway Company, 1 Russ. & Mylne, 181. This principle was strongly exemplified in the case of Bonaparte v. Camden and Amboy Rail Road Company, 1 Baldwin's Cirt. R. 231, where a bill was brought to prevent a Rail Road Company from illegally appropriating the lands of the plaintiff. On this occasion Mr. Justice Baldwin said ; "The injury complained of, as impending over his property, is, its permanent occupation and appropriation to a continuing public use, which requires the divesture of his whole right, its transfer to the company in full property, and his inheritance to be destroyed as effectively, as if he had never been its proprietor. No damages can restore him to his former condition ; its value to him is not money, which money can replace ; nor can there be any specific compensation or equivalent ; his damages are not pecuniary ; (vide 7 Johns. Ch. 731,) his objects in making his establishment were not profit, but repose, seclusion, and a resting place for himself and family. If these objects are about to be defeated, if his rights of property are about to be destroyed, without the authority of law ; or if lawless danger impends over them by persons acting under color of law, when the law gives them no power, or when it is abused, misapplied, exceeded, or not strictly pursued, and the act impending would subject the party committing it to damages in a Court of Law for a trespass, a Court of Equity will enjoin its commission." In the same case it was held, that although an act of the Legislature, appropriating private lands to public uses without compensation first being awarded, was not unconstitutional ; yet a Court of Equity would issue an injunction against the actual possession of the lands until compensation was made. 1 Baldwin Cirt. § 928. It is upon similar grounds, that Courts of Equity interfere in cases of trespasses, that is to say, to prevent irreparable mischiefs, or to suppress multiplicity of suits and oppressive litigation.<sup>3</sup> For if the trespass be fugitive and temporary, and adequate compensation can be obtained in an action at law, there is no ground to justify the interposition of Courts of Equity. Formerly, indeed, Courts of Equity were extremely reluctant to interfere at all, even in regard to cases of repeated trespasses. But, now, there is not the slightest hesitation, if the acts done, or threatened to be done to the property would be ruinous or irreparable, or would impair the just enjoyment of the property in future. If, indeed, Courts of Equity did [*208] not interfere in cases of this sort, there *would (as has been truly said) be a great failure of justice in the country.<sup>4</sup>

§ 929. Thus, for instance, where a mere trespasser digs into, and works a mine, to the injury of the owner, an injunction will be granted, because *it operates a permanent injury to the property, [*209] as a mine.<sup>1</sup> So, where timber is attempted to be cut down by a trespasser in collusion with the tenant of the land.<sup>2</sup> So, where there is a dispute respecting the boundaries of estates, and one of the claimants is about to cut down ornamental or timber trees in the disputed

a trespass by cutting timber, or taking lead ore, or coal, this Court would not interfere; but gave the discovery; and then any action might be brought for the value discovered. But, the trespass dying with the person, if he died, the Court said, this being property, there must be an account of the value; though the Law gave no remedy. In that instance, therefore, the account was given, where an injunction was not wanted. Throughout Lord Hardwicke's time, and down to that of Lord Thurlow, the distinction between waste and trespass was acknowledged; and I have frequently alluded to the case, upon which Lord Thurlow first hesitated. A person, having a close demised to him, began to get coal there; but continued to work under the contiguous close, belonging to another person. And it was held, that the former, as waste, would be restrained; but as to the close, which was not demised to him, it was a mere trespass; and the Court did not interfere. But I take it, that Lord Thurlow changed his opinion upon that; holding, that, if the defendant was taking the substance of the inheritance, the liberty of bringing an action was not all the relief, to which in Equity he was entitled. The interference of the Court is to prevent your removing that, which is his estate. Upon that principle Lord Thurlow granted the injunction, as to both. That has since been repeatedly followed; and whether it was trespass under the color of another's right actually existing, or not. If this protection would be granted in the case of timber, coals, or lead-ore, why is it not equally to be applied to a quarry? The comparative value cannot be considered. The present established course is to sustain a bill for the purpose of injunction, connecting it with the account in both cases; and not to put the plaintiff to come here for an injunction, and to go to law for damages." territory.<sup>1</sup> So, where a party, who is in possession under articles, is proceeding to cut down timber trees.<sup>2</sup> So, where lessees are taking away from a manor, bordering on the sea, stones of a peculiar value.<sup>3</sup> In short, it is now granted in all cases of timber, coals, ores, and quarries, where the party is a mere trespasser ; or where he exceeds the limited rights, with which he is clothed ; upon the ground, that the acts are, or may be an irreparable damage to the particular species of property.<sup>4</sup>

§ 930. It is upon similar principles, to prevent irreparable mischiefs, or to suppress multiplicity of suits and vexatious litigation, that Courts of Equity interfere in cases of Patents for inventions, and in cases of Copy-rights, to secure the rights of the inventor, or author, and his assignees and representatives.<sup>5</sup> It is wholly beside the purpose of the present Commentaries to enter upon the subject of *the general rights of inventors and authors, or to state the circumstances, under which an exclusive property, in virtue of those rights, may be acquired or lost. Our observations will rather be limited to the consideration of the cases, in which Courts of Equity will interfere to protect those rights, when acquired, by granting injunctions.

§ 932. Indeed, in cases of this nature, it is almost impossible to know the extent of the injury done to the party, without a discovery from the party, guilty of the infringement of the patent or copy-right; and if it were otherwise, mere damages would give no adequate relief. For example, in the case of a copy-right, the sale of copies by the defendant is not only, in each instance, taking from the author the profit upon the individual book, which he might otherwise have sold; but it may also be injuring him to an incalculable extent, in regard to the value and disposition of his copy-right, which no inquiry for the purpose of damages could fully ascertain.<sup>2</sup>

§ 933. In addition to this consideration, the plaintiff could at law have no preventive remedy, which should restrain the future use of his invention, or the future publication of his work, injuriously to his title and *interests. And it is this preventive remedy, [*211] which constitutes the peculiar feature of Equity jurisprudence, and enables it to accomplish the great purposes of justice. Besides ; in most cases of this sort, the bill usually seeks an account, in one case of the books printed, and in the other of the profits, which have arisen from the use of the invention, from the persons, who have pirated the same. And this account will, in all cases, where the right has been already established, or is established under the direc-

§ 934. In cases, however, where a patent has been granted for an invention, it is not a matter of course, for Courts of Equity to interpose by way of injunction. If the patent has been but recently granted, and its validity has not been ascertained by a trial at law ; the Court will not generally act upon its own notions of the validity or invalidity of the patent, and grant an immediate injunction ; but it will require it to be ascertained by a trial in a Court of Law, if the defendant denies its validity, or puts the matter in doubt.<sup>2</sup> But, if the patent has been granted for some length of time ; and the patentee has put the invention into public use ; and has had an exclusive possession of it under his patent for a period of time, which may fairly create the just presumption of an exclusive right ; the Court will, in such a case, ordi- [* 212] narily interfere by way of preliminary injunction, pending the proceedings ; reserving of course, unto the ultimate decision of the cause, its own final judgment on the merits.<sup>3</sup> And an injunction will be granted not only before, but after the time limited for the expiration of a patent, to restrain the sale of

§ 935. Similar principles apply to cases of copy-right.<sup>2</sup> But it does not seem indispensable to relief in either case, that the party should have a strictly legal title. It is sufficient, that, under the patent or copy-right, the party has a clear equitable title.<sup>3</sup> Formerly, indeed, Courts of Equity would not interfere, by way of injunction, to protect copy-rights, any more than patent rights, until the title had been established at law. But the present course is to exercise jurisdiction in all cases, where there is a clear color of title, founded upon a long possession and assertion of right.<sup>4</sup>

§ 936. There are some peculiar principles applicable to cases of copy-rights, which deserve notice in this place, and are not generally applicable to patents for inventions. In the first place, no copy-right can exist, consistently with principles of public policy, in any work of a clearly irreligious, immoral, libellous, or obscene description. In the case of an asserted piracy of any such work, if it be not a matter of any real doubt, whether it falls within such a *predicament, or not, Courts of Equity will [*213] not interfere by injunction to prevent, or to restrain the piracy ; but will leave the party to his remedy at law.<sup>5</sup>

§ 937. It is true, that an objection has been taken to this course of proceeding, that by refusing to interfere in such cases to suppress the publication, a Court of Equity virtually promotes the circulation of offensive and mischievous books. But the objection vanishes, when it is considered, that the Court does not affect to act as a censor morum, or to punish or restrain injuries to society generally. It simply withholds its aid from those, who, upon their own showing, have no title to protection, or to assert a property in things, which the law will not, upon motives of the highest concern, permit to be deemed capable of founding a just title or property.<sup>1</sup>

§ 938. The soundness of this general principle can hardly admit of question. The chief embarrassment and difficulty lie in the application of it to particular cases.<sup>2</sup> If a Court of Equity, under color of its general authority, is to enter upon all the moral, theological, metaphysical, and political inquiries, which, in the [* 214] past times, have given rise to *so many controversies, and in the future may well be supposed to provoke many heated discussions, and if it is to decide dogmatically upon the character and bearing of such

work be irreligious, immoral libellous, or seditious, or not, an injunction ought to be denied, upon the mere ground of the doubt. It has been thought, that there is great difficulty in adopting this doctrine, denying the protection of an injunction in matters of property upon mere doubts. Primâ facie the copy-right confers title; and the onus is on the other side to show clearly, that, notwithstanding the copy, there is an intrinsic defect in the title. See Lawrence v. Smith, Jacob. R. 472.

discussions, and the rights of authors growing out of them ; it is obvious, that an absolute power is conferred over the subject of literary property, which may sap the very foundations, on which it rests, and retard, if not entirely suppress, the means of arriving at physical, as well as at metaphysical truths. Thus, for example, a Judge, who should happen to believe, that the immateriality of the soul, as well as its immortality, was a doctrine clearly revealed in the Scriptures, (a point, upon which very learned and pious minds have been greatly divided,) would deem any work anti-christian, which should profess to deny that point, and would refuse an injunction to protect it. So, a Judge, who should be a Trinitarian, might most conscientiously decide against granting an injunction in favor of an author, enforcing Unitarian views ; when another Judge, of opposite opinions, might not hesitate to grant it.<sup>1</sup>

this sort, (it has been said) is, whether there has been a legitimate use of the copy-right publication, in the fair exercise of a mental operation, deserving the character of a new work. If there has been, though it may be prejudicial to the original author, it is not an invasion of his legal rights. If there has not been, then it is treated as a mere colorable curtailment of the original work, and a fraudulent evasion of the copy-right.<sup>1</sup> But this is another mode of stating the difficulty, rather than a test, affording a clear criterion to discriminate between the cases.

gredients may be so small and scattered, that the substance of the volumes may be said to embrace little more, than the labor of sedulous transcription, and colorable curtailment of other works. There are others of an intermediate class, where the intermixture of original and borrowed materials may be seen in proportions more nearly approaching to an equality with each other. And there are others, again, as in cases of maps, charts, translations, and road books, where the materials being equally open to all, there must be a close identity or similitude in the very form and use of the common materials. The difficulty here is to distinguish, what belongs to the exclusive labors of a single mind, from what are the common sources of the materials of the knowledge used by all.<sup>1</sup> Suppose, for instance, the case of maps; one man may publish the map of a country; another man, with the same design, if he has equal skill and opportunity, may by his own labor produce almost a fac simile. He has certainly a right so to do. But then, from his right through that medium, it does not follow, that he would be at liberty to copy the other map, and claim it as his own. He may work on the same original materials; but he cannot exclusively and evasively use those already collected and embodied by the skill and industry and expenditures of another.<sup>2</sup>

§ 941. In some cases of this nature a Court of Equity will take upon itself the task of inspection and comparison of books alleged to be a piracy. *But [*217] the usual practice is to refer the subject to a Master, who then reports, whether the books differ, and in what respects; and upon such a report the Court usually acts in making its interlocutory, as well as its final decree.<sup>1</sup>

§ 942. In cases of the invasion of a copy-right by using the same materials in another work, of which a large proportion is original, it constitutes no objection, that an injunction will in effect stop the sale and circulation of the work, which so infringes upon the copy-right. If the parts, which are original, cannot be separated from those, which are not original, without destroying the use and value of the original matter, he, who has made the improper use of that, which did not belong to him, must suffer the consequences of so doing. If a man mixes what belongs to him, with what belongs to another, and the mixture is forbidden by the law, he must again separate them, and bear all the mischief and loss, which the separation may occasion. The same rule applies to the use of literary matter.<sup>2</sup> It proceeds upon the same general principle of justice, which applies to the ordinary case of a confusion of property by premeditation or wanton impropriety.<sup>3</sup>

a class of cases bearing a close analogy to that of copy-rights; that is to say, cases, where Courts of Equity interfere to restrain the publication of unpublished manuscripts. In cases of literary, scientific, and professional treatises in manuscript, it is obvious, that the author must be deemed to possess the original ownership, and be entitled to appropriate them to such uses, as he shall please. Nor can he justly be deemed to intend to part with that ownership, by depositing them in the possession of a third person, or by allowing a third person to take, and hold a copy of them. Such acts must be deemed strictly limited, in point of right, use, and effect, to the very occasions expressed or implied, and ought not to be construed as a general gift or authority for any purposes of profit or publication, to which the receiver may choose to devote them. The property, then, in such manuscripts, not having been parted with in cases of this sort, if any attempt is made to publish them, without the consent of the author or proprietor, it is obvious, that he ought to be entitled to protection in Equity. And, accordingly, this course of granting injunctions against such unauthorized publications has been constantly acted upon in Courts of Equity;<sup>1</sup> and has been applied to all sorts of literary compositions.

one occasion of this sort, the question arose, whether letters, having the character of literary compositions, remained in any respect the property of the writer, after they were transmitted to the person, to whom they were addressed. It was held, that they did; that by sending letters the writer does not part wholly with his property in the literary compositions, nor give the receiver the power of publishing them; and that at most the receiver has only a special property in them, and possibly may have the property of the paper. But this does not give a license to any person whatsoever to publish them to the world; and at most, the receiver has only a joint property with the writer. Whether he is to be considered as having such joint property or not, letters, having the character of literary composition, must be treated as within the laws protecting the rights of literary property; and a violation of those rights in that instance is attended with the same legal consequences, as in the case of an unpublished manuscript of an original composition of any other description.<sup>1</sup>

§ 945. In a comparatively recent case, Lord Eldon has explained the doctrine of Courts of Equity on this subject to be founded, not on any notion, that the publication of letters would be painful to the feelings of the writer, but upon a civil right of property, which the Court is bound to respect. That the property is qualified in some respects; that by sending a letter the writer has given, for the purpose of reading it, and in some cases of keeping it, a property to the person, to whom the letter is addressed ; yet, that the gift is so restrained, that beyond the purposes, for which the letter is sent, the property is in the sender. Under such circumstances, it is immaterial, whether the intended publication is for the purpose of profit or not. If for profit, the party is then selling, if not for profit, he is then giving, that, a portion of which belongs to the writer.<sup>1</sup>

every one in self defence to write, even to his dearest friends, with the cold and formal severity, with which he would write to his wariest opponents, or his most implacable enemies. Cicero has, with great beauty and force, spoken of the grossness of such offences against common decency. Quis enim unquam, qui paulum modo bonorum consuetudinem nôsset, literas ad se ab amico missas, offensione aliquâ interpositâ, in medium protulit, palamque recitavit? Quid est aliud, tollere e vitâ vitæ societatem, quam tollere amicorum colloquia absentium? Quam multa joca solent esse in epistolis, quæ, prolata si sint, inepta videantur! Quam multa seria, neque tamen ullo modo divulganda!<sup>1</sup>

§ 947. It would be a sad reproach to English and American Jurisprudence, if Courts of Equity could not interpose in such cases; and if the rights of property of the writers should be deemed to exist only, when the letters were literary compositions. If the mere sending of letters to third persons is not to be deemed, in cases of literary composition, a total abandonment of the right of property therein by the sender; a fortiori, the act of sending them cannot be presumed to be an abandonment thereof, in cases where the very nature of the letters imports, as matter of business, or friendship, or advice, or family or personal confidence, *the implied or necessary intention and duty of privacy and secrecy.

§ 948. Fortunately for public, as well as for private peace and morals, the learned doubts on this subject have been overruled; and it is now held, that there is no distinction between private letters of one nature and private letters of another. For the purposes of public justice, publicly administered according to the established institutions of the country in the ordinary modes of proceeding, private letters may be required to be produced and published.<sup>1</sup> But it by no means follows, that private persons have a right to make such publications on other occasions, upon their own notion of taking the administration of justice into their own hands, or for the purpose of vindicating their own conduct, or gratifying their own enmity, or indulging a gross and diseased public curiosity, by the circulation of private anecdotes, or family secrets or personal concerns.<sup>2</sup>

§ 949. Principles of a similar nature have been applied for the assistance of persons, to whom letters are written, and by whom they are received, in order to protect such letters from publication in any manner injurious to the rights of property of the lawful owners thereof.<sup>3</sup> So, they have been applied in all cases, where the publication would be a violation of trust or confidence, founded in contract,<sup>4</sup> or implied from circumstances. Thus, for example, where a person delivers scientific or literary oral lectures, *it is not competent for any person who is [* 223] privileged to hear them, to publish the substance of them from his own notes; for the admission to hear such lectures is upon the implied confidence and contract, that the hearer will not use any means to injure,

§ 950. So, where a dramatic performance has been allowed by the author to be acted at a theatre, no person has a right to pirate such performance, and to publish copies of it surreptitiously ; or to act it at another theatre, without the consent of the author or proprietor ; for his permission to act it at a public theatre does not amount to an abandonment of his title to it, or to a dedication of it to the public at large.<sup>1</sup>

§ 951. So an injunction will be granted against publishing a magazine in a party's name, who has ceased to authorize it.<sup>2</sup> So an injunction will be granted against vending an article of trade under the name of a party with false labels, to the injury of the same party, who has already acquired a reputation in trade by it.<sup>3</sup> So an injunction will be granted to restrain the owner from running omnibuses, having on them such names, and words, and devices as to form a colorable imitation of the words, names and devices on the omnibuses of the plaintiff ; for this has a natural tendency to deprive the plaintiff of the fair profits of his business by attracting custom under the false representation, that the omnibuses of the defendant belong to, and are under the management of the plaintiff.<sup>4</sup>

matters not, in such cases, whether the secrets be secrets of trade, or secrets of title, or other secrets of the party important to his interests.<sup>1</sup>

§ 953. Before closing this subject, we shall now *proceed to state a few other cases of special [* 224] injunctions, in order more fully to illustrate the nature and limits of the jurisdiction, and the importance of it to prevent a total failure of remedial justice. There are, for instance, many cases, in which Courts of Equity will interfere by injunction, to prevent the sales of real estates ; as to restrain the vendor from selling to the prejudice of the vendee, pending a bill for the specific performance of a contract respecting an estate ; for it might put the latter to the expense of making the purchaser a party, in order to give perfect security to his title.<sup>2</sup>

§ 954. In like manner sales may be restrained in all cases, where they are inequitable, or may operate a fraud upon the rights or interests of third persons ; as in cases of trusts, and special authorities, where the party is abusing his trust or authority.<sup>3</sup> And where sales have been made to satisfy certain trusts and purposes, and there is danger of a misapplication of the proceeds, Courts of Equity will also restrain the purchaser from paying over the purchase money.<sup>4</sup>

stocks, of annuities, of ships, and of negotiable instruments, furnish an appropriate illustration of the same principle ;<sup>1</sup> as also do injunctions to restrain husbands [*225] from transferring property in fraud of the legal or equitable rights of their wives.<sup>2</sup>

§ 956. We have already had occasion to take notice of the granting of injunctions in the cases of persons having future interests in chattels, as in remainder after an immediate estate of life.<sup>3</sup> The same principle is applied to cases of personal property, bequeathed as heir-looms, or settled on trusts to go with particular estates. Thus, for example, household furniture, plate, pictures, statues, books and libraries, are often bequeathed or settled in trust, to go with the title of certain family mansions and estates. In such cases, Courts of Equity will enforce a due observance of the trust, and restrain the parties, having a present possession, from wasting the property, or doing any acts inconsistent with the trust.<sup>4</sup>

§ 957. Injunctions will also be granted to restrain the sailing of a ship, upon the application of a part-owner, whose share is unascertained, in order to ascertain that share, and to obtain the usual security, given in the Admiralty, for the due return of the ship.<sup>5</sup>

§ 958. Injunctions will also be granted to compel the due observance of personal covenants, where there is no effectual remedy at law.<sup>2</sup> Thus, in the *old [*226] case of the parish bell, where certain persons, owning a house in the neighborhood of a church, entered into an agreement to erect a cupola and clock, in consideration, that the bell should not be rung at five o'clock in the morning to their disturbance. The agreement being violated, an injunction was afterwards granted to prevent the bell being rung at that hour.<sup>3</sup> Upon the same ground a celebrated play-writer, who had covenanted not to write any dramatic performances for another theatre, was, by injunction, restrained from violating the covenant.<sup>4</sup> So an author, who had sold his copy-right in a work, and covenanted not to publish any other to its prejudice, was restrained by injunction from so doing.<sup>5</sup>

Kemble v. Kean, 6 Simons, R. 333. And as it would not decree a specific performance in such a case the Vice-Chancellor thought it ought not to restrain the defendant from acting at another theatre, that is from breaking the negative part of his covenant. In his judgment the Vice-Chancellor commented at large upon the cases of Morris v. Colman, and Clark v. Price, from which he labored to distinguish the case before him. His reasoning, it must be confessed, has not relieved the subject from all doubt. Ibid. See also Kimberly v. Jennings, 6 Simons, R. 340.

<sup>2</sup> Coats v. The Clarence Railway Company, 1 Russ. & Mylne, 181. This principle was strongly exemplified in the case of Bonaparte v. Camden and Amboy Rail Road Company, 1 Baldwin's Cirt. R. 231, where a bill was brought to prevent a Rail Road Company from illegally appropriating the lands of the plaintiff. On this occasion Mr. Justice Baldwin said ; "The injury complained of, as impending over his property, is, its permanent occupation and appropriation to a continuing public use, which requires the divesture of his whole right, its transfer to the company in full property, and his inheritance to be destroyed as effectively, as if he had never been its proprietor. No damages can restore him to his former condition ; its value to him is not money, which money can replace ; nor can there be any specific compensation or equivalent ; his damages are not pecuniary ; (vide 7 Johns. Ch. 731,) his objects in making his establishment were not profit, but repose, seclusion, and a resting place for himself and family. If these objects are about to be defeated, if his rights of property are about to be destroyed, without the authority of law ; or if lawless danger impends over them by persons acting under color of law, when the law gives them no power, or when it is abused, misapplied, exceeded, or not strictly pursued, and the act impending would subject the party committing it to damages in a Court of Law for a trespass, a Court of Equity will enjoin its commission." In the same case it was held, that although an act of the Legislature, appropriating private lands to public uses without compensation first being awarded, was not unconstitutional ; yet a Court of Equity would issue an injunction against the actual possession of the lands until compensation was made. 1 Baldwin Cirt. Rep. 226, 227, 228, 229, 230. See also Mohawk and Hudson Rail Road Company v. Archer, 6 Paige, R. 83.

§ 928. It is upon similar grounds, that Courts of Equity interfere in cases of trespasses, that is to say, to prevent irreparable mischiefs, or to suppress multiplicity of suits and oppressive litigation.<sup>3</sup> For if the trespass be fugitive and temporary, and adequate compensation can be obtained in an action at law, there is no ground to justify the interposition of Courts of Equity. Formerly, indeed, Courts of Equity were extremely reluctant to interfere at all, even in regard to cases of repeated trespasses. But, now, there is not the slightest hesitation, if the acts done, or threatened to be done to the property would be ruinous or irreparable, or would impair the just enjoyment of the property in future. If, indeed, Courts of Equity did [*208] not interfere in cases of this sort, there *would (as has been truly said) be a great failure of justice in the country.<sup>4</sup>

§ 929. a trespass by cutting timber, or taking lead ore, or coal, this Court would not interfere; but gave the discovery; and then any action might be brought for the value discovered. But, the trespass dying with the person, if he died, the Court said, this being property, there must be an account of the value; though the Law gave no remedy. In that instance, therefore, the account was given, where an injunction was not wanted. Throughout Lord Hardwicke's time, and down to that of Lord Thurlow, the distinction between waste and trespass was acknowledged; and I have frequently alluded to the case, upon which Lord Thurlow first hesitated. A person, having a close demised to him, began to get coal there; but continued to work under the contiguous close, belonging to another person. And it was held, that the former, as waste, would be restrained; but as to the close, which was not demised to him, it was a mere trespass; and the Court did not interfere. But I take it, that Lord Thurlow changed his opinion upon that; holding, that, if the defendant was taking the substance of the inheritance, the liberty of bringing an action was not all the relief, to which in Equity he was entitled. The interference of the Court is to prevent your removing that, which is his estate. Upon that principle Lord Thurlow granted the injunction, as to both. That has since been repeatedly followed; and whether it was trespass under the color of another's right actually existing, or not. If this protection would be granted in the case of timber, coals, or lead-ore, why is it not equally to be applied to a quarry? The comparative value cannot be considered. The present established course is to sustain a bill for the purpose of injunction, connecting it with the account in both cases; and not to put the plaintiff to come here for an injunction, and to go to law for damages." territory.<sup>1</sup> So, where a party, who is in possession under articles, is proceeding to cut down timber trees.<sup>2</sup> So, where lessees are taking away from a manor, bordering on the sea, stones of a peculiar value.<sup>3</sup> In short, it is now granted in all cases of timber, coals, ores, and quarries, where the party is a mere trespasser ; or where he exceeds the limited rights, with which he is clothed ; upon the ground, that the acts are, or may be an irreparable damage to the particular species of property.<sup>4</sup>

§ 930. It is upon similar principles, to prevent irreparable mischiefs, or to suppress multiplicity of suits and vexatious litigation, that Courts of Equity interfere in cases of Patents for inventions, and in cases of Copy-rights, to secure the rights of the inventor, or author, and his assignees and representatives.<sup>5</sup> It is wholly beside the purpose of the present Commentaries to enter upon the subject of *the general rights of inventors and authors, or to state the circumstances, under which an exclusive property, in virtue of those rights, may be acquired or lost. Our observations will rather be limited to the consideration of the cases, in which Courts of Equity will interfere to protect those rights, when acquired, by granting injunctions.

§ 932. Indeed, in cases of this nature, it is almost impossible to know the extent of the injury done to the party, without a discovery from the party, guilty of the infringement of the patent or copy-right; and if it were otherwise, mere damages would give no adequate relief. For example, in the case of a copy-right, the sale of copies by the defendant is not only, in each instance, taking from the author the profit upon the individual book, which he might otherwise have sold; but it may also be injuring him to an incalculable extent, in regard to the value and disposition of his copy-right, which no inquiry for the purpose of damages could fully ascertain.<sup>2</sup>

§ 933. In addition to this consideration, the plaintiff could at law have no preventive remedy, which should restrain the future use of his invention, or the future publication of his work, injuriously to his title and *interests. And it is this preventive remedy, [*211] which constitutes the peculiar feature of Equity jurisprudence, and enables it to accomplish the great purposes of justice. Besides ; in most cases of this sort, the bill usually seeks an account, in one case of the books printed, and in the other of the profits, which have arisen from the use of the invention, from the persons, who have pirated the same. And this account will, in all cases, where the right has been already established, or is established under the direc-

§ 934. In cases, however, where a patent has been granted for an invention, it is not a matter of course, for Courts of Equity to interpose by way of injunction. If the patent has been but recently granted, and its validity has not been ascertained by a trial at law; the Court will not generally act upon its own notions of the validity or invalidity of the patent, and grant an immediate injunction; but it will require it to be ascertained by a trial in a Court of Law, if the defendant denies its validity, or puts the matter in doubt.<sup>2</sup> But, if the patent has been granted for some length of time; and the patentee has put the invention into public use; and has had an exclusive possession of it under his patent for a period of time, which may fairly create the just presumption of an exclusive right; the Court will, in such a case, ordi- [* 212] narily interfere by way of preliminary injunction, pending the proceedings; reserving of course, unto the ultimate decision of the cause, its own final judgment on the merits.<sup>3</sup> And an injunction will be granted not only before, but after the time limited for the expiration of a patent, to restrain the sale of machines piratically manufactured in violation of the patent, while it was in force.<sup>1</sup>

§ 935. Similar principles apply to cases of copy-right.<sup>2</sup> But it does not seem indispensable to relief in either case, that the party should have a strictly legal title. It is sufficient, that, under the patent or copy-right, the party has a clear equitable title.<sup>3</sup> Formerly, indeed, Courts of Equity would not interfere, by way of injunction, to protect copy-rights, any more than patent rights, until the title had been established at law. But the present course is to exercise jurisdiction in all cases, where there is a clear color of title, founded upon a long possession and assertion of right.<sup>4</sup>

§ 936. There are some peculiar principles applicable to cases of copy-rights, which deserve notice in this place, and are not generally applicable to patents for inventions. In the first place, no copy-right can exist, consistently with principles of public policy, in any work of a clearly irreligious, immoral, libellous, or obscene description. In the case of an asserted piracy of any such work, if it be not a matter of any real doubt, whether it falls within such a *predicament, or not, Courts of Equity will [*213] not interfere by injunction to prevent, or to restrain the piracy ; but will leave the party to his remedy at law.<sup>5</sup>

§ 937. It is true, that an objection has been taken to this course of proceeding, that by refusing to interfere in such cases to suppress the publication, a Court of Equity virtually promotes the circulation of offensive and mischievous books. But the objection vanishes, when it is considered, that the Court does not affect to act as a censor morum, or to punish or restrain injuries to society generally. It simply withholds its aid from those, who, upon their own showing, have no title to protection, or to assert a property in things, which the law will not, upon motives of the highest concern, permit to be deemed capable of founding a just title or property.<sup>1</sup>

work be irreligious, immoral libellous, or seditious, or not, an injunction ought to be denied, upon the mere ground of the doubt. It has been thought, that there is great difficulty in adopting this doctrine, denying the protection of an injunction in matters of property upon mere doubts. Primâ facie the copy-right confers title; and the onus is on the other side to show clearly, that, notwithstanding the copy, there is an intrinsic defect in the title. See Lawrence v. Smith, Jacob. R. 472.

discussions, and the rights of authors growing out of them ; it is obvious, that an absolute power is conferred over the subject of literary property, which may sap the very foundations, on which it rests, and retard, if not entirely suppress, the means of arriving at physical, as well as at metaphysical truths. Thus, for example, a Judge, who should happen to believe, that the immateriality of the soul, as well as its immortality, was a doctrine clearly revealed in the Scriptures, (a point, upon which very learned and pious minds have been greatly divided,) would deem any work anti-christian, which should profess to deny that point, and would refuse an injunction to protect it. So, a Judge, who should be a Trinitarian, might most conscientiously decide against granting an injunction in favor of an author, enforcing Unitarian views ; when another Judge, of opposite opinions, might not hesitate to grant it.<sup>1</sup>

this sort, (it has been said) is, whether there has been a legitimate use of the copy-right publication, in the fair exercise of a mental operation, deserving the character of a new work. If there has been, though it may be prejudicial to the original author, it is not an invasion of his legal rights. If there has not been, then it is treated as a mere colorable curtailment of the original work, and a fraudulent evasion of the copy-right.<sup>1</sup> But this is another mode of stating the difficulty, rather than a test, affording a clear criterion to discriminate between the cases.

§ 940. A difficulty of a similar character often arises in the ascertainment of the fact, whether a work is original or not. Of some intellectual productions the originality admits of as little doubt, as the originality of some inventions or discoveries. But in a great variety of cases, the differences between the known and the unknown, between the new and the old, between the original and the copy, depend upon shades of distinction extremely minute and almost inappreciable. It is obvious, that there can be no monopoly of thoughts, or of the expression of them. Language is common to all; and, in the present advanced state of literature and learning and science, most species of literary works must contain much, which is old, and well known, mixed up with something, which perhaps is new, peculiar, and original. The character of some works of [*216] this sort may *beyond question be in the highest sense original; such, for example, as the works of Shakspeare, and Milton, and Pope, and Sir Walter Scott; although all of them have freely used the thoughts of others. Of others, again, the original in-redients may be so small and scattered, that the substance of the volumes may be said to embrace little more, than the labor of sedulous transcription, and colorable curtailment of other works. There are others of an intermediate class, where the intermixture of original and borrowed materials may be seen in proportions more nearly approaching to an equality with each other. And there are others, again, as in cases of maps, charts, translations, and road books, where the materials being equally open to all, there must be a close identity or similitude in the very form and use of the common materials. The difficulty here is to distinguish, what belongs to the exclusive labors of a single mind, from what are the common sources of the materials of the knowledge used by all.<sup>1</sup> Suppose, for instance, the case of maps; one man may publish the map of a country; another man, with the same design, if he has equal skill and opportunity, may by his own labor produce almost a fac simile. He has certainly a right so to do. But then, from his right through that medium, it does not follow, that he would be at liberty to copy the other map, and claim it as his own. He may work on the same original materials; but he cannot exclusively and evasively use those already collected and embodied by the skill and industry and expenditures of another.<sup>2</sup>

§ 941. In some cases of this nature a Court of Equity will take upon itself the task of inspection and comparison of books alleged to be a piracy. *But [*217] the usual practice is to refer the subject to a Master, who then reports, whether the books differ, and in what respects; and upon such a report the Court usually acts in making its interlocutory, as well as its final decree.<sup>1</sup>

§ 942. In cases of the invasion of a copy-right by using the same materials in another work, of which a large proportion is original, it constitutes no objection, that an injunction will in effect stop the sale and circulation of the work, which so infringes upon the copy-right. If the parts, which are original, cannot be separated from those, which are not original, without destroying the use and value of the original matter, he, who has made the improper use of that, which did not belong to him, must suffer the consequences of so doing. If a man mixes what belongs to him, with what belongs to another, and the mixture is forbidden by the law, he must again separate them, and bear all the mischief and loss, which the separation may occasion. The same rule applies to the use of literary matter.<sup>2</sup> It proceeds upon the same general principle of justice, which applies to the ordinary case of a confusion of property by premeditation or wanton impropriety.<sup>3</sup>

a class of cases bearing a close analogy to that of copy-rights; that is to say, cases, where Courts of Equity interfere to restrain the publication of unpublished manuscripts. In cases of literary, scientific, and professional treatises in manuscript, it is obvious, that the author must be deemed to possess the original ownership, and be entitled to appropriate them to such uses, as he shall please. Nor can he justly be deemed to intend to part with that ownership, by depositing them in the possession of a third person, or by allowing a third person to take, and hold a copy of them. Such acts must be deemed strictly limited, in point of right, use, and effect, to the very occasions expressed or implied, and ought not to be construed as a general gift or authority for any purposes of profit or publication, to which the receiver may choose to devote them. The property, then, in such manuscripts, not having been parted with in cases of this sort, if any attempt is made to publish them, without the consent of the author or proprietor, it is obvious, that he ought to be entitled to protection in Equity. And, accordingly, this course of granting injunctions against such unauthorized publications has been constantly acted upon in Courts of Equity;<sup>1</sup> and has been applied to all sorts of literary compositions.

one occasion of this sort, the question arose, whether letters, having the character of literary compositions, remained in any respect the property of the writer, after they were transmitted to the person, to whom they were addressed. It was held, that they did; that by sending letters the writer does not part wholly with his property in the literary compositions, nor give the receiver the power of publishing them; and that at most the receiver has only a special property in them, and possibly may have the property of the paper. But this does not give a license to any person whatsoever to publish them to the world; and at most, the receiver has only a joint property with the writer. Whether he is to be considered as having such joint property or not, letters, having the character of literary composition, must be treated as within the laws protecting the rights of literary property; and a violation of those rights in that instance is attended with the same legal consequences, as in the case of an unpublished manuscript of an original composition of any other description.<sup>1</sup>

§ 945. In a comparatively recent case, Lord Eldon has explained the doctrine of Courts of Equity on this subject to be founded, not on any notion, that the publication of letters would be painful to the *feelings of the writer, but upon a civil right of property, which the Court is bound to respect. That the property is qualified in some respects; that by sending a letter the writer has given, for the purpose of reading it, and in some cases of keeping it, a property to the person, to whom the letter is addressed ; yet, that the gift is so restrained, that beyond the purposes, for which the letter is sent, the property is in the sender. Under such circumstances, it is immaterial, whether the intended publication is for the purpose of profit or not. If for profit, the party is then selling, if not for profit, he is then giving, that, a portion of which belongs to the writer.<sup>1</sup>

every one in self defence to write, even to his dearest friends, with the cold and formal severity, with which he would write to his wariest opponents, or his most implacable enemies. Cicero has, with great beauty and force, spoken of the grossness of such offences against common decency. Quis enim unquam, qui paulum modo bonorum consuetudinem nôsset, literas ad se ab amico missas, offensione aliquâ interpositâ, in medium protulit, palamque recitavit? Quid est aliud, tollere e vitâ vitæ societatem, quam tollere amicorum colloquia absentium? Quam multa joca solent esse in epistolis, quæ, prolata si sint, inepta videantur! Quam multa seria, neque tamen ullo modo divulganda!<sup>1</sup>

§ 947. It would be a sad reproach to English and American Jurisprudence, if Courts of Equity could not interpose in such cases; and if the rights of property of the writers should be deemed to exist only, when the letters were literary compositions. If the mere sending of letters to third persons is not to be deemed, in cases of literary composition, a total abandonment of the right of property therein by the sender; a fortiori, the act of sending them cannot be presumed to be an abandonment thereof, in cases where the very nature of the letters imports, as matter of business, or friendship, or advice, or family or personal confidence, *the implied or necessary intention and duty of privacy and secrecy.

is no distinction between private letters of one nature and private letters of another. For the purposes of public justice, publicly administered according to the established institutions of the country in the ordinary modes of proceeding, private letters may be required to be produced and published.<sup>1</sup> But it by no means follows, that private persons have a right to make such publications on other occasions, upon their own notion of taking the administration of justice into their own hands, or for the purpose of vindicating their own conduct, or gratifying their own enmity, or indulging a gross and diseased public curiosity, by the circulation of private anecdotes, or family secrets or personal concerns.<sup>2</sup>

§ 949. Principles of a similar nature have been applied for the assistance of persons, to whom letters are written, and by whom they are received, in order to protect such letters from publication in any manner injurious to the rights of property of the lawful owners thereof.<sup>3</sup> So, they have been applied in all cases, where the publication would be a violation of trust or confidence, founded in contract,<sup>4</sup> or implied from circumstances. Thus, for example, where a person delivers scientific or literary oral lectures, *it is not competent for any person who is [* 223] privileged to hear them, to publish the substance of them from his own notes; for the admission to hear such lectures is upon the implied confidence and contract, that the hearer will not use any means to injure,

§ 950. So, where a dramatic performance has been allowed by the author to be acted at a theatre, no person has a right to pirate such performance, and to publish copies of it surreptitiously ; or to act it at another theatre, without the consent of the author or proprietor ; for his permission to act it at a public theatre does not amount to an abandonment of his title to it, or to a dedication of it to the public at large.<sup>1</sup>

§ 951. So an injunction will be granted against publishing a magazine in a party's name, who has ceased to authorize it.<sup>2</sup> So an injunction will be granted against vending an article of trade under the name of a party with false labels, to the injury of the same party, who has already acquired a reputation in trade by it.<sup>3</sup> So an injunction will be granted to restrain the owner from running omnibuses, having on them such names, and words, and devices as to form a colorable imitation of the words, names and devices on the omnibuses of the plaintiff ; for this has a natural tendency to deprive the plaintiff of the fair profits of his business by attracting custom under the false representation, that the omnibuses of the defendant belong to, and are under the management of the plaintiff.<sup>4</sup>

matters not, in such cases, whether the secrets be secrets of trade, or secrets of title, or other secrets of the party important to his interests.<sup>1</sup>

§ 953. Before closing this subject, we shall now *proceed to state a few other cases of special [* 224] injunctions, in order more fully to illustrate the nature and limits of the jurisdiction, and the importance of it to prevent a total failure of remedial justice. There are, for instance, many cases, in which Courts of Equity will interfere by injunction, to prevent the sales of real estates ; as to restrain the vendor from selling to the prejudice of the vendee, pending a bill for the specific performance of a contract respecting an estate ; for it might put the latter to the expense of making the purchaser a party, in order to give perfect security to his title.<sup>2</sup>

§ 954. In like manner sales may be restrained in all cases, where they are inequitable, or may operate a fraud upon the rights or interests of third persons ; as in cases of trusts, and special authorities, where the party is abusing his trust or authority.<sup>3</sup> And where sales have been made to satisfy certain trusts and purposes, and there is danger of a misapplication of the proceeds, Courts of Equity will also restrain the purchaser from paying over the purchase money.<sup>4</sup>

stocks, of annuities, of ships, and of negotiable instruments, furnish an appropriate illustration of the same principle ;<sup>1</sup> as also do injunctions to restrain husbands *from transferring property in fraud of the legal or equitable rights of their wives.<sup>2</sup>

§ 956. We have already had occasion to take notice of the granting of injunctions in the cases of persons having future interests in chattels, as in remainder after an immediate estate of life.<sup>3</sup> The same principle is applied to cases of personal property, bequeathed as heir-looms, or settled on trusts to go with particular estates. Thus, for example, household furniture, plate, pictures, statues, books and libraries, are often bequeathed or settled in trust, to go with the title of certain family mansions and estates. In such cases, Courts of Equity will enforce a due observance of the trust, and restrain the parties, having a present possession, from wasting the property, or doing any acts inconsistent with the trust.<sup>4</sup>

§ 957. Injunctions will also be granted to restrain the sailing of a ship, upon the application of a part-owner, whose share is unascertained, in order to ascertain that share, and to obtain the usual security, given in the Admiralty, for the due return of the ship.<sup>5</sup>

territory.<sup>1</sup> So, where a party, who is in possession under articles, is proceeding to cut down timber trees.<sup>2</sup> So, where lessees are taking away from a manor, bordering on the sea, stones of a peculiar value.<sup>3</sup> In short, it is now granted in all cases of timber, coals, ores, and quarries, where the party is a mere trespasser ; or where he exceeds the limited rights, with which he is clothed ; upon the ground, that the acts are, or may be an irreparable damage to the particular species of property.<sup>4</sup>

§ 930. It is upon similar principles, to prevent irreparable mischiefs, or to suppress multiplicity of suits and vexatious litigation, that Courts of Equity interfere in cases of Patents for inventions, and in cases of Copy-rights, to secure the rights of the inventor, or author, and his assignees and representatives.<sup>5</sup> It is wholly beside the purpose of the present Commentaries to enter upon the subject of *the general rights of inventors and authors, or to state the circumstances, under which an exclusive property, in virtue of those rights, may be acquired or lost. Our observations will rather be limited to the consideration of the cases, in which Courts of Equity will interfere to protect those rights, when acquired, by granting injunctions.

§ 932. Indeed, in cases of this nature, it is almost impossible to know the extent of the injury done to the party, without a discovery from the party, guilty of the infringement of the patent or copy-right; and if it were otherwise, mere damages would give no adequate relief. For example, in the case of a copy-right, the sale of copies by the defendant is not only, in each instance, taking from the author the profit upon the individual book, which he might otherwise have sold; but it may also be injuring him to an incalculable extent, in regard to the value and disposition of his copy-right, which no inquiry for the purpose of damages could fully ascertain.<sup>2</sup>

tion of the Court, be decreed as incidental, in addition to the other relief by a perpetual injunction.<sup>1</sup>

§ 934. In cases, however, where a patent has been granted for an invention, it is not a matter of course, for Courts of Equity to interpose by way of injunction. If the patent has been but recently granted, and its validity has not been ascertained by a trial at law; the Court will not generally act upon its own notions of the validity or invalidity of the patent, and grant an immediate injunction; but it will require it to be ascertained by a trial in a Court of Law, if the defendant denies its validity, or puts the matter in doubt.<sup>2</sup> But, if the patent has been granted for some length of time; and the patentee has put the invention into public use; and has had an exclusive possession of it under his patent for a period of time, which may fairly create the just presumption of an exclusive right; the Court will, in such a case, ordinarily [*212] interfere by way of preliminary injunction, pending the proceedings; reserving of course, unto the ultimate decision of the cause, its own final judgment on the merits.<sup>3</sup> And an injunction will be granted not only before, but after the time limited for the expiration of a patent, to restrain the sale of

§ 935. Similar principles apply to cases of copy-right.<sup>2</sup> But it does not seem indispensable to relief in either case, that the party should have a strictly legal title. It is sufficient, that, under the patent or copy-right, the party has a clear equitable title.<sup>3</sup> Formerly, indeed, Courts of Equity would not interfere, by way of injunction, to protect copy-rights, any more than patent rights, until the title had been established at law. But the present course is to exercise jurisdiction in all cases, where there is a clear color of title, founded upon a long possession and assertion of right.<sup>4</sup>

§ 936. There are some peculiar principles applicable to cases of copy-rights, which deserve notice in this place, and are not generally applicable to patents for inventions. In the first place, no copy-right can exist, consistently with principles of public policy, in any work of a clearly irreligious, immoral, libellous, or obscene description. In the case of an asserted piracy of any such work, if it be not a matter of any real doubt, whether it falls within such a *predicament, or not, Courts of Equity will [*213] not interfere by injunction to prevent, or to restrain the piracy ; but will leave the party to his remedy at law.<sup>5</sup>

§ 937. It is true, that an objection has been taken to this course of proceeding, that by refusing to interfere in such cases to suppress the publication, a Court of Equity virtually promotes the circulation of offensive and mischievous books. But the objection vanishes, when it is considered, that the Court does not affect to act as a censor morum, or to punish or restrain injuries to society generally. It simply withholds its aid from those, who, upon their own showing, have no title to protection, or to assert a property in things, which the law will not, upon motives of the highest concern, permit to be deemed capable of founding a just title or property.<sup>1</sup>

work be irreligious, immoral libellous, or seditious, or not, an injunction ought to be denied, upon the mere ground of the doubt. It has been thought, that there is great difficulty in adopting this doctrine, denying the protection of an injunction in matters of property upon mere doubts. Primâ facie the copy-right confers title; and the onus is on the other side to show clearly, that, notwithstanding the copy, there is an intrinsic defect in the title. See Lawrence v. Smith, Jacob. R. 472.

discussions, and the rights of authors growing out of them ; it is obvious, that an absolute power is conferred over the subject of literary property, which may sap the very foundations, on which it rests, and retard, if not entirely suppress, the means of arriving at physical, as well as at metaphysical truths. Thus, for example, a Judge, who should happen to believe, that the immateriality of the soul, as well as its immortality, was a doctrine clearly revealed in the Scriptures, (a point, upon which very learned and pious minds have been greatly divided,) would deem any work anti-christian, which should profess to deny that point, and would refuse an injunction to protect it. So, a Judge, who should be a Trinitarian, might most conscientiously decide against granting an injunction in favor of an author, enforcing Unitarian views ; when another Judge, of opposite opinions, might not hesitate to grant it.<sup>1</sup>

§ 939. In the next place, in cases of copy-right, difficulties often arise in ascertaining, whether there has been an actual infringement thereof, which are not strictly applicable to cases of patents. It is, for instance, clearly settled not to be any infringement of the copy-right of a book, to make bonâ fide quotations or extracts from it, or a bonâ fide abridgment of it ; or to make a bonâ fide use of the same common materials in the composition of another work.<sup>2</sup> But what constitutes a bonâ fide case of *extracts, or a bonâ fide abridgment, or a bonâ [*215] fide use of common materials, is often a matter of most embarrassing inquiry. The true question, in all cases of this sort, (it has been said) is, whether there has been a legitimate use of the copy-right publication, in the fair exercise of a mental operation, deserving the character of a new work. If there has been, though it may be prejudicial to the original author, it is not an invasion of his legal rights. If there has not been, then it is treated as a mere colorable curtailment of the original work, and a fraudulent evasion of the copy-right.<sup>1</sup> But this is another mode of stating the difficulty, rather than a test, affording a clear criterion to discriminate between the cases.

§ 940. A difficulty of a similar character often arises in the ascertainment of the fact, whether a work is original or not. Of some intellectual productions the originality admits of as little doubt, as the originality of some inventions or discoveries. But in a great variety of cases, the differences between the known and the unknown, between the new and the old, between the original and the copy, depend upon shades of distinction extremely minute and almost inappreciable. It is obvious, that there can be no monopoly of thoughts, or of the expression of them. Language is common to all; and, in the present advanced state of literature and learning and science, most species of literary works must contain much, which is old, and well known, mixed up with something, which perhaps is new, peculiar, and original. The character of some works of [*216] this sort may *beyond question be in the highest sense original; such, for example, as the works of Shakspeare, and Milton, and Pope, and Sir Walter Scott; although all of them have freely used the thoughts of others. Of others, again, the original ingredients may be so small and scattered, that the substance of the volumes may be said to embrace little more, than the labor of sedulous transcription, and colorable curtailment of other works. There are others of an intermediate class, where the intermixture of original and borrowed materials may be seen in proportions more nearly approaching to an equality with each other. And there are others, again, as in cases of maps, charts, translations, and road books, where the materials being equally open to all, there must be a close identity or similitude in the very form and use of the common materials. The difficulty here is to distinguish, what belongs to the exclusive labors of a single mind, from what are the common sources of the materials of the knowledge used by all.<sup>1</sup> Suppose, for instance, the case of maps; one man may publish the map of a country; another man, with the same design, if he has equal skill and opportunity, may by his own labor produce almost a fac simile. He has certainly a right so to do. But then, from his right through that medium, it does not follow, that he would be at liberty to copy the other map, and claim it as his own. He may work on the same original materials; but he cannot exclusively and evasively use those already collected and embodied by the skill and industry and expenditures of another.<sup>2</sup>

§ 941. In some cases of this nature a Court of Equity will take upon itself the task of inspection and comparison of books alleged to be a piracy. *But [*217] the usual practice is to refer the subject to a Master, who then reports, whether the books differ, and in what respects; and upon such a report the Court usually acts in making its interlocutory, as well as its final decree.<sup>1</sup>

§ 942. In cases of the invasion of a copy-right by using the same materials in another work, of which a large proportion is original, it constitutes no objection, that an injunction will in effect stop the sale and circulation of the work, which so infringes upon the copy-right. If the parts, which are original, cannot be separated from those, which are not original, without destroying the use and value of the original matter, he, who has made the improper use of that, which did not belong to him, must suffer the consequences of so doing. If a man mixes what belongs to him, with what belongs to another, and the mixture is forbidden by the law, he must again separate them, and bear all the mischief and loss, which the separation may occasion. The same rule applies to the use of literary matter.<sup>2</sup> It proceeds upon the same general principle of justice, which applies to the ordinary case of a confusion of property by premeditation or wanton impropriety.<sup>3</sup>

a class of cases bearing a close analogy to that of copy-rights; that is to say, cases, where Courts of Equity interfere to restrain the publication of unpublished manuscripts. In cases of literary, scientific, and professional treatises in manuscript, it is obvious, that the author must be deemed to possess the original ownership, and be entitled to appropriate them to such uses, as he shall please. Nor can he justly be deemed to intend to part with that ownership, by depositing them in the possession of a third person, or by allowing a third person to take, and hold a copy of them. Such acts must be deemed strictly limited, in point of right, use, and effect, to the very occasions expressed or implied, and ought not to be construed as a general gift or authority for any purposes of profit or publication, to which the receiver may choose to devote them. The property, then, in such manuscripts, not having been parted with in cases of this sort, if any attempt is made to publish them, without the consent of the author or proprietor, it is obvious, that he ought to be entitled to protection in Equity. And, accordingly, this course of granting injunctions against such unauthorized publications has been constantly acted upon in Courts of Equity;<sup>1</sup> and has been applied to all sorts of literary compositions.

one occasion of this sort, the question arose, whether letters, having the character of literary compositions, remained in any respect the property of the writer, after they were transmitted to the person, to whom they were addressed. It was held, that they did; that by sending letters the writer does not part wholly with his property in the literary compositions, nor give the receiver the power of publishing them; and that at most the receiver has only a special property in them, and possibly may have the property of the paper. But this does not give a license to any person whatsoever to publish them to the world; and at most, the receiver has only a joint property with the writer. Whether he is to be considered as having such joint property or not, letters, having the character of literary composition, must be treated as within the laws protecting the rights of literary property; and a violation of those rights in that instance is attended with the same legal consequences, as in the case of an unpublished manuscript of an original composition of any other description.<sup>1</sup>

§ 945. In a comparatively recent case, Lord Eldon has explained the doctrine of Courts of Equity on this subject to be founded, not on any notion, that the publication of letters would be painful to the *feelings of the writer, but upon a civil right of property, which the Court is bound to respect. That the property is qualified in some respects; that by sending a letter the writer has given, for the purpose of reading it, and in some cases of keeping it, a property to the person, to whom the letter is addressed ; yet, that the gift is so restrained, that beyond the purposes, for which the letter is sent, the property is in the sender. Under such circumstances, it is immaterial, whether the intended publication is for the purpose of profit or not. If for profit, the party is then selling, if not for profit, he is then giving, that, a portion of which belongs to the writer.<sup>1</sup>

every one in self defence to write, even to his dearest friends, with the cold and formal severity, with which he would write to his wariest opponents, or his most implacable enemies. Cicero has, with great beauty and force, spoken of the grossness of such offences against common decency. Quis enim unquam, qui paulum modo bonorum consuetudinem nôsset, literas ad se ab amico missas, offensione aliquâ interpositâ, in medium protulit, palamque recitavit? Quid est aliud, tollere e vitâ vitæ societatem, quam tollere amicorum colloquia absentium? Quam multa joca solent esse in epistolis, quæ, prolata si sint, inepta videantur! Quam multa seria, neque tamen ullo modo divulganda!<sup>1</sup>

§ 947. It would be a sad reproach to English and American Jurisprudence, if Courts of Equity could not interpose in such cases; and if the rights of property of the writers should be deemed to exist only, when the letters were literary compositions. If the mere sending of letters to third persons is not to be deemed, in cases of literary composition, a total abandonment of the right of property therein by the sender; a fortiori, the act of sending them cannot be presumed to be an abandonment thereof, in cases where the very nature of the letters imports, as matter of business, or friendship, or advice, or family or personal confidence, *the implied or necessary intention and duty of privacy and secrecy.

is no distinction between private letters of one nature and private letters of another. For the purposes of public justice, publicly administered according to the established institutions of the country in the ordinary modes of proceeding, private letters may be required to be produced and published.<sup>1</sup> But it by no means follows, that private persons have a right to make such publications on other occasions, upon their own notion of taking the administration of justice into their own hands, or for the purpose of vindicating their own conduct, or gratifying their own enmity, or indulging a gross and diseased public curiosity, by the circulation of private anecdotes, or family secrets or personal concerns.<sup>2</sup>

§ 949. Principles of a similar nature have been applied for the assistance of persons, to whom letters are written, and by whom they are received, in order to protect such letters from publication in any manner injurious to the rights of property of the lawful owners thereof.<sup>3</sup> So, they have been applied in all cases, where the publication would be a violation of trust or confidence, founded in contract,<sup>4</sup> or implied from circumstances. Thus, for example, where a person delivers scientific or literary oral lectures, *it is not competent for any person who is [* 223] privileged to hear them, to publish the substance of them from his own notes; for the admission to hear such lectures is upon the implied confidence and contract, that the hearer will not use any means to injure,

§ 950. So, where a dramatic performance has been allowed by the author to be acted at a theatre, no person has a right to pirate such performance, and to publish copies of it surreptitiously ; or to act it at another theatre, without the consent of the author or proprietor ; for his permission to act it at a public theatre does not amount to an abandonment of his title to it, or to a dedication of it to the public at large.<sup>1</sup>

§ 951. So an injunction will be granted against publishing a magazine in a party's name, who has ceased to authorize it.<sup>2</sup> So an injunction will be granted against vending an article of trade under the name of a party with false labels, to the injury of the same party, who has already acquired a reputation in trade by it.<sup>3</sup> So an injunction will be granted to restrain the owner from running omnibuses, having on them such names, and words, and devices as to form a colorable imitation of the words, names and devices on the omnibuses of the plaintiff ; for this has a natural tendency to deprive the plaintiff of the fair profits of his business by attracting custom under the false representation, that the omnibuses of the defendant belong to, and are under the management of the plaintiff.<sup>4</sup>

matters not, in such cases, whether the secrets be secrets of trade, or secrets of title, or other secrets of the party important to his interests.<sup>1</sup>

§ 953. Before closing this subject, we shall now *proceed to state a few other cases of special [* 224] injunctions, in order more fully to illustrate the nature and limits of the jurisdiction, and the importance of it to prevent a total failure of remedial justice. There are, for instance, many cases, in which Courts of Equity will interfere by injunction, to prevent the sales of real estates ; as to restrain the vendor from selling to the prejudice of the vendee, pending a bill for the specific performance of a contract respecting an estate ; for it might put the latter to the expense of making the purchaser a party, in order to give perfect security to his title.<sup>2</sup>

§ 954. In like manner sales may be restrained in all cases, where they are inequitable, or may operate a fraud upon the rights or interests of third persons ; as in cases of trusts, and special authorities, where the party is abusing his trust or authority.<sup>3</sup> And where sales have been made to satisfy certain trusts and purposes, and there is danger of a misapplication of the proceeds, Courts of Equity will also restrain the purchaser from paying over the purchase money.<sup>4</sup>

§ 956. We have already had occasion to take notice of the granting of injunctions in the cases of persons having future interests in chattels, as in remainder after an immediate estate of life.<sup>3</sup> The same principle is applied to cases of personal property, bequeathed as heir-looms, or settled on trusts to go with particular estates. Thus, for example, household furniture, plate, pictures, statues, books and libraries, are often bequeathed or settled in trust, to go with the title of certain family mansions and estates. In such cases, Courts of Equity will enforce a due observance of the trust, and restrain the parties, having a present possession, from wasting the property, or doing any acts inconsistent with the trust.<sup>4</sup>

§ 957. Injunctions will also be granted to restrain the sailing of a ship, upon the application of a part-owner, whose share is unascertained, in order to ascertain that share, and to obtain the usual security, given in the Admiralty, for the due return of the ship.<sup>5</sup>

§ 958. Injunctions will also be granted to compel the due observance of personal covenants, where there is no effectual remedy at law.<sup>2</sup> Thus, in the *old [*226] case of the parish bell, where certain persons, owning a house in the neighborhood of a church, entered into an agreement to erect a cupola and clock, in consideration, that the bell should not be rung at five o'clock in the morning to their disturbance. The agreement being violated, an injunction was afterwards granted to prevent the bell being rung at that hour.<sup>3</sup> Upon the same ground a celebrated play-writer, who had covenanted not to write any dramatic performances for another theatre, was, by injunction, restrained from violating the covenant.<sup>4</sup> So an author, who had sold his copy-right in a work, and covenanted not to publish any other to its prejudice, was restrained by injunction from so doing.<sup>5</sup>

But a Court of Equity will not decree a specific performance of a contract by an actor, that he would act twenty-four nights at a particular theatre during a certain period of time, and that he would not in the mean time act at any other theatre in the same town. Kemble v. Kean, 6 Simons, R. 333. And as it would not decree a specific performance in such a case the Vice-Chancellor thought it ought not to restrain the defendant from acting at another theatre, that is from breaking the negative part of his covenant. In his judgment the Vice-Chancellor commented at large upon the cases of Morris v. Colman, and Clark v. Price, from which he labored to distinguish the case before him. His reasoning, it must be confessed, has not relieved the subject from all doubt. Ibid. See also Kimberly v. Jennings, 6 Simons, R. 340.

§ 959. Courts of Equity also interfere, and effectuate their own decrees in many cases by injunctions, in the nature of a judicial writ or execution for possession of the property in controversy; as for example, by injunctions to yield up, deliver, quiet, or continue the possession, followed up by a writ of assistance.<sup>1</sup> Injunctions of this sort are older than the time of Lord Bacon, since in his Ordinances they are treated as a well known process. Indeed, they have been distinctly traced back to the reign of Elizabeth, and Edward the Sixth, and even of Henry the Eighth.<sup>2</sup> In some respects they bear an analogy to sequestrations; but the latter process, at least since the reign of James the First, has been applied, not merely to the lands in controversy in the cause, but to other lands of the party.<sup>3</sup>

But whether it be, or be not a part of the decree, a Court of Equity has competent power to require by injunction, and enforce by process of execution, delivery of possession; and the power is founded upon the simple elementary principle, that the power of the Court to apply the remedy is co-extensive with its jurisdiction over the subject-matter." He cites among other cases, Dove v. Dove, 2 Dick. 617; S. C. 1 Bro. Ch. R. 355, and Belt's note; S. C. 1 Cox, R. 101; Kershaw v. Thompson, 4 John. Ch. R. 609. subject of special injunctions, that Courts of Equity constantly decline to lay down any rule, which shall limit their power and discretion as to the particular cases, in which such injunctions shall be granted, or withheld. And there is wisdom in this course; for it is impossible to foresee all the exigencies of society which may require their aid and assistance to protect rights or redress wrongs. The jurisdiction of these Courts, thus operating by way of special injunction, is manifestly indispensable for the purposes of social justice in a great variety of cases, and therefore should be fostered and upheld by a steady confidence. At the same time it must be admitted, that the exercise of it is attended with no small danger, both from its summary nature and its liability to abuse. It ought, therefore, to be guarded with extreme caution, and applied only in very clear cases; otherwise, instead of becoming an instrument to promote the public as well as private welfare, it may become a means of extensive, and, perhaps, of irreparable injustice.<sup>1</sup>

Hobart*, 1 Cooper, Sel. Cases, 333; S. C. 3 Mylne and Keen, 169. Mr. Justice Baldwin, in Bonaparte v. Camden and Amboy Rail Road Company, 1 Baldwin's Cir. R. 218, made the following remarks on the same subject: "There is no power, the exercise of which is more delicate, which requires greater caution, deliberation, and sound discretion, or more dangerous in a doubtful case, than the issuing an injunction. It is the strong arm of equity, that never ought to be extended, unless to cases of great injury, where courts of law cannot afford an adequate or commensurate remedy in damages. The right must be clear, the injury impending or threatened, so as to be averted only by the protecting preventive process of injunction. But that will not be awarded in doubtful cases, or new ones, not coming within well established principles; for if it issues erroneously, an irreparable injury is afflicted, for which there can be no redress, it being the act of a court, not of the party, who prays for it. It will be refused, till the court are satisfied, that the case before them is of a right about to be destroyed, irreparably injured, or great and lasting injury about to be done by an illegal act. In such a case the court owes it to its suitors and its own principles, to administer the only remedy, which the law allows, to prevent the commission of such act. We know of no rule, which excludes from this process any persons, over whom the court has jurisdiction, on account of the character or capacity, in which he acts, although it is conferred upon him by a law of a state or of congress." Railways have recently given rise to many questions as to the duty of Courts of Equity to interfere, and prevent mischiefs to private property by an excess or abuse or misapplication of the corporate powers of the companies. See Nicholl & Hare's reports of cases relating to Railways, where the recent decisions are collected.

CHAPTER XXIV.

EXCLUSIVE JURISDICTION—TRUSTS.

§ 960. HAVING taken this general survey of Equity Jurisprudence in cases of concurrent jurisdiction, we shall in the next place proceed to the consideration of another head proposed in these Commentaries, that of exclusive Jurisdiction. And this, again, like the former head, is divisible into two branches, the one dependent upon the subject-matter, the other upon the nature of the remedy to be administered. The former comprehends TRUSTS in the largest and most general sense of the word, whether they are express or implied, direct or constructive, created by the parties, or resulting by operation of law. The latter comprehends all those processes or remedies, which are peculiar and exclusive in Courts of Equity; and, through the instrumentality of which they endeavor to reach the purposes of justice in a manner unknown or unattainable at law.

§ 961. And, in the first place, let us examine the nature and extent of the jurisdiction of Courts of Equity in matters of Trust, in the general sense above alluded to, which will be found directly or remotely to embrace most of the subjects of their exclusive jurisdiction. It has been well observed, that the principles of law, which guide the decisions of the Courts of Common Law, were principally formed in times, when the necessities of men were few, and their ingenuity was little exercised to supply their wants. Hence, it has happened, that there are many rights, according to the principles of natural and universal justice, for injuries to which the law, as administered by those Courts, has provided no remedy. This is particularly the case in matters of trust and confidence, of which the ordinary courts of law, in a vast variety of instances, take no cognizance. The positive law being silent on the subject, Courts of Equity, considering the conscience of the party entrusted, as bound to perform the trust, have, to prevent a total failure of justice, interfered to compel the performance of it.<sup>1</sup> And, as they will compel the performance of the trust, so, on the other hand, they will assist the trustees, and protect them in the due performance of the trust, whenever they seek the aid and direction of the Court, as to the establishment, the management, or the execution of it.<sup>2</sup>

962. For the most part, indeed, matters of trust and confidence are exclusively cognizable in Courts of Equity ; there being few cases, except bailments, and rights founded in contract, and remedial by an action of assumpsit, and especially by an action for money had and received, in which a remedy can be administered in the Courts of Law.<sup>3</sup> Thus, for example, a debt, or chose in action, is not generally assignable at law, except in case of negotiable instruments.<sup>4</sup> And, hence, the assignee is ordinarily compellable to

§ 963. It is not within the design of these Commentaries to enter upon a minute examination of the nature and peculiarities of Trusts, as known to English Jurisprudence, or to attempt, by any development of the history of their rise and progress, to ascertain the exact boundaries of the jurisdiction at present exercised over them. In general, it may be said, that Trusts constitute a very important and comprehensive branch of Equity Jurisprudence ; and, that where the remedy, in regard to them, ends at law, there the exclusive jurisdiction in Equity, for the most part, begins.

§ 964. A Trust, in the most enlarged sense, in which that term is used in English Jurisprudence, may be defined to be an equitable right, title, or interest in property, real or personal, distinct from the legal ownership thereof.<sup>2</sup> In other words, the legal owner holds the direct and absolute dominion over the property in the view of the law ; but the income, profits, or benefits thereof in his hands belong wholly, or in part, to others. The legal estate in the property is thus made subservient to certain uses, benefits, or charges in favor of others ; and these uses, benefits, or charges constitute the Trusts, which Courts of Equity will compel the legal owner, as trustee, to perform in favor of the cestui que trust, or beneficiary. Three things are said to be indispensable to constitute a valid trust ; first, sufficient words to raise it ; secondly, a definite subject ; and thirdly, a certain or ascertained object.<sup>1</sup>

§ 965. It is in the highest degree probable, that those trusts, which are exclusively cognizable in Courts of Equity, were, in their origin, derived from the Roman Law, being very similar in their nature to the Fidei Commissa of that law. As the jurisdiction of a peculiar Prætor was created for the express purpose of protecting property fidei commissum ; so the jurisdiction of our Courts of Equity, if not created, was soon extended, for the purpose of protecting and enforcing the execution of Trusts.<sup>2</sup> Indeed, it is impossible, to suppose, that in any country, professing to have an enlightened jurisprudence, obligations and trusts, in regard to property, binding in conscience and duty, and which ex æquo et bono the party ought to perform, should be left without any positive means of securing their due fulfilment ; or that they might be violated without rebuke, or evaded with impunity.

§ 966. In the Institutes of Justinian a summary account is given of the origin and nature of the Roman Fidei Commissa. It is there observed, that anciently all trusts were infirm (precarious) ; for no man could, without his own consent, be compelled to perform, what he was requested to do. But, when testators were unable directly to bequeath an inheritance or legacy to certain persons, if they did bequeath it to them, they gave it in trust to other persons, who were capable of taking it by will. And, therefore, such bequests were called trusts, (fidei commissa), because they could not be enforced by law, but depended solely on the honor of those, to whom they were entrusted. Afterwards, the Emperor Augustus, having been frequently solicited in favor of particular persons, either on account of the solemn adjurations of the party, or on account of the gross perfidy of other persons, commanded the Consuls to interpose their authority. This, being a just and popular order, was by degrees converted into a permanent jurisdiction. So great, indeed, was the favor, in which trusts were held, that at length a special Prætor was created to pronounce judgment in cases of trusts; and hence he was called the Commissary of trusts. (Fidei Commissarium.<sup>1</sup>)

§ 967. This brief sketch of the origin and nature of Trusts in the Civil Law does, in a very striking manner, illustrate the origin and nature of Trusts in the Common Law of England, in regard to real property. It has been well remarked by Mr. Justice Blackstone, that Uses and Trusts in English jurisprudence are, in their original, of a nature very similar, or rather exactly the same, answering more to the fidei commissum, than to the usus fructus of the Civil Law; the latter being the temporary right of using a thing, without having the ultimate property or full dominion of the substance.<sup>2</sup>

§ 968. Lord Coke, in describing the nature of a Use or Trust in land according to the Common Law, uses the following language. A use is a trust or confidence reposed in some other, which is not issuing out of the land, but, as a thing collateral, annexed in privity to the estate of the land, and to the person touching the land ; scilicet, that cestui qui use, (the beneficiary,) shall take the profit, and that the terre tenant shall make an estate according to his direction. So, as cestui que use had neither jus in re, nor jus ad rem, but only a confidence and trust, for which he had no remedy by the Common Law ; but for breach of trust his remedy was by subpœna in Chancery.<sup>1</sup> Thus, we see, that the original fiduciary estate, from its nature, imported a right to the enjoyment of the profits of the land, as distinct from the seisin of the land, and the rights issuing thereout.

§ 969. The introduction of Uses and Trusts into England has been generally attributed to the ingenuity of the clergy, in order to escape from the prohibitions of the Mortmain Acts. But, whether this be the sole origin of them, or not, it is very certain, that the general convenience of them in subserving the common interests of society, as well as in enabling parties to escape from forfeitures in times of civil commotion, soon gave them an extensive public approbation, and secured their permanent adoption into the system of English jurisprudence.<sup>2</sup> And they have since been applied to a great variety of cases, which never could have been in the contemplation of those, who originally introduced them ; but which, nevertheless, are the natural attendants upon a refined and cultivated state of society, where wealth is widely diffused, and the necessities and conveniences of families, of commerce, and even of the ordinary business of human life, require, that Trusts should be established, temporary or permanent, limited or general, to meet the changes of past times, as well as to provide for the exigences, of times to come.

§ 970. According to the spirit of over nice and curious learning belonging to the age, Uses in lands, upon their introduction into English Jurisprudence, were refined upon with many elaborate distinctions,<sup>1</sup> to cure the mischiefs arising from which the Statute of Uses of 27 Hen. VIII. ch. 10, was enacted, the general intent of which was to transfer the use into possession, and to make the cestui que use complete owner of the lands, as well at Law as in Equity.<sup>2</sup> But, as the statute did not in its terms apply to all sorts of uses, and was construed not to apply to uses engrafted on uses (which constitute one great class of modern trusts in lands), it failed in a great measure to accomplish the ends, for which it was designed.<sup>3</sup> Thus, for example, it was held not to apply to trusts or uses created upon terms of years ; or to trusts of a nature requiring the trustee still to hold out the estate, in order to perform the trusts; and, generally, not to trusts, created in relation to mere personal property.<sup>4</sup>

§ 971. In regard to uses it seems formerly to have been a matter of considerable doubt, whether at the Common Law they could be raised by parol, or even by writing, without a seal. Lord Chief Baron Gilbert has extracted a distinction from the different cases, which will in some measure reconcile their apparent contrariety. It is in effect, that a use might be raised at the Common Law by parol upon any conveyance, which operated by way of transmutation of possession, or passed the possession by some solemn act, such as a feoffment ; since the estate itself might by the Common Law pass by a parol feoffment ; and, therefore, by the same reason, a use of the estate might be declared by parol. But, where a deed was requisite to the passing of the estate itself, there, a deed was also necessary for the declaration of the uses. Thus, for example, a man could not covenant to stand seised to a use without a deed.<sup>1</sup>

§ 972. However this may have been, the Statute of Frauds of 29 Charles II. ch. 3, § 7, (which has been generally adopted in America,) requires all declarations or creations of trusts or confidences of any lands, tenements, and hereditaments, to be manifested and proved by some writing, signed by the party, entitled to declare such trusts, or by his last will in writing. The statute excepts trusts arising, transferred, or [*236] *extinguished by operation of law ; and, from its terms, it is apparent, that it does not extend to declarations of trusts of personalty.<sup>1</sup> Neither does it prescribe any particular form or solemnity in writing; nor, that the writing should be under seal. Hence, any writing, sufficiently evincive of a trust, as a letter, or other writing of a trustee, stating the trust, or any language in writing, clearly expressive of a trust, intended by the party, although in the form of a desire, or a request, or a recommendation, will create a trust by implication.<sup>2</sup> And where a trust is created for the benefit of a third person, although without his knowledge, he may afterwards affirm it and enforce the execution of it in his own favor,<sup>3</sup> at least if it has not in the intermediate time been revoked by the person, who has created the trust.<sup>4</sup>

some meritorious or some valuable consideration ; for Courts of Equity will not enforce a mere gratuitous gift, (donum gratuitum,) or a mere moral obligation.<sup>1</sup> Hence it is, that, if there be a mere voluntary executory trust created, Courts of Equity will not enforce it.<sup>2</sup> And, upon the same ground, if two persons for a valuable consideration, as between themselves, covenant to do some act for the benefit of a third person, who is a mere stranger to the consideration, he cannot enforce the covenant against the two, although each one might enforce it against the other.<sup>3</sup> But it is otherwise in cases, where the use or trust is already created and vested, or otherwise fixed in the cestui que trust; or, where it is raised by a last will and testament.<sup>4</sup>

B. 2, ch. 3, § 5, 6, ch. 4, § 1, 2; Fisher v. Fields, 10 John. R. 494. The most remarkable deviation in executed trusts from the rules in relation to legal estates, is, that a man may be tenant by the curtesy of a trust estate of his wife; but a woman is not entitled to dower in a trust estate of her husband. 2 Fonbl. Eq. B. 2, ch. 4, § 1, and notes (c) and (d). Lord Redesdale, in D'Arcy v. Blake (2 Sch. & Lefr. 387), has given the best account of the origin of this anomaly. He there observed: "The difficulty, in which the Courts of Equity have been involved with respect to dower, I apprehend, originally arose thus. They had assumed, as a principle, in acting upon trusts, to follow the law. And according to this principle, they ought, in all cases, where rights attached on legal estates, to have attached the same rights upon trusts, and, consequently, to have given dower of an equitable estate. It was found, however, that in cases of dower, this principle, if pursued to the utmost, would affect the titles to a large proportion of the estates in the country; for that parties had been acting, on the footing of dower, upon a contrary principle; and had supposed, that, by the creation of a trust, the right of dower would be prevented from attaching. Many persons had purchased under this idea; and the country would have been thrown into the utmost confusion, if Courts of Equity had followed their general rule, with respect to trusts in the cases of dower. But the same objection did not apply to tenancy by the curtesy; for no person would purchase an estate subject to tenancy by the curtesy, without the concurrence of the person, in whom that right was vested. This, I take, to be the true reason of the distinction between dower and tenancy by the curtesy. It was necessary for the security of purchasers, of mortgagees, and of other persons taking the legal estates, to depart from the general principle in case of dower; but it was not necessary in the case of tenancy by the curtesy. Pending the coverture, a woman could not alien without her husband; and, therefore, nothing, she could do, could be understood by a purchaser to affect his interest. But where the husband was seised or entitled in his own right, he had full power of disposing, except so far as dower might attach. And the general opinion having long been, that dower was a mere legal right, and that, as the existence of a trust estate, previously created, prevented the right of dower [from] attaching at law, it would also prevent the property from all claim of dower in Equity; and many titles de-

We say, generally, because there are exceptions to the doctrine above stated. Thus, for example, the construction put upon executory trusts, arising under agreements and wills, sometimes differs in Equity from that in regard to executed trusts.<sup>1</sup> And trusts in terms for years and personalty will be often recognised, and enforced in Equity, which would be wholly disregarded at Law.<sup>2</sup> pending on this opinion; it was found, that it would be mischievous in this instance to the general principle, that Equity should follow the law. And it has been so long and so clearly settled, that a woman should not have dower in Equity, who is not entitled at law, that it would be shaking every thing, to attempt to disturb the rule."

<sup>1</sup> 3 Woodes. Lect. 59, p. 480, 481; Co. Litt. 290 b, Butler's note 246, xiv; Ante, § 56; 1 Fonbl. Eq. B. 1, ch. 6, § 8, note (s); Fisher v. Fields, 10 John. R. 506. It has been well remarked that Courts of Equity take cognizance of trusts only, when they are executory, or are not so executed as to be enforced at law. If, therefore, the trust is executed, so that it is cognizable at law, and nothing more remains to be done by the trustee, Courts of Equity will leave the parties to their remedies at law. Baker v. Biddle, 1 Baldwin Cir. R. 422.

Hence in executory trusts, created by a will, the rule in Shelly's case (as it is called) will not be strictly followed in Equity; but the same construction will be had, as governs in regard to marriage articles, if the same intent is apparent on the face of the will. There is, however, a distinction between marriage articles and executory trusts arising under wills, as to the inference of the intention of the parties. It is stated, post, § 984. See Stoner v. Curwen, 5 Sim. R. 264; Roberts v. Dixwill, 1 West. R. 542; Countess of Lincoln v. Duke of Newcastle, 12 Ves. 227; Wood v. Burnham, 6 Paige, R. 513, 519; 4 Kent. Comm. Litt. 290 b, contains so valuable a summary of the general doctrine on this subject, that it deserves to be here stated at large. "It is to be observed, that, in most cases, particularly those, which relate to real property, Courts of Equity have generally endeavored, that their decisions should bear the strictest possible analogy to the decisions of courts of law, in cases of a similar or corresponding impression. All the canons of law, respecting the descent or inheritance of legal estates in lands, have been applied to trust or equitable estates. Some of these, as the exclusion of the half blood, of the ascending line, of the paternal line from the maternal inheritance, and the maternal line from the paternal inheritance, are evidently of feudal extraction, and are generally supposed to be contrary to reason and Equity. Yet, they have been admitted, without any limitation, into the equitable code of England. There is the same division in Equity, as there is at law, of estates of freehold and inheritance, of estates of freehold only, and of estates less than freehold; of estates in possession, remainder, or reversion; and of estates several and estates undivided. It has been observed before, that every species of property is in substance equally capable of being settled in the way of entail; and that, the utmost term allowed for the suspense either of real or personal property from vesting absolutely, is that of a life or lives in being, and twenty-one years after, and perhaps in the case of a posthumous child a few months more. The analogy between Law and Equity is in this instance complete. It may be laid down, without any qualification, that no nearer approach to a perpetuity can be made through the medium of a trust, or will be supported by a Court of Equity, than can be made by legal conveyances of legal estates or interests, or will be admitted in a Court of Law. In these leading rules we find the analogy holds. In some instances it fails. Curtesy has been admitted; dower, though a more favored claim, has been refused, in equitable estates. An equitable estate is, by its nature, incapable of livery of seisin, and of every form of conveyance, which operates by the Statute of Uses. In the transfer, therefore, of equitable estates, these forms of conveyance have been dispensed with; and a mere declaration of trust in favor of another has been held sufficient to transfer to him the equitable fee. On the other hand, trust estates are, by their nature, equally incapable of the process of fines or recoveries. Yet fines are levied and recoveries are suffered of them; and fines and recoveries are as necessary to bar entails of equitable estates, as they are to bar entails of legal estates. In the case of a feme inheritor, Law and Equity agree in vesting the fee in the husband in her right, during their joint lives, and, subject to that, in preserving it to the wife. Where the feme is possessed of personal property, the law, speaking generally, vests it absolutely in the husband, or, at least, gives him the power of acquiring the absolute property of it. Courts of Equity have, in many cases, abridged the right of the husband to the personal property of the wife, and qualified his power over it. In fixing the term for the redemption of mortgages, and in many other cases, per act and conveyance ; but it is also liable to be disposed of by operation of law in invitum like any other property ; as, for example, by a general assignment under a bankruptcy or insolvency, although indirectly the very purposes of the trust may thereby be defeated. Thus, where by will certain estates, were bequeathed to trustees, in order, among other things to pay an annuity to the testator's son of £500 for his natural life, the annuity being declared to be for his personal maintenance and support during his life, and not on any account to be subject or liable to the debts, engagements, charges and incumbrances of the son ; but as the same become due it was to be paid into the son's hands, and not to any other persons whatsoever ; and the son became a bankrupt ; it was held, that the annuity passed by the assignment under the bankruptcy to the assignees. For, it was said, that the policy of the law does not permit property to be so limited, that it shall continue in the enjoyment of the bankrupt, notwithstanding the bankruptcy. The testator might, if he had thought fit, have made the annuity determinable on the bankruptcy,<sup>1</sup> or have made it to go over to another person in the event of the bankruptcy. But, while it was the property of the Bankrupt, it must be subject an analogy to the term for bringing ejectments has frequently influenced the decisions of the Courts. In other cases, an analogy to the term for ejectments, or the terms for bringing other writs, has not been attended to. And in some instances, the courts have not considered themselves bound, even by the statutes of limitations. Smith v. Clay, 3 Bro. Ch. Rep. 639. But the cases, where the analogy fails, are not numerous ; and there scarcely is a rule of Law or Equity, of a more ancient origin, or which admits of fewer exceptions, than the rule, that Equity followeth the Law."

to the ordinary incidents of property ; and, therefore, subject to his debts.<sup>1</sup> So, if a trust is created for a married woman for her separate use, and the trustees are to pay the money into her proper hands and for her use, her own receipt only being required, she may still assign it, and her assignee will take the full title to it.<sup>2</sup> The same rule will apply to the case of a trust fund in rents and profits, created by a will for the benefit of a particular person during his life, although there be a proviso, that he shall not have any power to sell, or to mortgage, or to anticipate in any way the rents and profits.<sup>3</sup>

*§ 975. In regard to trusts, the analogy to [*239] estates at the Common Law is not only followed, as to the rights and interests of the cestui que trust, but also as to the remedies to enforce, preserve, and extinguish *those rights and interests. Thus, for [*240] instance, there cannot, strictly speaking, be a disseisin, abatement, or intrusion, as to a trust estate. But, nevertheless, there may be such an adverse claim of a trust estate by an adverse claimant, taking the rents and profits, as may amount to an equitable ouster of the rightful claimant ; and such, as, if continued twenty years, would, by analogy to legal remedies, bar any assertion of his right in Equity.<sup>4</sup> We have already had occasion to consider this subject in reference to statutes of limitations generally.<sup>1</sup> And it may be here added, that bars to relief in Equity from lapse of time are also entertained in Courts of Equity, independently of the express provisions of any statute of limitations.<sup>2</sup>

§ 975. a. In general, a trustee is only suable in Equity in regard to any matters, touching the trust. But, if he chooses to bind himself by a personal covenant in any such matters, he will be liable at law for a breach thereof, although he may in the instrument, containing the covenant, describe himself as covenanting as trustee ; for the covenant is still operative as a personal covenant, and the superadded words are but a descriptio personæ.<sup>3</sup> Still, however, where the matter is otherwise cognizable in Equity the mere existence of such a covenant will not deprive the Courts of Equity of their jurisdiction over the trust.

§ 976. It is a general rule in Courts of Equity, that wherever a trust exists, either by the declaration of the party, or by intendment or implication of law, and the party, creating the trust, has not appointed [*241] *any trustee to execute it, Equity will follow the legal estate, and decree the person, in whom it is vested, (not being a bonâ fide purchaser for a valuable consideration without notice, or otherwise entitled to protection,) to execute the trust. For, it is a rule in Equity, which admits of no exception, that a Court of Equity never wants a trustee.<sup>4</sup> This is often applied to the cases of powers of sale of lands, given by will for the payment of debts and other purposes, which are in the nature of a trust. In such cases, if the power becomes extinct at law, either from no person being appointed in the will to execute it, or from the party designated dying before the execution of it, Courts of Equity will decree the execution of such trust, and compel the party in possession, as heir or devisee of the legal estate in the lands, to perform it.<sup>1</sup> And, generally, it may be stated, that where property has been bequeathed in trust without the appointment of a trustee, if it is personal estate, the personal representative is deemed the trustee; and if real estate, the heir or devisee is deemed the trustee, and is bound to its due execution.<sup>2</sup>

§ 977. The power of a trustee over the legal estate or property vested in him, properly speaking, exists only for the benefit of the cestui que trust. It is true, that he may, as legal owner, do acts to the prejudice of the rights of the cestui que trust, and he may *even [*242] dispose of the estate or property, so as to bar the interests of the latter therein; as by a sale to a bonâ fide purchaser, for a valuable consideration, without notice of the trust. But, where the alienation is purely voluntary, or where the estate devolves upon heirs, devisees, or other representatives of the trustee, or where the alienee has notice of the trust, the trust attaches to the estate in the same manner, as it did in the hands of the trustee himself, and it will be enforced accordingly in Equity.<sup>3</sup> And, although the trustee may, by a mortgage or other specific lien without notice of the trust, bind the estate or the property; yet it is not bound by any judgments, or any other claims of creditors against him.<sup>1</sup> How far acts of forfeiture by the trustee ought to be allowed to bind the estate of the cestui que trust, has been a matter of considerable diversity of judgment.<sup>2</sup>

§ 978. What powers may be properly exercised over trust property by a trustee, depends upon the nature of the trust, and sometimes upon the character and situation of the cestui que trust. Where the cestui que trust is of age, or sui juris, the trustee has no right (unless express power is given) to change the nature of the estate, as by converting land into money, or money into land, so as to bind the cestui que trust. But, where the cestui que trust is not of age, or sui juris, it is frequently necessary to his interests, that the trustee [*243] should possess the power, and in case his interests require the conversion, the acts of the trustee, bonâ fide done for such a purpose, seem to be justifiable.<sup>3</sup>

§ 979. It has, also, been laid down, as a general rule, that the cestui que trust may call upon the trustee for a conveyance to execute the trust;<sup>4</sup> and that, what the trustee may be compelled to do by a suit, he may voluntarily do without a suit. But this rule admits, if it does not require, many qualifications in its practical application; for, otherwise, a trustee may incur many perils, the true nature and extent of which may not be ascertainable, until there has been a positive decision upon his acts by a Court of Equity, or a positive declaration by such a court of the acts, which he is at liberty to do.<sup>1</sup>

§ 979. a. In regard to trusts, it may be proper to state, that Courts of Equity carry them into effect only, when they are of a certain and definite character. If, therefore, a trust be clearly created in a party, but the terms, by which it is created, are so vague and indefinite that Courts of Equity cannot clearly ascertain either its objects or the persons, who are to take, then the trust will be held entirely to fail, and the property will fall into the general funds of the author of the trust. Thus, for example, where a lady in her lifetime indorsed a promissory note of £2000, and sent it to another lady in a letter, whereby she gave it to the latter for her sole use and benefit, for the express purpose of enabling her to present to either branch of the testatrix's family any portion of the principal or interest thereon as she might deem the most prudent; and in the event of her death, empowering her to dispose of the same by will or deed to those, or either branch of her family she might consider most deserving thereof; and stating, that the indorsement was made to enable her to have the sole use and power thereof; it was held, that the letter created a trust, the objects of which were too indefinite to enable the court to execute it; and that therefore the £2000 formed a part of the donor's personal estate.<sup>2</sup> It was clear in this case, that the donee could not take to her own sole use, for there was a superadded trust, showing that not to be the intention of the donor ; and therefore the property reverted to the donor, as it would upon the failure of any ordinary trust.<sup>1</sup>

979. b. So, where a testatrix bequeathed the residue of her estate to her executors "upon trust to dispose of the same at such times and in such manner, and for such uses and purposes as they shall think fit, it being my will that the distribution thereof shall be left to their discretion;" it was held to be a trust in the executors of such a vague and uncertain nature that it could not be executed by a Court of Equity, and it was therefore void, and the residuary estate so bequeathed was decreed to belong to the next of kin of the testatrix.<sup>2</sup>

§ 980. Passing from these more general considerations in regard to Trusts, and the jurisdiction exercised in Equity over them, we may next proceed to examine them under the heads, into which they are usually divided, of Express Trusts and Implied Trusts ; the latter comprehending all those trusts, which are called constructive and resulting trusts. Express Trusts are those, which are created by the direct and positive acts of the parties by some writing, or deed, or will. Not, that in those cases, the language of the Instrument need point out the very nature, character, and limitations of the trust in direct terms, ipsissimis verbis ; for it is sufficient, the intention to create it can be fairly collected upon the fact of the instrument from the terms used ; and the [*244] *trust can be drawn, as it were, ex visceribus

verborum.<sup>1</sup> Implied Trusts are those, which are deducible from the nature of the transaction, as matter of clear intention, although not found in the words of the parties; or which are superinduced upon the transaction by operation of law, as matter of Equity, independent of the particular intention of the parties.

§ 981. The most usual cases of express trusts are found in preliminary sealed agreements, such as marriage articles, or articles for the purchase of lands; or in formal conveyances, such, as marriage settlements, terms for years, mortgages, and other conveyances and assignments for the payment of debts, or for raising portions, or for other special purposes; or in last wills and testaments, in a variety of bequests and devises, involving fiduciary interests for private benefit, or for public charity. Indeed, many of these instruments (as we shall abundantly see) will also be found to contain implied, constructive, and resulting Trusts; and the separate consideration of them throughout would, therefore, be scarcely attainable, without frequent repetitions of the same matters, as well as of the same illustrations.

§ 982. In regard to each of these subjects, there are a great many nice and refined doctrines and distinctions, which have been engrafted into Equity Jurisprudence, the full examination of which belongs rather to single treatises upon each particular topic, than to a general survey of the system, such as is embraced in the design of the present Commentaries. It may be added, that many of these doctrines and distinctions are the creations of Courts of Equity, acting upon the enlarged principles of social justice, ex aequo et bono, rather than express trusts created by the acts of the parties, or an exposition and execution of their declared intentions. So that they may properly be said to fall within the scope of implied or constructive Trusts. In our subsequent remarks upon all of these topics, (which will necessarily be brief,) no attempt will be made nicely to distinguish between those Trusts, which are express, and those, which are implied. Both will occasionally be blended, unless where the particular nature of the Trusts calls for some discrimination between them.

CHAPTER XXV.

MARRIAGE SETTLEMENTS.

§ 983. AND in the first place, in regard to MARRIAGE SETTLEMENTS. Where an instrument, designed as a marriage settlement, is final in its character, and the nature and extent of the trust estates, created thereby, are clearly ascertained and accurately defined, so that nothing further remains to be done according to the intention of the parties; there, the trusts will be treated as executed trusts, and Courts of Equity will construe them in the same way, as legal estates of the like nature would be construed at law upon the same language.<sup>1</sup> Thus, if the language of the instrument would give a fee tail to the parents in a legal estate, they will be held entitled to a fee tail in the trust estate. But where no marriage settlement has actually been executed; but mere marriage articles only for a settlement; there, Courts of Equity, when called upon to execute them, will indulge in a wider latitude of interpretation; and will construe the words, according to the presumed intention of the parties, most beneficially for the issue of the marriage. In executing such articles they will put it out of the power of the parents to defeat the issue, by requiring, that the limitations in the marriage settlement should be, what are called limitations in strict settlement; that is to say, instead of giving the parents a fee tail, the limitations will be made to them for life, with remainders to the first and [*247] other sons, &c. in fee tail; *and if the articles are applicable to daughters, the like limitations will be made to them also.<sup>1</sup> And in cases of executory trusts arising under wills, a similar favorable construction will be made in favor of the issue in carrying them into effect, if the Court can clearly see from the terms of the will, that the intention of the testator is to protect the interests of the issue in the same way.<sup>2</sup>

§ 984. There is, however, a distinction recognised in Equity between executory trusts, created under marriage articles, and those created under wills, in relation to the interpretation of them, and the mode of

There is a most elaborate note of Mr. Fonblanque (1 Fonbl. on Eq. B. 1, ch. 6, § 8, note (s)) on this subject, in which the distinction between trusts executed and trusts executory is fully discussed, and the distinction stated in the text is firmly maintained. I regret, that it is too long for an insertion in this place. See also, Atherton on Marriage Settlement, ch. 7, p. 93 to 105. Lord Eldon in Jervoise v. Duke of Northumberland (1 Jac. & Walk. 550, 551), has taken notice of the confused and inaccurate senses, in which the words executory trusts and executed trusts are often used. In one sense all trusts are executory, since the cestui que trust may call for a conveyance and execution of the trust. But executory trusts are properly those, where something remains to be done to complete the intention of the parties, and their act is not final. See Mott v. Buxton, 7 Ves. 201; Hopkins v. Hopkins, 1 Atk. 591.

carrying them into execution. In cases of marriage articles Courts of Equity will, from the nature of the instrument, *presume it to be intended for the [* 248] protection and support to the interests of the issue of the marriage, and will, therefore, direct the articles to be executed in strict settlement, unless the contrary purpose clearly appear.<sup>1</sup> For otherwise it would be in the power of the father to defeat the purpose of protecting and supporting such interests, and to appropriate the estate to himself. But, in executory trusts under wills, all the parties take from the mere bounty of the testator ; and there is no presumption, that the testator means one quantity of interest, rather than another, an estate for life in the parent, rather than an estate tail ; for he has a right arbitrarily to give, what estate he thinks fit, to the parent, or to the issue.<sup>2</sup> If, therefore, the words of marriage articles limit an estate for life to the father, with remainder to the heirs of his body, Courts of Equity will decree a strict settlement, in conformity to the presumed intention of the parties. But, if the like words occur in executory trusts created by a will, there is no ground for Courts of Equity to decree the execution of them in strict settlement, unless other words occur, explanatory of the intent. The subject being a mere bounty, the intended extent of the bounty can be known only from the words, in which it is conferred. If it is clearly to be ascertained from any thing in the will, that the testator did not mean to use the expressions, which he has employed, in a technical sense, Courts of Equity, in decreeing such a settlement, as he has directed, will depart from his words in order to [*249] *execute his intention. § 985. In furtherance of the same beneficial purpose in favor of issue, Courts of Equity will construe an instrument, which might, under one aspect, be treated as susceptible of a complete operation at law, to contain merely executory marriage articles, if such an intent is apparent on the face of it; for this construction may be most important to the rights and interests of the issue.<sup>2</sup> So an instrument, as to one part of the property comprised in it, may be construed to be a final legal mar-

Duke of New Castle*, 12 Ves. 227, 228, 229, 230, which might lead to the conclusion, that he held, that there was no distinction between executory trusts under marriage articles, and those created by a will. In that case he said: "There is no difference in the execution of an executory trust created by a will, and of a covenant in marriage articles—Such a distinction would shake to their foundation, the rules of Equity." But, in Jervoise v. Duke of Northumberland, (1 Jac. & Walk. 553,) he corrected the misapprehension of his opinion and said; "If it is supposed that I said there was no difference between marriage articles and executory trusts, and that they stood precisely on the same ground, I never meant to say so. In marriage articles the object of such settlement, the issue to be provided for, the intention to provide for such issue, and in short all the considerations, that belong peculiarly to them, afford prima facie evidence of intent, which does not belong to executory trusts under wills."

§ 986. There is also a distinction in Courts of Equity, as to the parties, in whose favor the provisions of marriage articles will be specifically executed, or not. The parties, seeking a specific execution of such articles, may be those, who are strictly within the reach and influence of the consideration of the marriage, or claiming through them ; such as the wife and issue, and those claiming under them ; or they may be mere volunteers, for whom the settler is under no natural or moral obligation to provide, and yet who are *included [*250] within the scope of the provisions in the marriage articles ; such as his distant heirs or relatives, or mere strangers. Now, the distinction is, that marriage articles will be specifically executed upon the application of any persons within the scope of the consideration of the marriage, or claiming under such person ; but not generally upon the application of mere volunteers.<sup>2</sup> But, where the bill is brought by persons, who are within the scope of the marriage consideration, or claiming under them ; there, Courts of Equity will decree a specific execution throughout, as well in favor of the mere volunteers, as of the plaintiffs in the suit. So that, indirectly, mere volunteers may obtain the full benefit of the articles in cases, where they could not directly insist upon such rights. The ground of this peculiarity is, that when Courts of Equity execute such articles at all, they execute them in toto, and not partially.<sup>3</sup>

Ellison*, 6 Ves. 662, has stated the general doctrine in Equity to be, that voluntary trusts, executed by a conveyance, will be held valid, and enforced in Equity. But, if the trust is executory, and rests merely in covenant, it will not be executed. The exception in favor of meritorious claimants, such as a wife or children, is admitted by the same learned judge, in Pulvertoft v. Pulvertoft, 18 Ves. 99. Mr. Chancellor Kent, in Bunn v. Winthrop, 1 John. Ch. R. 336, 337, has examined many of the cases, and adopted Lord Eldon's conclusion. With respect to chattel interests, he maintains, that an agreement under seal imports a consideration at law; and that therefore a bond, though voluntary and without consideration, will support a decree for executing the trust; relying on *Lechmere v. The same principle has (as we have seen) been applied in favor of a wife and children in cases of a defective execution of powers.<sup>1</sup> But against what persons Courts of Equity will, in favor of a wife or children, interfere, is a point, which may perhaps be thought to admit of more question. They will interfere, to enforce specific execution of such voluntary contracts or voluntary articles, against the heir at law of the voluntary settler, unless perhaps where he is a son wholly unprovided for. But, whether they ought to interfere against the settler himself in such a case, has been a matter of some diversity of opinion and judgment; although the better doctrine seems now to be, that they ought to interfere.<sup>2</sup>

*§ 988. In regard to terms for years and [* 252] personal chattels, it may be observed, that they are capable of being limited in Equity in strict settlement, in the same way, and to the same extent, as real estates of inheritance may be; so as to be transmissible, like heir-looms.<sup>3</sup> The statute de donis does not extend to entails of any thing, except real estates of inheritance. But, nevertheless, estates pur autre vie, and terms of years, and personal chattels are now held to be susceptible of being settled in tail, and rendered unalienable almost for as long a time, as if they were strictly entailable.

§ 989. In regard to estates pur autre vie, they may, at law, be devised or limited in strict settlement by way of remainder, like estates of inheritance; and the remainderman will take as special occupant.<sup>1</sup> But those, who have an interest therein in the nature of estates tail, may bar their issue, and all remainders over, by the alienation of the estate pur autre vie; as those, who are, strictly speaking, tenants in tail of legal estates, may do by fine and recovery.<sup>2</sup>

§ 990. In regard to estates in terms of years and personal chattels, the manner of settling them is [*253] *different; for in them no remainder can at law be limited. person, equivalent to a tenancy in tail, confers upon such person the absolute property in such term or chattels, and bars the issue, and all subsequent limitations, as effectually, as a fine and recovery would do in cases of pure entails, or as an alienation would do in the case of conditional fees, and estates pur autre vie.<sup>1</sup> If, in the case of a term of years or of chattels, the limitations over are too remote, the whole property vests in the first taker.<sup>2</sup>

§ 991. In marriage settlements it is, that we principally find limitations made to trustees to preserve contingent remainders. Trusts of this sort arose out of the doctrine in Chudleigh's Case,<sup>3</sup> and Archer's Case,<sup>4</sup> though it is said, that they were not put in practice until the time of the Usurpation.<sup>5</sup> The object of these limitations is to prevent the *destruction [*254] of contingent remainders by the tenant for life, or other party, before the remainder comes in esse, and is vested in the remainderman. The great dispute in Chudleigh's Case was concerning the power of feoffees to uses, created since the Statute of Uses of 27 Henry VIII. ch. 10, to destroy contingent uses by fine or feoffment, before the contingent uses came into being. It was determined, that the feoffees possessed such a power; and also, that they had in them a possibility of seisin to serve such contingent uses, when they came into being, and a scintilla juris, or power of entry, in case their estate was divested, to restore that possibility. At this time it had not been decided, that the destruction of the particular estate for life, by the feoffment or other conveyance of the cestui que use for life, before the contingent remainder became vested, was a destruction of the contingent remainder. But that point was settled in the affirmative a few years afterwards in Archer's Case.<sup>1</sup>

§ 992. There being then at law, under these determinations, a power in the general feoffees to uses, either to preserve, or to destroy these contingent uses, ad libitum, and also a power in the cestui que use for life also to destroy them, there arose a necessity to remedy these defects. And it was done by vesting a limitation in certain trustees, eo nomine, upon an express trust to preserve such contingent remainders. So that thereby the whole inheritance might come entire to the cestui que use in contingency, in like manner as trustees to uses ought to preserve *them before the Statute of Uses, when they were but trusts, to be executed by Courts of Equity.<sup>2</sup>

§ 993. It was at first a question, whether, upon such a limitation to trustees, after a prior limitation for life, they took any estate in the land, or only a right of entry on the forfeiture or surrender of the first tenant for life, by reason, that the limitation, being only during his life, could not commence, or take effect after his death. But it was settled, that the trustees had the immediate freehold in them, as an estate pur autre vie; and that at law they could maintain and defend any action respecting the freehold.<sup>1</sup> Upon this ground it is that such trustees are entitled to an injunction in Equity, to prevent waste in the lands, and in mines, and timber thereon; as these constitute a valuable, and sometimes the most valuable, portion of the inheritance, which the trustees are bound to preserve. In short, as has been observed by Lord Hardwicke, the duty of such trustees being to preserve the inheritance, every assistance will be granted by Courts of Equity in support of their trust, and to aid them in its due accomplishment.<sup>2</sup>

§ 994. On the other hand, Courts of Equity will treat, as a distinct breach of trust, every act of such trustees inconsistent with their proper duty, and will give relief to the parties injured by such misconduct.<sup>3</sup> If, therefore, they should, in violation of *their [*256] trust, join in any conveyance to destroy the contingent uses or remainders, they will be held responsible therefor. If the persons, taking under such conveyance, are volunteers, or have notice of the trust, they will be held liable to the same trusts, and decreed to restore the estate. If they are purchasers without notice, then the lands are, indeed, discharged of the trust; but the trustees themselves will be held liable for the breach in Equity, and will be decreed to pur-

§ 995. But it is not every case, in which trustees have joined in a conveyance to destroy contingent remainders, that they will be deemed guilty of a breach of trust.<sup>2</sup> In some cases Courts of Equity will even compel them to join in conveyances, which may affect, or destroy such remainders. And, in such cases, it has been supposed, that what they may be compelled to do by suit, if voluntarily done, will not be deemed a breach of trust.<sup>3</sup> But the cases, in which Courts of Equity will compel trustees to join in such conveyances, are (as has been correctly said) rare. They have happened under peculiar circumstances; either of pressure to discharge incumbrances prior to the settlement; or in favor of creditors, where the settlement [*257] was voluntary; or *for the advantage of persons, who were the first objects of the settlement; as, for example, to enable the first son to make a settlement upon an advantageous marriage.<sup>4</sup>

§ 996. There is no question, however, that the trustees may join with the cestui que trust in tail in any conveyance to bar the entail; for, that is no breach of trust, but precisely what they may be compelled to do; although the cestui que trust himself might have barred such entail without their joining in it.<sup>1</sup> But there is a great distinction between cases, where Courts of Equity will compel trustees to join in a conveyance to destroy contingent remainders, and cases, where they will decree them to be guilty of a breach of trust for such an act, when it is voluntarily done by them. Thus, for example, Courts of Equity will not punish trustees, as guilty of breach of trust, for joining in a conveyance of the cestui que trust, in tail to bar the entail. And yet it is equally clear, that they will not compel them to join in such conveyance.<sup>2</sup> The ground of this distinction is, that trustees to support contingent remainders are considered as honorary trustees for the benefit of the family; and the interests of mankind require them to be treated as such by all Courts of Justice. And, *unless a viola- [*258] tion of their trust appears, Courts of Equity ought not to take away all their discretion; or to direct them not to join in any conveyance without the order of such a Court, although the trustees may be of opinion, that the interests of the family require it. The effect of such a doctrine would be to make the Courts of Equity the trustees of all the estates in the country.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>3</sup> Moody v. Walters, 16 Ves. 310, 311; Biscoe v. Perkins, 1 Ves. & Beam. 491.—Lord Hardwicke, in Potter v. Chapman (Ambler R. 99), said, that if a trust is personal and has not been corruptly exercised, Courts of Equity will not interpose. This remark is applicable, not to cases, like those of trustees to preserve contingent remainders, but to trusts purely personal, and in the discretion of the trustee, as to their exercise.

the authorities the true nature and extent of the duties and liabilities of trustees to preserve contingent remainders; and in what cases they may or ought to join in conveyances to destroy them, or not. Lord Eldon has expressed himself unable to deduce the true principle from them. His language is; "The cases are uniform to this extent; that if trustees, before the first tenant in tail is of age, join in destroying the remainders, they are liable for a breach of trust; and so is every purchaser under them with notice. But when we come to the situation of trustees to preserve remainders, who have joined in a recovery after the first tenant in tail is of age, it is difficult to say more, than that no judge in Equity has gone the length of holding, that he would punish them, as for a breach of trust; even in a case, where they would not have been directed to join. The result is, that they seem to have laid down, as the safest rule for [*259] trustees, but certainly *most inconvenient for the general interests of mankind, that it is better for the trustees never to destroy the remainders, even if the tenant in tail concurs, without the direction of the Court. The next consideration is, in what cases the Court will direct them to join. And, if I am governed by what my predecessors have done, and refused to do, I cannot collect, in what cases trustees would or would not be directed to join; as it requires more abilities, than I possess, to reconcile the different cases with reference to that question. They all, however, agree, that these trustees are honorary trustees; that they cannot be compelled to join; and all the judges protect themselves from saying, that if they had joined, they should be punished; always assuming, that the tenant in tail must be twenty-one."<sup>1</sup>

CHAPTER XXVI.

TERMS FOR YEARS.

§ 998. IN the next place, in regard to TERMS FOR YEARS, whereby trusts are created to subserve the special objects of the parties. The creation of long terms for years, for the purpose of securing money, lent on mortgage of the land, took its rise from the inconveniences of the ancient way of making mortgages in fee by way of feoffment, and other solemn conveyances with a condition of defeasance. For by such mode, if the condition was not punctually performed, the estate of the mortgagee at law became absolute, and was subject to incumbrances made by him; and even (as some thought) to the dower of his wife. Hence it became usual to create long terms of years upon the like condition; because, among other reasons, such terms on the death of the mortgagee became vested in his personal representatives, who were also entitled to the debt, and could properly discharge it.<sup>1</sup> But, as this subject will be more fully considered hereafter,<sup>2</sup> it is only necessary to say in this place, that, by analogy to the case of mortgages, terms for years were often created for securing the payment of jointures and portions for children, and for other special trusts. Such terms do not determine upon the mere performance of the trusts, for which they are created, unless there be a special proviso to that effect in the deed. The legal interest thus continues in the trustee after the trusts are performed; although the owner of the fee is entitled to the equitable and beneficial interest therein. At law the possession of the lessee for years is deemed to be the possession of the owner of the freehold. And, by analogy, Courts of Equity hold, that where the tenant for the term of years is but a trustee for the owner of the inheritance, he shall not oust his cestui que trust, or obstruct him in any act of ownership, or in making any assurances of his estate. In these respects, therefore, the term is consolidated with the inheritance. It follows the descent to the heir, and all the alienations made of the inheritance, or of any particular estate or interest, carved out of it by deed, or by will, or by act of law.<sup>1</sup> In short, a term

<sup>1</sup> 2 Fonbl. Eq. B. 2, ch. 4, § 3, note (i), § 4, note (o); Co. Litt. 290 b, Butler's note (1), § 13; Whitchurch v. Whitchurch, 2 P. Will. 236; Charlton v. Low, 3 P. Will. 330; Villers v. Villers, 2 Atk. 72; Willoughby v. Willoughby, 1 Term Rep. 765. This whole subject was fully considered by Lord Hardwicke, in his masterly judgment in Willoughby v. Willoughby, (1 Term Rep. 763). The following extract from that opinion contains a clear exposition of the points in the text. "What is the nature of a term attendant upon the inheritance? The attendance of terms for years upon the inheritance is the creature of a Court of Equity, invented partly to protect real property, and partly to keep it in the right channel. In order to it, this Court framed the distinction between such attendant terms, and terms in gross, notwithstanding, that in the consideration of the Common Law, they are both the same, and equally keep out the owner of the fee, so long as they subsist. But as Equity always considers, who has the right in conscience to the land, and on that ground makes one man a trustee for another; and as the Common Law allows the possession of the tenant for years to be the possession of the owner of the freehold, this Court said, where the tenant for years is but a trustee for the owner of the inheritance, he shall not keep out his cestui que trust, nor, pari ratione, obstruct him in doing any acts of ownership, or in making any assurances of his estate. And, there-

attendant upon the inheritance by express declaration, or by implication of law, may be said to be fore, in Equity, such a term for years shall yield, ply, and be moulded, according to the uses, estates, or charges, which the owner of the inheritance declares, or carves out of the fee. Thus, the dominion of real property was kept entire. Of this we meet with nothing in our books before Queen Elizabeth's reign, when mortgages by long terms of years began to come into use. Before that time, the law looked upon very long terms with a jealous eye, and laid them under violent presumptions of fraud; because they tended to prevent the crown of its forfeitures, and the lord of the fruits of his tenures. Neither could there, much before that time, be any use of a term attendant upon the inheritance, to preserve the limitations of a settlement, in many cases; because the tenant for years was in the power of the owner of the freehold, till the statute 21 Hen 8, c. 15, which enabled him to falsify a recovery against the tenant of the freehold. Till then, by such a recovery the term was gone and consequently could attend upon nothing. But since the law was altered by that statute, and the term was preserved, this Court could lay hold of it. Proceeding upon these principles, wherever a term for years has been vested in a stranger, in trust for the owner of the inheritance, whether by trust expressly declared, or by construction or judgment of this Court, which is called a trust by operation of law, this Court has said, that the trust or beneficial interest of such a term shall follow, or be affected by all such conveyances, assurances, or charges, as the owner creates of the inheritance. Though the law says, that the term and the fee being in different persons, they are separate distinct estates, and the one not merged in the other, yet the beneficial and profitable interest of both being in the same person, Equity will unite them for the sake of keeping the property entire. Therefore, if the owner of the inheritance levy a fine sur conusance de droit, or suffer a common recovery to uses, the trust of the term shall follow, and be governed by those uses, although a term for years is not the subject of a fine sur conusance de droit, much less of a common recovery; nor would Equity allow the trust of a term in gross to be settled with such limitations. This doctrine is always allowed to have its full effect as between the representatives, that is, the heir, either in fee-simple or fee-tail, of the owner of the inheritance, and the executor, and all persons claiming as volunteers under him; though certain distinctions have been admitted as to creditors, which are not material to the present case. And, in general, the rule has been the same, whether the trust of the term be created by express declaration, or arise by construction and judgment of this Court. On this ground are the cases of Tyffon v. Tyffon, 2 Ch. Cas. 49 and 55, and 1 Vern. 1; Best v. Stamford, 2 Vern. 420, and Precedents in Chancery, 232: Haytor governed in Equity by the same rules, generally, to which the inheritance is subject.<sup>1</sup>

§ 999. Still, although the trust or benefit of the term is annexed to the inheritance, the legal interest of the term remains distinct and separate from it at law, and the whole benefit and advantage to be made of the term arises from this separation. For, if two or more persons, have claims upon the inheritance under different titles, a term of years attendant upon it is still so distinct from it, that, if any one of them obtains an assignment of it, then (unless he is affected by any of the circumstances, which Equity considers as fraudulent, or as otherwise controlling his rights) he will be entitled, both at law and in Equity, to the estate for the whole continuance of the term, to the utter exclusion [*264] of all the other claimants. This, if the *term is of long duration, absolutely deprives all the other claimants of every kind of benefit in the land.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1000. Supposing, therefore, that A. purchases an estate, which previous to his purchase, had been sold, Cas. 160, which was a case on the custom of London. All these cases were cited at the bar; and I choose to put them together without stating them particularly, because they all tend only to prove this general proposition. But, although in all these cases, this Court considers the trust of the term, as annexed to the inheritance; yet the legal estate of the term is always separate from it, and must be so; otherwise it would be merged. And this gives the Court an opportunity to make use of such terms, as a guard and protection to an equitable owner of the inheritance against mesne conveyances, which would carry the fee at Common Law; or to a person, who is both legal and equitable owner of the inheritance, against such mesne incumbrances, as he ought not to be affected with in conscience. And, here, the Court often disannexes the trust of the term from the strict legal fee; but still in support of right."

mortgaged, leased, and charged with every kind of incumbrance, to which real property is subject ; in in this case A. and the other purchasers, and all the incumbrancers, have equal claims upon the estate. This is the meaning of the expression, that their equity is equal. But, if there is a term of years subsisting in the estate, which was created prior to the purchases, mortgages, or other incumbrances, and A. procures an assignment of it in trust for himself, this gives him the legal interest in the lands during the continuance of the term, absolutely discharged from, and unaffected by, any of the purchases, mortgages, and other incumbrances, subsequent to the creation of the term, but prior to his own purchase. This is the meaning of the expression in assignments of terms, that they are to protect the purchaser from all mesne incumbrances. But it is to be observed, that A., to be entitled in equity to the benefit of the term, must have all the following requisites ; he must be a purchaser for a valuable consideration ; his purchase must, in all respects, be a fair purchase, and free from every kind of fraud ; and at the time of his purchase he must have no notice of the prior conveyance, mortgage, charge, or other incumbrance. It is to be observed, that mortgagees, lessees, and other incumbrancers are purchasers in this sense to the amount of their several charges, interests,* or rights. If any person of this descrip- [*265] tion, unaffected by notice or fraud, takes a defective conveyance or assignment of the fee, or of any estate carved out of it, defective either by reason of some prior conveyance, or of some prior charge or incumbrance ; and if he also takes an assignment of a term to a trustee for himself, or to himself, where he takes the conveyance of the inheritance to his trustee; in each of these cases he is entitled to the full benefit of the term; that is, he may use the legal estate of the term to defend his possession during the continuance of the term, or, if he has lost the possession, to recover it at Common Law, in preference to all claimants prior to his purchase, but subsequent to his term.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1001. At the Common Law all terms for years are (as has been intimated) deemed to be terms in gross.<sup>2</sup> And Courts of Equity, when they hold terms for years to be attendant upon the inheritance, always do so by affecting the person, holding the term, with a trust for that purpose, either upon the express declaration of the parties, or by implication of law. [*266] If the term is made attendant upon the inheritance by express declaration, it is immaterial, whether the term, if it were in the same hands with the inheritance, would or would not have merged; or whether it be subject to some ulterior limitation, to which the inheritance is not subject; for the express declaration will be sufficient to make it attendant upon the inheritance. But, if the term is to be made attendant upon the inheritance by implication of law,

<sup>1</sup> Ibid. The whole of these two last sections have been copied almost verbatim from Mr. Butler's learned note to Co. Litt. 290, b. § 13, which gives a thorough, and, at the same time, a condensed view of the doctrines of Equity on this subject. The notes of Mr. Fonblanque on the same subject are highly valuable, 2 Fonbl. Eq. B. 2, ch. 4, § 3, notes (i) (l), § 4, note (o). The basis of the general statements by each of these distinguished authors will be found in the opinion of Lord Hardwicke in the case of Willoughby v. Willoughby, 1 Term Rep. 765. then it is necessary, that it should not be subject to any other limitation, and that the owner of the inheritance should be entitled to the whole trust in the term.<sup>1</sup> The general rule is, that where the same person has the inheritance and the term in himself, although he has in one the equitable interest, and in the other the legal interest, there the inheritance by implication draws to itself the term, and makes that attendant upon it. For, as at law, if the legal estate in the term and in the inheritance come into the same hand, the term is merged, and the estate goes to the heir; so in Equity, where the one estate is equitable, and the other legal, it is in the nature of a merger; and the trust of the term will follow the inheritance.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1002. But although a term may be so attendant upon the inheritance; yet, as the legal estate in it *remains distinct and separate from the inher- [267] itance at law, it may at any time be disannexed therefrom by the proper acts of the parties in interest, and be turned into a term in gross at law. And a term so attendant becomes a term in gross, when it fails of a freehold to support it, or it is divided from the inheritance by different limitations from those of the latter.<sup>3</sup> In many cases the distinction between terms in gross and terms attendant upon the inheritance, is highly important; the former being generally treated as mere personalty; the latter, as partaking of the realty, and following the fate of the inheritance. Thus, for example, a term attendant upon the inheritance will not pass by a will not executed, so as to pass real estate under the Statute of Frauds. So, such a term is real assets in the hands of the heir; for the Statute of Frauds having made a trust in fee assets in the hands of the heir, the term, which follows the inheritance, and is subject to all the charges, which would affect the inheritance, must also be real assets.<sup>1</sup> On the contrary, a term in gross is personal assets only.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1003. It would lead us too far from the immediate object of these Commentaries, to go at large into all the doctrines of Courts of Equity in regard to terms for years, created upon special trusts. It may be remarked, however, that where such terms are created to raise portions for children upon marriage settlements, and the settler also personally covenants to pay such portions, the real estate is considered as the primary fund, and the personal estate of the covenantor as auxiliary only.<sup>3</sup> If there be no such personal covenant for the payment of the portions, but only a covenant to settle lands, and to raise a term of years out of the lands for securing the portions, in such a case, even though there be a bond to perform the covenant, the portions are not in any event payable out of his personal estate.<sup>4</sup> questions have arisen, as to the time when portions are to be raised by trustees for the benefit of children, especially upon reversionary interests. Upon this subject I cannot do better, than to quote a passage from the learned Commentaries of Mr. Chancellor Kent. (4 Kent Comm. Lect. 58, p. 148, 149, 150, 3d edit.) "A very vexatious question has been agitated, and has distressed the English courts, from the early case of Graves v. Mattison, down to the recent decision in Wynter v. Bold, as to the time, at which money provided for children's portions, may be raised by sale, or mortgage of a reversionary term. The history of the question is worthy of a moment's attention, as a legal curiosity, and a sample of the perplexity and uncertainty, which complicated settlements 'rolled in tangles,' and subtle disputation, and eternal doubts, will insensibly incumber and oppress a free and civilized system of jurisprudence. If nothing appears to gainsay it, the period, at which they are to be raised, is presumed to have been intended to be that, which would be most beneficial to those, for whom the portions were provided. If the term for providing portions ceases to be contingent, and becomes a vested remainder in trustees, to raise portions out of the rents and profits after the death of the parents, and payable to the daughters coming of age, or marriage, a Court of Equity has allowed a portion to be raised by sale or mortgage in the lifetime of the parents, subject nevertheless, to the life estate. The parent's death is anticipated, in order to make provision for the children. The result of the very protracted series of these discussions for one hundred and fifty years is, that if an estate be settled to the use of the father for life, remainder to the mother for life, remainder to the sons of the marriage in strict settlement, and, in default of such issue, with remainder to trustees to raise portions, and the mother dies without male issue, and leaves issue female, the term is vested in remainder in trustees; and they may sell or mortgage such a reversionary term, in the lifetime of the surviving parent, for the purpose of raising the portions; unless the contingencies, on which the portions were to become vested, had not happened, or there was a manifest intent, that the term should not be sold, or mortgaged in the lifetime of the parents, nor until it had become vested in the trustees in possession. The inclination of the Court of Chancery has been against raising portions out of reversionary terms by sale or mortgage, in the lifetime of the parent, as leading to a sacrifice of the interests of the person in reversion or remainder. And modern settlements usually contain a prohibitory clause against it." Post, § 1248, § 1249.

CHAPTER XXVII.

MORTGAGES.

§ 1004. IN the next place, as to MORTGAGES. It is wholly unnecessary to enter into a minute examination of the origin and history of this well known and universally received security in the countries governed by the common law. During the existence of the system of feudal tenures in its full rigor, mortgages could have had no existence in English Jurisprudence, as they were incompatible with the leading objects of that system.<sup>1</sup> The maxim of the feudal law was, Feudalia, invito domino, aut agnatis, non recte subjiciuntur hypothecæ, quamvis fructus posse esse, receptum est.<sup>2</sup> But, as soon as the general right of alienation of real property was admitted, the necessities of the people almost immediately led to the introduction of mortgages.<sup>3</sup> Littleton has enumerated two sorts, which were distinguished by the names of vadium vivum, and vadium mortuum.<sup>4</sup> The latter was, in the common law, called a mortgage, from two French words, mort, (mortuum, or dead,) and gage, (vadium, pignus, or pledge,) because if not redeemed at the stipulated time, it was dead to the debtor.<sup>5</sup> The former was called simply a living pledge, in contradistinction to the latter, for the reason given by Lord Coke. Vivum autem dicitur vadium, quia nunquam moritur ex aliquâ parte, quod ex suis proventibus acquiratur.<sup>1</sup> Thus, if a man borrowed £100 of another, and made over an estate of lands to him, until he received the same sum out of the issues and profits of the land, it was called a vivum vadium; for neither the money, nor the land dieth, or is lost. But if a feoffment was made of land upon condition, that if the feoffor paid to the feoffee the sum of £100 on a certain day, he might re-enter on the land; there, if he did not pay the sum at the day, he could not, at the common law, afterwards re-enter; but, (as Littleton said,) the land was taken away from him for ever, and so dead to him. And if he did pay at the day, then the pledge was dead as to the feoffee; and therefore the feoffee was called tenant in mortgage, the estate being mortuum vadium.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1005. It has been generally supposed, that the notion of mortgages, and of the redemption thereof, in the English Law, was borrowed from the Roman Law, although Mr. Butler contends, that they were strictly founded on the common law doctrine of conditions.<sup>3</sup> Whatever truth there may be in this latter observation, as to the origin of mortgages of

lands in the English Law, there is no doubt, that the notion of the equity of redemption was derived from the Roman Law, and that it is purely the creature of Courts of Equity.<sup>1</sup> In the Roman Law there were two sorts of transfers of property, as security for debts, viz. the pignus and the hypotheca. The pignus or pledge was, when any thing was pledged as a security for money lent, and the possession thereof was passed to the creditor, upon the condition of returning it to the owner, when the debt was paid. The hypotheca was, when the thing pledged was not delivered to the creditor, but remained in the possession of the debtor.<sup>2</sup> In respect to what was called an hypothecary action, there was no difference between them. Inter pignus (says the Institutes) autem et hypothecam (quantum ad actionem hypothecariam attinet) nihil interest ; nam de quâ re inter creditorem et debitorem convenerit, ut sit pro debito obligata, utraque hac appellatione continetur. Sed in aliis differentia est. Nam Pignoris appellatione eam proprie rem contineri dicimus, quæ simul etiam traditur creditori ; maxime si mobilis sit. At eam, quæ sine traditione nudâ conventionem tenetur, proprie Hypothecæ appellatione contineri dicimus.<sup>3</sup> The Digest states the distinction with still more pregnant brevity. Proprie Pignus dicimus, quod ad creditorem transit ; Hypothecam, cum non transit, nec possessio ad creditorem.<sup>4</sup>

§ 1006. In the Roman Law, it seems, that the word pignus was often used indiscriminately to describe both species of securities, whether applied to movables or immovables. Thus, it is said in the Digest ; Pignus contrahetur non solâ traditione, sed etiam nudâ conventione, etsi non traditum est.<sup>1</sup> But, in an exact sense, pignus was properly applied to movables, and hypotheca to immovables. Pignus appellatum (says the Digest) a pugno, quia res, quæ pignori dantur, manu traduntur. Unde etiam videri potest, verum esse, quod quidam putant, pignus proprie rei mobilis constitui.<sup>2</sup> So that it answered very nearly to the corresponding term pledge in the common law, which, though sometimes used, in a general sense, to include mortgages of land, is, in a stricter sense, confined to the pawn and deposit of personal property. In the Roman Law, however, there was generally no substantial difference, in the nature and extent of the rights and remedies of the parties, between movables and immovables, whether pledged, or hypothecated. But in the common law, as we shall presently see, the difference, as to rights and remedies, between a pledge of personal property and a mortgage of real estate, or even of personal property, is very marked and important.<sup>3</sup>

cations ; the action called actio pignoratitia, and that called actio hypothecaria. The former was properly an action in personam, and divisible into two sorts ; (1.) Actio directa, which lay in favor of the debtor against the creditor, to compel him to restore the pledge, when the debt had been paid ;<sup>1</sup> (2.) Actio contraria, which lay in favor of the creditor against the debtor, to recover the proper value or compensation, when the latter had retained possession of the pledge ; or when the title to it had failed by fraud or otherwise ; or when the creditor sought compensation for expenses upon it.<sup>2</sup> The actio hypothecaria, on the other hand, was strictly in rem ; and was given to the creditor, to obtain possession of the pledge, in whosever hands it might be.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1008. Without dwelling more upon topics of this sort, which are purely technical, it may be useful to state, as illustrative of some of the doctrines admitted into Equity Jurisprudence, that under the Civil Law, although the debt, for which the mortgage or pledge was given, was not paid at the stipulated time, it did not amount to a forfeiture of the right of property of the debtor therein. It simply clothed the creditor with the authority to sell the pledge and reimburse himself for his debt, interest, and expenses ; and the residue of the proceeds of the sale then belonged to the debtor.<sup>1</sup> It has been supposed by some writers, that to justify such a sale, it was indispensable, that it should be made under a decretal order of some Court upon the application of the creditor. But, although the creditor was at liberty to make such an application, it does not appear, that he might not act, in ordinary cases, without any such judicial sanction, after giving the proper notice of the intended sale, as prescribed by law, to the debtor. When the debtor could not be found, and notice could not be given to him, such a decretal order seems to have been necessary.<sup>2</sup> And where a sale could not be effected, a decree, in the nature of a foreclosure, could be obtained under certain circumstances, by which the absolute property would be vested in the creditor.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1009. This authority to make a sale might be exercised not only, when it was expressly so agreed between the parties; but when the agreement between them was silent on the subject. Even an agreement between them, that there should be no sale, was so far invalid, that a decretal order of sale might be obtained upon the application of the creditor.<sup>4</sup> On the other hand, if by the agreement it was expressly stipulated, that, if the debt was not paid at the day, the

Lib. 20, tit. 4, l. 20; 1 Domat, B. 3, tit. 1, § 3, art. 3, 4.—In a note to the former volume, (§ 415, note. 1, p. 402, § 420, and notes,) it was stated, that the doctrine of tacking mortgages was not known in the Civil Law. Of course the remarks there made were applicable to the case of tacking a first and third mortgage to the exclusion of an intermediate mortgagee; and not what may be called a tacking of debts by the mortgagee, in the case of a mortgagor seeking redemption. It is clear, that the Civil Law, in the case of the mortgagor seeking to redeem, did not permit it, unless the mortgagor paid, not only the debt, for which the mortgage was given, but all other debts due to the mortgagee. Si in possessione fueris constitutus, (says the Code,) nisi ea quoque pecunia tibi reddatur, vel offeratur, quæ sine pignore debetur, eam restituere propter exceptionem doli mali non cog-eris. Jure enim contendis, debitores eam solam pecuniam, cujus nomine ea pignora obligaverunt, offerentes audiri non oportere, nisi pro illa satisfecerint, quam mutuam simpliciter acceperunt. But then it is immediately added, that this does not apply to the case of a second creditor. Quod in secundo creditore locum non habet; nec enim necessitas ei imponitur chirographarium etiam debitum priori creditore offerre. (Cod. Lib. 8, tit. 27, l. 1.) For it was expressly held in the Civil Law, that, where there was a first mortgage, and then a second mortgage, and then the first mortgagee lent another sum to the debtor, he could not tack it against the second mortgagee. Pothier, Pand. Lib. 20, tit. 4, n. 10; Dig. Lib. 20, tit. 4, l. 20. Mr. Chancellor Kent (4 Kent, Comm. Lect. 58, p. 136, note (a); Idem, p. 175, 176, 3d edit.) has said, that in the Civil Law the mortgagee was even allowed to tack another incumbrance to his own, and thereby to gain a preference over an intermediate incumbrance; for which he cites Dig. Lib. 20, tit. 4, l. 3. If, as I presume, his meaning is, that the tacking gave a preference over the intermediate incumbrancer, with great deference, I do not find, that the passage cited supports the doctrine; and it seems contrary to the passages already cited from Cod. Lib. 8, tit. 27, l. 1, and Dig. Lib. 20, tit. 4, l. 20. There are other passages in the Code, on the subject of a subsequent mortgagee

movables and immovables were included in the same mortgage, the movables were first to be sold, and applied in the course of payment.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1011. These instances are sufficient to show some strong analogies between the Roman Law and the Equity Jurisprudence of England on the subject of mortgages, and to evince the probability, if not the certainty, that the latter has silently borrowed some of its doctrines from the former source.<sup>2</sup> But to develop them at large would occupy too much space; and we may now, therefore, return to the more immediate subject of mortgages at the common law.

§ 1012. We have already had occasion to take notice of the inconveniences attendant upon the creation of mortgages in fee, and of the substitution in *their [*278] stead of terms for years.<sup>3</sup> But, in truth, whether the acquiring the rights of a first mortgagee, by paying his mortgage, and thereby confirming his own title by substitution. But it appears to me, that they do no more than subrogate the subsequent mortgagee to all the rights of the first mortgagee; and that they do not enlarge those rights. See Code, Lib. 8, tit. 18, l. 1, 5; 1 Domat. B. 3, tit. 1, § 3, art. 7, 8; Id. B. 3, tit. 1, § 6, art. 6, 7; Heinecc. Elem. Pand. Ps. 4, tit. 4, § 35. Doctor Brown, too, (1 Brown. Civ. Law, 208; Id. 202,) insists, that a mortgagee might tack another incumbrance to his mortgage; and, if he lent more money by way of further charge on the estate, he was, in the Civil Law, preferred, as to this charge also, before a mortgage, created in the intermediate time. He cites the Dig. Lib. 20, tit. 4, l. 3, which does not (as has been already stated) seem to support the conclusion. In the Equity Jurisprudence of England, (as we have seen,) the heir of a mortgagor cannot (although the mortgagor himself may) redeem without paying the bond debt of the mortgagor, as well as the mortgage debt, (Ante, § 418,) and tacking is also permitted against mense incumbrancers in certain cases. See Ante, § 412 to 419; 2 Woodes. Lect. 24, p. 158, 159; 4 Kent, Comm. Lect. 58, p. 175, 176, 3d edit.; 2 Fonbl. Eq. B. 3, ch. 1, § 9, note (u); Jeremy on Eq. Jurid. one course or the other was adopted, so far as the common law was concerned, the mortgagor was subjected to great hardships and inconveniences, if he did not strictly fulfil the conditions of the mortgage at the very time specified; as he thereby forfeited the inheritance, or the term, as the case might be, however great might be its intrinsic value, compared with the debt, for which it was mortgaged.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1013. Courts of Equity, therefore, acting upon their general principles, could not fail to perceive the necessity of interposing to prevent such manifest mischief and injustice, which were wholly irremediable at law. They soon arrived at the just conclusion, that mortgages ought to be treated, as the Roman Law had treated them, as a mere security for the debt due to the mortgagee; that the mortgagee held the estate, although forfeited at law, as a trust;<sup>2</sup> and that the mortgagor had, what

<sup>2</sup> Seton v. Slade, 7 Ves. 283; Cholmondeley v. Clinton, 2 Jac. & Walk. 182 to 185.—When a mortgage is denominated a trust, and the mortgagee a trustee of the mortgagor, the expression is not to be understood in an unlimited sense. It is a trust sui generis, and of a peculiar nature. This subject is expounded with great ability by Sir Thomas Plumer in his masterly judgment in Cholmondeley v. Clinton, 2 Jac. & Walk. 1 to 189, &c. The following extract from it is so valuable and important, that I have not been able to persuade myself to omit it, although it is long. (p. 182.) “As to the position,” (said he,) “of the mortgagee being a trustee for the mortgagor, upon which so much of the argument is built. That the consequences contended for would not follow, even if the character of trustee did properly belong to the mortgagee, not being in actual possession, I have already endeavored to show. It may be proper, however, to consider, how far, and in what respect, he is to be considered as possessing that character. The position is to be received with considerable qualifications, as will appear by examining, what is the true character of a mortgagee, and how he is considered in a Court of Equity. Lord Mansfield, adverting to the comparisons made in respect to mortgages, has, I think, said there is nothing so unlike as a simile, and nothing more apt to mislead. A mortgagor has had ascribed to him a variety of different characters, in which there existed some points of resemblance, when it was not very material to ascertain, what his powers or interests were, or to settle with any great precision, in what respects the resemblance did, and in what it did not, exist. But it would be productive of much error, if it were to be concluded, that the resemblance was complete in every point, to any one of the ascribed characters. The relations of vendor and purchaser, of principal and bailiff, of landlord and tenant, of debtor and creditor, of trustee and cestui que trust, have been applied to the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee, according to their different rights and interests, before or after the condition forfeited, before or after foreclosure, and according as the possession was in the mortgagor or mortgagee. Quo teneam vultus mutantem Protea nodo? The truth is, it is a relation perfectly anomalous and sui generis. The names of mortgagor and mortgagee most properly characterize the relation. They are, (as Mr. Justice Bullar observes, in Birch v. Wright), characters as well known, and their rights, powers, and interests as well settled, as any in the law. It is only in a secondary point of view, and under certain circumstances, and for a particular purpose, that the character of trustee constructively belongs to a mortgagee. No trust is expressed in the contract. It is only raised by implication, in subordination to the main purposes of it, and after that is fully satisfied. Its primary character is not fiduciary. It is a contract of a peculiar nature, by which, under certain conditions, the mortgagee becomes the purchaser of a security and pledge, to hold for his own use and benefit. He acquires a distinct and independent beneficial interest in the estate; he has always a qualified and limited right, and may eventually acquire an absolute and permanent one to take possession; and he is entitled to enforce his right by an adverse suit in invitum against the mortgagor; all which can never take place between trustee and cestui que trust. They have always an identity and unity of interest, and are never opposed in contest to each other. The late Master of the Rolls observes, that, in general, a trustee is not allowed to deprive his cestui que trust of the possession. But a Court of Equity never interferes to prevent the mortgagee from assuming the possession. In this the contrast between the two characters is strongly marked. By not interfering in this latter case, a Court of Equity does not, as it is supposed, in opposition to its usual principle, refuse to afford protection to a cestui que trust against his trustee. But the interference is refused, because the mortgagor and mortgagee do not, in this instance, stand in the relation of trustee and cestui que trust. The mortgagee, when he takes the possession, is not acting as a trustee for the mortgagor, but he could any other trust, if he applied within a reasonable *time to redeem, and offered a full payment of the debt and of all equitable charges.<sup>1</sup>

independently and adversely for his own use and benefit. A trustee is stopped in Equity from dispossessing his cestui que trust, because such dispossession would be a breach of trust. A mortgagee cannot be stopped, because in him it is no breach of trust, but in strict conformity to his contract, which would be directly violated by any impediment thrown in the way of the exercise of this right. Upon the same principle the mortgagee is not prevented, but assisted in Equity, when he has recourse to a proceeding, which is not only to obtain the possession, but the absolute title to the estate by foreclosure. This presents no resemblance to the character of a trustee, but to a character directly opposite. It is in this opposite character, that he accounts for the rents, when in possession, and when he is not, receives the interest of his mortgage debt. The payment of that interest by the person, claiming to be the mortgagor, is a recognition of that relation subsisting between them; but is no recognition of the mortgagee's possessing the character of trustee, much less of his being a trustee for any other person claiming the same character of mortgagor. "The ground, on which a mortgagee is in any case, and for any purpose, considered to have a character resembling that of a trustee, is the partial and limited right, which, in Equity, he is allowed to have in the whole estate legal and equitable. He does not at any time possess, like a trustee, a title to the legal estate, distinct and separate from the beneficial and equitable. Whenever he is entitled at all to either, he is fully entitled to both, and to the legal and equitable remedies incident to both. But, in Equity, his title is confined to a particular purpose. He has no right to either, nor can make use of any remedy belonging to either, further than, and as may be necessary to secure the repayment of the money due to him. When that is paid, his duty is to reconvey the estate to the person entitled to it. It never remains in his hands, clothed with any fiduciary duty. He is never entrusted with the care of it; nor under any obligation to hold it for any one but himself; nor is he allowed to use it for any other purpose. The estate is not committed to his care; nor has he the means of preventing, or being acquainted with the changes, which the title to the equity of redemption may undergo, either by the act of the mortgagor, without his privity, or by operation of law, by descent, forfeiture, or otherwise; and consequently, as I have already endeavored to show, by the operation of the analogy, to the statute of limitations." See also Casburne v. Inglis, 2 Jac. & Walk. 194, 196, in note.

§ 1014. These doctrines of Courts of Equity were at first strenuously resisted, and found little public favor, owing to the rigid character of the Common Law, and the sturdy prejudices of its advocates. We are told by Lord Hale, that in the 14th year of Richard II., Parliament would not admit of an equity of redemption;<sup>1</sup> although it seems not long after to have struggled into existence.<sup>2</sup> Even as late as the latter part of the reign of Charles II. the same great Judge was so little satisfied with encouraging an equity of redemption, that, in a case before him for a redemption, he declared, that by the growth of equity on equity the heart of the Common Law is eaten out, and legal settlements are destroyed.<sup>3</sup> And, perhaps, the triumph of common *sense over professional prejudices [*282] has never been more strikingly illustrated, than in the gradual manner, in which Courts of Equity have been enabled to withdraw mortgages from the stern and unrelenting character of conditions at the Common

<sup>3</sup> Ross carrick v. Barton, 1 Ch. Cas. 219. But see Pawlett v. Att. Gen. Hardres, R. 469.—Lord Redesdale, in his Treatise on Equity Pleadings, seems to attribute the jurisdiction of Courts of Equity, in cases of non-redemption of mortgages at the prescribed time, to the head of the accident. "In many cases," (says he,) "as lapse of time, the Courts of Equity will relieve against the consequence of the accident in a Court of Law; Upon this ground they proceed in the common case of a mortgage, where the title of the mortgagee has become absolute at law, upon default of payment of the mortgage money at the time stipulated for payment." But this is quite too narrow a ground, upon which to rest the general jurisdiction. Mitf. Eq. Pl. 130, by Jeremy. A trust, arising from the nature of the contract, as a security, is a broader, and in many cases, a better foundation. See Ante, § 89, and note, where this passage is also cited. See *Lennon v. Law.<sup>1</sup> Even after the equity of redemption was admitted, it was long maintained, that if the money was not paid at the time appointed, the estate became liable in the hands of the mortgagee to his legal charges, to the dower of his wife, and to escheat.<sup>2</sup> And it was a common opinion, that there was no redemption against those, who come in by the post. This introduced mortgages for long terms of years;<sup>3</sup> the nature of which we have already somewhat considered.<sup>4</sup>

§ 1015. Courts of Equity, having thus succeeded in establishing the doctrine, in conformity to common [*283] *sense and common justice, that the mortgage is but a pledge or security for the payment of the debt, or the discharge of the other engagements, for which it was originally given;<sup>5</sup> it yet remained to be determined, what was the true nature and character of the equity of redemption, and of the relations between the mortgagor and mortgagee. It has been well observed, that these were not actually settled, until a comparatively recent period.<sup>6</sup> It was formerly contended, that the mortgagor, after forfeiture of the condition,

had but a mere right to reduce the estate back into his own possession by payment of the debt, or other discharge of the condition. But it is now firmly established, that the mortgagor has an estate in the land in equity, in the nature of a trust estate, which may be granted, devised, and entailed;<sup>1</sup> that this equity of redemption, *if entailed, may be barred by a fine [*284] or recovery; that it is capable of a possessio fratris; and that it is liable to tenancy by the curtesy;<sup>2</sup> but not liable to dower.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1016. In regard to the estate of the mortgagee; it being treated in Equity, as a mere security for the debt, it follows the nature of the debt. And although, where the mortgage is in fee, the legal estate descends to the heir; yet in Equity it is deemed a chattel interest, and personal estate, and

<sup>1</sup> Lord Hale, in Pawlett v. Att. General, Hardres, R. 469, distinguished between a Trust and an Equity of Redemption, as follows. "There is a diversity," says he, "betwixt a trust and a power of redemption; for a trust is created by the contract of the party, and he may direct it, as he pleaseth; and he may provide for the execution of it; and, therefore, one, that comes in in the post, shall not be liable to it, without express mention made by the party. And the rules for executing a trust have often varied; and therefore they only are bound by it, who come in in privity of estate. A tenant in dower is bound by it, because she is in in the per; but not a tenant by the curtesy, who is in the post. So all, who come in in privity of estate, or with notice, or without a consideration. But a power of redemption is an equitable right inherent in the land, and binds all persons in the post, or otherwise. Because it is an ancient right, which the party is entitled to in Equity. And although by the escheat the tenure is extinguished, that will be nothing to the purpose; because the party may be recompensed for that by the Court, by a decree for rent, or part of the land itself, or some other satisfaction. And it is of such consideration in the eye of the law, that the law takes notice of it, and makes it assignable and devisable." S. P. cited 2 Fonbl. Eq. B. 3, ch. 1, § 3.

Lect. 58, p. 159, 160, 164, 165, 166, 3d edit.—The remarks of Mr. Chancellor Kent, in the passage cited, contains a very exact and luminous view of the equitable doctrine on this subject. It is also very fully discussed in Mr. Butler's note (1), to Co. Litt. 208 b. In adopting the rule of considering mortgages to be personal assets, Courts of Equity (as Mr. Butler has well remarked) appear to have been guided by the same reasoning, which, in former times, made Courts of Law consider the estates of tenants by statute merchant, and tenant by statute staple, and by elegit, merely as chattels interest. These, from their uncertain nature, ought to have been considered as freehold ; but, as Mr. Justice Blackstone observes, being a security and remedy provided for personal debts, to which the executor is entitled, the law has, therefore, directed their succession, as judging it reasonable from a principle of natural Equity, that the security and remedy should be vested in them, to whom the debt, if recovered, would belong. Butler's note, Ibid. ; 2 Black. Comm. p. 161, 162 ; Co. Litt. 42, 43. The mortgage is not only considered, as personal estate of the mortgagee ; but the debt is also treated, as the personal debt of the mortgagor ; and, therefore, it is primarily a charge on his personal assets in favor of his heir, his devisee, and other parties standing in a similar predicament. There are exceptions to the doctrine, where the land is treated as the primary fund ; but they stand on special reasons. See Ante, § 562 to 578 ; Co. Litt. 208 b. Butler's note (106) ; Howell v. Price, 1 P. Will. 294, Mr. Cox's note. If a mortgage should happen to be in the disjunctive, payable to the heirs or executors of the mortgagee ; there a payment to either the heir or the executor will discharge it ; and the mortgagor has his election. But if there has been a default of payment at the day, there the mortgage is absolute at law ; and the election is gone, and the money is payable exclusively to the executor. This doctrine was very ably expounded, and the reasons stated in Thornborough v. Baker, 1 Ch. Cas. 283 ; See 2 Fonbl. Eq. B. 2, ch. 1, § 13, and note (e) ; Co. Litt. 209 b, 210 ; Jeremy on Eq. Jurisd. B. 1, ch. 2, § 1, p. 184, 185 ; 2 Powell on Mort. ch. 15, p. 662, 667, and the notes of Coventry and Rand, ibid.

latter.<sup>1</sup> The mortgagee is, however, entitled (unless there be some agreement to the contrary) to enter into possession of the lands, and to take the rents and profits, if he chooses so to do. But in such cases, he must account therefor towards the discharge of the debt, after deducting all reasonable charges and allowances.<sup>2</sup> So, he may grant leases of the premises, and avoid any leases, which have been made by the mortgagor subsequent to his mortgage.<sup>3</sup> Still he is treated so entirely as a trustee, that he cannot exercise any right over the mortgaged property, (such, for example, as the renewal of a lease) for his own benefit; but all acts of this sort done, and all **pro-* [*286] fits made, are deemed to be for the benefit of the party, who is entitled to the estate.<sup>4</sup>

§ 1017. In regard to the mortgagor; he is not, unless there be some special agreement to that effect, entitled of right to the possession of the land mortgaged. But he holds it solely at the will and by the permission of the mortgagee, who may, at any time, by an ejectment, without giving any prior notice, recover the same against him or his tenants. In this respect, the estate of the mortgagor at law is inferior to that of a tenant at will.<sup>5</sup> But so long as he continues in possession by the permission of the mortga-

gee, he is entitled to take the rents and profits in his own right, without any account whatsoever therefor to the mortgagee.<sup>1</sup> Indeed, for most purposes, except where the interest of the mortgagee is concerned, the mortgagor is treated as the substantial owner of the estate.<sup>2</sup> He will not, however, be permitted to do any acts injurious to, or diminishing the security of the mortgagee; and if he should commit, or attempt to commit acts of waste, he will be restrained therefrom by the process of injunction.<sup>3</sup>

[*287] *§ 1018. As to what constitutes a mortgage, there is no difficulty whatever in Courts of Equity, whatever although there may be technical embarrassments in Courts of Law. The particular form or words of the conveyance are unimportant; and it may be laid down as a general rule, subject to few exceptions, that wherever a conveyance, assignment, or other instrument, transferring an estate, is originally intended between the parties as a security for money, or for any other incumbrance, whether this intention appear from the same instrument, or from any other, it is always considered in Equity as a mortgage, and consequently is redeemable upon the performance of the conditions or stipulations thereof.<sup>4</sup> Even parol evidence is admissible in some cases, as in cases of fraud, accident, and mistake, to show, that a conveyance, absolute on its

§ 1019. So inseparable, indeed, is the equity of redemption from a mortgage, that it cannot be disannexed, even by an express agreement of the parties. If, therefore, it should be expressly stipulated, that unless the money should be paid at a particular day, or by or to a particular person, the estate should be irredeemable, the stipulation would be utterly void.<sup>2</sup> In this respect, Courts of Equity act *upon the [*288] same principle, which, (we have seen,) is avowed in the Civil Law;<sup>3</sup> and most probably it has been borrowed from that source. A distinction also is taken, like that in the Civil Law, between a conditional purchase, or an agreement for a repurchase, and a mortgage, properly so called.<sup>4</sup> The former, if clearly and satisfactorily proved to be a real sale, and not a mere transaction to

§ 1020. Mortgages may not only be created by the express deeds and contracts of the parties ; but they may also be implied in Equity, from the nature of the transactions between the parties ; and then they are termed equitable mortgages. Thus, for instance, it is now settled in England, that if the debtor deposits his title-deeds to an estate with a [*289] *creditor, as security for an antecedent debt, or upon a fresh loan of money ; it is a valid agreement for a mortgage between the parties, and is not within the operation of the Statute of Frauds.<sup>2</sup> This doctrine has sometimes been thought difficult to be maintained upon the ground either of principle or of public policy. And although it is firmly established, it has been of late years received with no small hesitation and disapprobation, and a disposition has been strongly evinced, not to enlarge its operation.<sup>3</sup> It is not, therefore, ordinarily applied to enforce parol agreements to make a mortgage, or to make a deposit of title deeds for such a purpose ; but it is strictly confined to an actual, immediate, and bonâ fide departe Hooper, 1 Meriv. R. 9; Ex parte Whitbread, 19 Ves. 209. In Keys v. Williams, 3 Younge & Coll. 55, 61, Lord Abinger said; "The doctrine of equitable mortgages has been said to be an invasion of the Statute of Frauds; and no doubt there was great difficulty in knowing, how to deal with deposits of deeds by way of security after the passing of that statute. But in my opinion, that statute was never meant to affect the transaction of a man borrowing money and depositing his title deeds as a pledge of payment. A court of law could not assist such a party to recover back his title deeds by an action of trover; the answer to such an action being, that the title deeds were pledged for a sum of money, and that, till the money is repaid, the party has no right to them. So, if the party came into equity for relief, he would be told, that before he sought equity he must do equity, by repaying the money in consideration, for which the deeds had been lodged in the other party's hands. The doctrine of equitable mortgages, therefore, appears to have arisen from the necessity of the case. It may, however, in many cases, operate to useful purposes, and is certainly not injurious to commerce. In commercial transactions it may be frequently necessary to raise money on a sudden, before an opportunity can be afforded of investigating the title deeds, and preparing the mortgage. Expediency, therefore, as well as necessity, has contributed to establish the general doctrine, although it may not altogether be in consistency with the statute. The question here is, whether the circumstances, under which these deeds were deposited, lead to any distinction between this case and others, which have been decided on the general doctrine. It has been very ably argued for the defendant, that the circumstance of the deeds having been deposited, not as a present security, but with a view to a future security, gives rise to such a distinction. Certainly, if before the money was advanced the deeds had been deposited with a view to prepare a future mortgage, such transaction could not be considered as an equitable mortgage by deposit. But it is otherwise, where there is a present advance, and the deeds are deposited under a promise to forbear suing, although they may be deposited only for the purpose of preparing a future mortgage. In such case the deeds are given in [as] part of the security, and become pledged from the very nature of the transaction."

fact, that a first mortgagee has left the title deeds in the possession of the mortgagor, without any attendant circumstances of fraud, will not be sufficient to postpone such first mortgagee to a second, who has taken the title deeds with his mortgage, without any notice of the prior mortgage.<sup>1</sup>

[*290] *§ 1021. As to the kinds of property, which may be mortgaged, it may be stated, that, in Equity, whatever property, personal or real, is capable of an absolute sale, may be the subject of a mortgage ; in conformity to the doctrine of the Civil Law; Quod emptionem venditionemque recipit, etiam pignorationem recipere potest.<sup>2</sup> Therefore, rights in remainder and reversion, possibilities coupled with an interest, rents, franchises, and choses in action, are capable of being mortgaged. But a mere naked possibility or expectancy, such as that of an heir, is not.<sup>3</sup> In this respect the Civil Law seems to differ from ours ; for a party might by that law mortgage property, to which he had no present title by contract or otherwise.<sup>4</sup>

mortgaging an estate, nothing need be said in this place, except so far as regards persons, who have qualified interests therein; or are trustees in autre droit; or are clothed with particular powers for limited purposes. And, here, very difficult questions may arise, as to the construction of such powers, and the competency of such persons to make mortgages. Thus, for example, if a power is given to trustees to sell for the purpose of raising money, a question may arise, whether they may raise the money by way of mortgage. But the solution of *such questions properly belongs to a treatise [*291] on Powers.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1023. As to the right of redemption. From what has been already stated, it is clear, that the equity of redemption is not only a subsisting estate and interest in the land in the hands of the heirs, devisees, assignees, and representatives (strictly so called) of the mortgagor; but it may also be asserted by any other persons, who have acquired any interest in the lands mortgaged by operation of law, or otherwise, in privity of title.<sup>2</sup> Such persons have a clear right to disengage the property from all incumbrances, in order to make their own claims beneficial or available. Hence a tenant for life, a tenant by the curtesy, a jointress, a tenant in dower in some cases,<sup>3</sup> a reversioner, a remainderman, a judgment creditor, a tenant by elegit, and, indeed, every other person, being an incumbrancer, or having a legal or equitable title, or lien therein, may insist upon a redemption of the mortgage, in order to the due enforcement of their respective claims and interests in the land.<sup>1</sup> When any such [*292] person *does so redeem, he becomes substituted to the rights and interests of the original mortgagee in the land, exactly as in the Civil Law. And in some cases (as we have already seen) a farther right of priority by tacking may sometimes be acquired, beyond what the Civil Law allowed.<sup>2</sup> But no person, except a mortgagor, his heirs or privies in estate, has a right

The ground of this doctrine is, that he, who seeks Equity, must do Equity; and a Court of Equity will not assist any person in depriving a mortgagee of any security, which he would have against the mortgagor. § 1024. As to the correspondent right of foreclosure, and other remedies for the mortgagee, to secure the due discharge of the mortgage; they naturally flow from the principles already stated. We have already seen,<sup>2</sup> that, in the Civil Law, there were two remedies allowed to the mortgagee, a remedy in rem, and also a remedy in personam against the mortgagor for the debt. The general remedy in rem was by a sale by the mortgagee of the mortgaged estate, either under a *judicial decree, or without such a decree, by his [*293] own voluntary act of sale, after a certain fixed notice to the debtor. In either case, the sale, if bonâ fide

<sup>1</sup> White v. Parnther, 1 Knapp's R. 229; Troughton v. Binkes, 6 Ves. 572. Lord Wynford, in delivering the opinion of the Court, in White v. Parnther, 1 Knapp, 229, said; "But it has been said, that, as the mortgagee has within twenty years acknowledged the existence of the mortgage, the mortgagor has, on account of such acknowledgment, a right to sue for the redemption of the estate; and that this annuitant, whose claim is against the equity of redemption, has a right, as the mortgagor does to object to it, to claim through his side against the mortgagee. If so, every legatee of the mortgagor must have the same right of insisting, that the mortgage debt is satisfied, and of calling on the mortgagee to give him an account of the proceeds of the estate from the time of the death of the mortgagor, a period of above fifty years. If creditors or legatees of the mortgagor had the right of calling mortgagees to separate accounts, every mortgagee would be liable to be ruined by the different suits, that might be instituted against him. But from the principle laid down in the case of Troughton v. Binkes, (6 Vesey, 572) and the cases referred to by the Master of the Rolls in his judgment in that case, I think, that the mortgagor or his heirs only can sue the mortgagee for an account and redemption, unless it can be shown, that they and the mortgagee are in collusion to prevent creditors or legatees from recovering what is due to them from the mortgagor's property."

and regularly made, was valid to pass the absolute title to the estate against the mortgagor and his heirs; and the proceeds were first to be applied to the discharge of the debt; and the surplus, if any, was to be paid over to the mortgagor or his representatives. This seems to have been the ordinary course in the Civil Law, in order to obtain satisfaction of the debt out of the mortgaged estate. But in some cases, and especially where a sale could not be made effectual, a decree might be obtained, in the nature of a foreclosure, by which, after certain judicial proceedings, the absolute dominion of the property would be passed to the mortgagee.<sup>1</sup> This was probably the origin of the present mode of extinguishing the rights of the mortgagor by a decree of foreclosure in a Court of Equity.

§ 1025. The natural course, and certainly the most convenient and beneficial course for the mortgagor, would seem to be, for the Court to follow out the Civil Law rules on this subject;<sup>2</sup> that is to say, primarily and ordinarily to direct a sale of the mortgaged property, giving the debtor any surplus after discharging the [*294] *mortgage debt; and secondarily, to apply the remedy of foreclosure only to special cases, where the former remedy would not apply, or might be inadequate or injurious to the interests of the parties. This course

<sup>2</sup> In most, if not all cases, it would be equally beneficial to the mortgagee; as it would prevent the delays incident to the common decree of foreclosure, which is liable to be reopened; and would also prevent any difficulty in obtaining the residue of the debt, when the mortgaged property is not sufficient to discharge it. has accordingly been adopted in many of the American Courts of Equity; and it is also the prevailing practice in Ireland. It is done without any distinction, whether there is a power to sell contained in the mortgage, or not.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1026. In England a practice widely different has prevailed. A bill for a foreclosure is deemed, in common cases, the exclusive and appropriate remedy; and the Courts of Equity there refuse, except in special cases, to decree a compulsory sale against the will of the mortgagor. These Courts, however, have departed from this general rule, in certain cases; (1.) where the estate is deficient to pay the incumbrance;<sup>2</sup> (2.) where the mortgagor is dead, and there is a deficiency of personal assets;<sup>3</sup> (3.) where the mortgage is of a dry reversion;<sup>4</sup> (4.) where the mortgagor dies, and the estate descends to an infant;<sup>5</sup> (5.) where the mortgage is of an ad-vowson;<sup>6</sup> (6.) where the mortgagor becomes [*295]

§ 1027. It is difficult to perceive any solid or distinct ground, upon which these exceptions stand, which would not justify the Courts of Equity in England in decreeing a sale at all times, when it is prayed for by the mortgagee, or when it would be beneficial to the mortgagor. The inconveniences of the existing practice of foreclosure in that country are so great, that it has become a common practice to insert in mortgages a power of sale upon default of payment. And although Lord Eldon, at first, intimated an opinion unfavorable to such a power, as dangerous, it is now firmly established.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1028. mischiefs, as well as to ascertain the amounts and proportions, in which they should contribute towards *the discharge of the incumbrances common to [*296] them all. This subject, in many of its most important bearings, has already been examined in other places.<sup>1</sup> Similar principles prevailed, (as we have seen,) to a great extent, in the Civil Law, in which the right of substitution was admitted, as well as what was technically called the benefit of discussion, answering, in some measure, to our doctrine of marshalling assets and securities.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1028. a. In respect to the time, within which a mortgage is redeemable, it may be remarked, that the ordinary limitation is twenty years from the time, when the mortgagee has entered into possession, after breach of the condition, under his title, by analogy to the ordinary limitation of rights of entry and actions of ejectment.<sup>3</sup> If, therefore, the mortgagee enters into possession in his character of mortgagee, and by virtue of his mortgage alone, he is for twenty years liable to account; and if payment be tendered to him he is liable to become a trustee of the mortgagor, and to be treated as such. But, if the mortgagor permits the mortgagee to hold the possession for twenty years without accounting, or without admitting, that he possesses a mortgage title only, the mortgagor loses his right of redemption, and the title of the mortgagee becomes as absolute in Equity, as it previously was in law. In such a case the time begins to run against the mortgagor from the moment the mortgagee takes possession in his character, as such ; and if it has once begun to run and no subsequent admission is made by the mortgagee, it continues to run against all persons, claiming under the mortgagor, whatever may be the disabilities, to which they may be subjected.<sup>1</sup> But, if the mortgagee enters, not in his character of mortgagee only, but as purchaser of the Equity of redemption, he must look to the title of his vendor and the validity of the conveyance, which he takes. So that, if the conveyance be such, as gives him the estate of a tenant for life only in the Equity of redemption, there, as he unites in himself the characters of mortgagor and mortgagee, he is bound to keep down the interest of the mortgage like any other tenant for life for the benefit of the persons entitled to the remainder; and time will not run against the remainderman during the continuance of the life estate.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1028. b. Similar consideration will in many respects apply to the right of foreclosure of a mortgagee. If he has suffered the mortgagor to remain in possession for twenty years after the breach of the condition, without any payment of interest, or admission of the debt, or other duty, the right to file a bill for a foreclosure will generally be deemed to be barred and extinguished.<sup>3</sup> However; in cases of this sort, as the bar is not positive, but is founded on a presumption of payment, it is open to be rebutted by circumstances.<sup>4</sup>

§ 1029. These may suffice as illustrations of some of the more important doctrines of Courts of Equity in regard to mortgages of lands, many of which are founded upon principles of justice so universal, as equally to commend themselves to the approbation of a Roman Prætor, and of a modern Judge, administering the law of continental Europe ex equo et bono.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1030. Let us now pass to a brief consideration of the doctrines of Equity applicable to mortgages and pledges of personal property. A mortgage of personal property differs from a pledge. The former is a conditional transfer or conveyance of the property itself; and, if the condition is not duly performed, the whole title vests absolutely at law in the mortgagee, exactly as it does in the case of a mortgage of lands. The latter only passes the possession, or, at most, a special property only to the pledgee, with a right of retainer, until the debt is paid, or the other engagement is fulfilled.<sup>2</sup> The *difference between them was well [*297] stated by a learned Judge, in a comparatively recent case. "A mortgage is a pledge and more; for it is an absolute pledge to become an absolute interest, if not redeemed at a certain time. A pledge is a deposit of personal effects, not to be taken back, but on payment of a certain sum, by express stipulation, or the course of trade, to be a lien upon them."<sup>3</sup>

§ 1031. In mortgages of personal property, although the prescribed condition has not been fulfilled, there exists, as in mortgages of land, an equity of redemption, which may be asserted by the mortgagor, if he brings his bill to redeem within a reasonable time.<sup>1</sup> There is, however, a difference between mortgages of land and mortgages of personal property, in regard to the rights of the mortgagee after a breach of the condition. In the latter case, there is no necessity to bring a bill of foreclosure; but the mortgagee, upon due notice, may sell the personal property mortgaged, as he could under the Civil Law; and the title, if the sale be bonâ fide made, will vest absolutely in the vendee.<sup>2</sup> And it makes no difference, whether the personal property [*298] * mortgaged consists of goods, or of stock, or of personal annuities.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1032. In cases of pledges, if a time for the redemption be fixed by the contract, still the pledgor may redeem afterwards, if he applies within a reasonable time. But if no time is fixed for the payment, the pledgor has his whole life to redeem, unless he is called upon to redeem by the pledgee; and, in case of the death of the pledgor without such a demand, his personal representatives may redeem.<sup>4</sup>

Generally speaking, a bill in Equity to redeem will not lie on the behalf of the pledgor or his representatives, as his remedy upon a tender is at law. But if any special ground is shown, as if an account or discovery is wanted, or there has been an assignment of the pledge, a bill will lie.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1033. On the other hand, the pledgee might, according to Glanville, at any time bring a suit at the Common Law to compel the pledgor to redeem by a given day; and, if he did not then redeem, he was for ever foreclosed of his right.<sup>2</sup> But the course now adopted is to bring a bill in Equity to foreclose, and sell the pledge; in which case an absolute title passes to the vendee.<sup>3</sup> It has been also said, that *the pledgee may, after the time for redemption [*299] has passed, upon due notice given to the pledgor, sell the pledge without a judicial decree of sale.<sup>4</sup>

The doctrine, that the pledgee has a right to sell the pledge absolutely, after due notice to the pledgor, is so frequently stated, that it is laid down in the text as clear law. The cases, however, in which it has been asserted, are generally cases of mortgages of personal property, and not of mere pledges, strictly so called. Whether there is any substantial distinction between the cases, is left for the consideration of the learned reader. None has as yet been taken in Courts of Equity, as to this point. In Pothonier v. Dawson, Holt's N. P. Rep. 385, (which was the case of a pledge sold,) Lord Chief

§ 1034. There is another consideration applicable to cases of mortgages and pledges of personal property, which does not apply, or, at least, is not as cogent, in cases of mortgages of land. The latter passes by formal conveyances; the former may be transferred by the mere change of possession. A subsequent advance made by a mortgagee or a pledgee of chattels would attach by tacking to the property in favor of such mortgagee, when a like tacking might not be allowed in cases of real estate. Thus, for instance, in the case [*300] of a mortgage of *real estate, the mortgagee cannot, as we have seen, compel the mortgagor, upon an application to redeem, to pay any debts subsequently contracted by him, or advances made to him by the mortgagee, unless such new debts or advances are distinctly agreed to be made on the security of the mortgaged property.<sup>1</sup> But in the case of a mortgage or pledge of chattels, the general rule, or at least the general presumption, seems the other way. For it has been held, that, in such a case, without any dis-

Justice Gibbs said; "Undoubtedly, as a general proposition, a right of lien gives no right to sell the goods. But when goods are deposited by way of security, to indemnify a party against a loan of money, it is more than a pledge. The lender's rights are more extensive, than such as accrue under an ordinary lien in the way of trade. These goods were deposited to secure a loan. It may be inferred, therefore, that the contract was this. If I, the borrower, repay the money, you must redeliver the goods. But if I fail to repay it, you may use the security I have left to repay yourself. I think, therefore, the defendant had a right to sell." There is certainly much sound sense to commend itself in this interpretation of the contract of pledge in such a case.

tinct proof of a contract for that purpose, the pledge may be held, until the subsequent debt or advance is paid, as well as the original debt. The ground of this distinction is, that he, who seeks Equity, must do Equity; and the plaintiff, seeking the assistance of the Court, ought to pay all the moneys due to the creditor, as it is natural to presume, that the pledgee would not have lent the new sum, but on the credit of the pledge, which he had in his hands before.<sup>1</sup> The presumption may, indeed, be rebutted by circumstances; but, unless it is rebutted, it will generally, in favor of the lien, stand for verity against the pledgor himself, although not against his creditors, or against subsequent purchasers.<sup>2</sup>

*§ 1035. It is not improbable, that this doctrine, respecting mortgages and pledges of chattels being held security for subsequent debts and advances, as borrowed from the Civil Law, although it is applied with some modifications in the Equity Jurisprudence of England. In the Civil Law, (as we have already seen,) the mortgagor or pledgor could not redeem, without discharging all the other debts, which he then owed to the pledgee; with a saving, however, in favor of the rights of other creditors and purchasers.<sup>3</sup>

CHAPTER XXVIII.

ASSIGNMENTS.

§ 1036. IN the next place, let us pass to the consideration of ASSIGNMENTS of real and personal property upon special trusts. The most important and extensive of this class of trusts is that, which embraces general assignments by insolvents and other debtors for the discharge of their debts, sometimes with priorities and preferences of particular creditors, and sometimes with an equality of rights among all the creditors. The question of the validity of such conveyances, and under what circumstances they are deemed fraudulent, or bonâ fide, has been already, in some measure, considered under the head of constructive fraud.<sup>1</sup> In general, it may be stated, that such priorities and preferences are not deemed fraudulent or inequitable; and even a stipulation, on the part of the debtor, in such an assignment, that the creditors, taking under it, shall release and discharge him from all their further claims beyond the property assigned, will (it seems) be valid, and binding on such creditors.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1036. b. It is proper to add, that in all such cases of general assignments, voluntarily made by the debtor for the benefit of creditors, whether they are specially named in the instrument, or only by a general description, if such creditors are not parties thereto, and have not executed the same, the assignment is deemed in equity, as well as at law, to be revocable by the debtor, at least, unless as to creditors, who have assented to the trust, and given notice thereof to the assignee. For until such assent and notice the assignment is treated, as between the debtor and the assignee, as merely directing the mode, in which the assignee shall and may apply the debtor's property for his own benefit.<sup>4</sup>

§ 1037. The trusts, arising under general assignments for the benefit of creditors, are, in a peculiar sense, the objects of Equity jurisdiction. For, although at law there may, under some circumstances, be a remedy for the creditors to enforce the trusts, that remedy must be very inadequate, as a measure of full relief. On the other hand, Courts of Equity, by their power of enforcing a discovery and account from the trustees, and of making all the creditors, as well as the debtor, parties to the suit, can administer entire justice, and distribute the whole funds in their proper order among all the claimants, upon the application of any of them,<sup>1</sup> either on his own behalf or on behalf of himself and all the other creditors. This remedy is ordinarily resorted to by the Government in order to enforce its own right of priority and preference in payment of the debts due to it against the assignees.<sup>2</sup> Sureties on custom-house bonds, paid by them, are also

A question has arisen under such assignments, whether they take effect from the moment of their execution, and before the creditors have assented thereto, or only from the time of such assent. It has been decided, that they take effect from the time of their execution, upon the ground, that, being for the benefit of creditors, their assent is presumed, until the contrary is shown. See Marbury v. Brooks, 7 Wheat. R. 556; 11 Wheat. R. 78; Smith v. Wheeler, 1 Vent. 128; Small v. Marwood, 9 B. & Cres. 300; Nicoll v. Mumford, 4 John. Ch. R. 529, Ante, § 972. A question has also been made, whether such an assignment was operative, unless all the trustees should assent thereto. But it has been decided, that, unless the contrary is provided for in the assignment, the assignment is good, and vests the property in the assenting trustees, although the other trustees do not assent. Ibid.; *Neilson v. § 1038. It may also be necessary, in many cases, for the purposes of a due distribution, to order a sale of the property ; to take an account of, and to adjust the conflicting claims of different creditors ; to direct the order of preferences and payment of the various debts according to their respective priorities ; and to marshal the various funds, on which particular creditors may have a lien, so as to secure a due *pro- [*304] portion of the assets to each creditor, according to his particular rights.<sup>2</sup> For all these purposes, (and others might be mentioned,) Courts of Equity are the only tribunals competent to afford suitable means of relief. And where trusts are created by general assignments in favor of creditors, with or without any limitation as to the time of their assent thereto, Courts of Equity will, upon a suitable application, require the creditors within a reasonable time to come in and signify their assent ; or otherwise they will be excluded from all the benefit of the trusts.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1039. In regard to particular assignments upon special trusts, there is little to be said, which is not equally applicable to all cases of jurisdiction exercised over general trusts. But Courts of Equity take notice of assignments of property, and enforce the rights growing out of the same in many cases, where such assignments are not recognised at law, as valid or effectual to pass titles. It is a well known rule of the Common Law, that no possibility, right, title, or thing in action, can be granted to third persons.<sup>1</sup> For it was thought, that a different rule would be the occasion of multiplying contentions and suits, as it would, in effect, be transferring a lawsuit to a mere stranger.<sup>2</sup> Hence, a debt, or other choses in action, could not be transferred by assignment, except in case of the King; to whom and by whom at the common law an assignment of a chose in action could always be made; for the policy of the rule was not supposed to apply to the King.<sup>3</sup> So strictly was this doctrine construed, that it was even doubted, whether an annuity [*305] was assignable, *although assigns were mentioned in the deed creating it.<sup>4</sup> And at law, with the exception of negotiable instruments, and some few other securities, this still continues to be the general rule, unless the debtor assents to the transfer; but if he does assent, then the right of the assignee is complete at law, so event has happened, the party contracting to buy has nothing but the contingency, which is a very different thing from the right immediately to recover and enjoy the property. He has not, strictly speaking, a jus ad rem, any more than a jus in re. It is not an interest in the property; but a mere right under the contract.<sup>1</sup> Indeed, the same effect takes place in such cases, if there be an actual assignment; for in contemplation of Equity it amounts not to an assignment of a present interest, but only to a contract to assign, when the interest becomes vested.<sup>2</sup> Therefore, a contingent legacy, which is to vest upon some future event, such as the legatee's coming of age, may become the subject of an assignment or a contract of sale. So, even the naked possibility or expectancy of an heir to his ancestor's estate may become the subject of a contract of sale or settlement; and in such a case, if bonâ fide made for a valuable consideration, it will be enforced in equity after the death of the ancestor, not indeed as a trust attaching to the estate; but as a right of contract.<sup>3</sup>

Newland*, and Hobson v. Trevor, were referred to by Lord Hardwicke as conclusive upon the point. It is observable, that Lord Kenyon, C.J. in the case of Jones v. Roe, 3 Term. Rep. 88, put the case of an heir, dealing in respect of his hope of succession, as a void contract; it being a bare possibility, and not the subject of a disposition during the life of the ancestor; from which it may be inferred, that damages could not be recovered at law for non-performance of such a contract; and yet it appears, from the above cases of Beckley v. Newland, and Hobson v. Trevor, that such a contract would be decreed in equity, if for a valuable consideration. This, therefore, may be considered as an instance, in which a court of equity will decree the specific performance of a contract, though damages could not be recovered at law for the non-performance of it." 1 Fonbl. Eq. B. 1, ch. 4, § 2, note (h); Ante, § 1021. Of the doctrine stated in the text, some doubt may perhaps even now be entertained; for it has been held by very able Judges, that the expectancy of an heir, presumptive or apparent, is not an interest or a possibility capable of being made the subject of an assignment or contract. Carlton v. Leighton, 3 Meriv. R. 671, 672; Jones v. Roe, 3 T. Rep. 93; Harwood v. Tooke, cited 1 Madd. Ch. Pract. 437; S. C. 2 Sim. R. 192. The language, however of both of these cases seems susceptible of an interpretation consistent with the text, if we suppose the learned Judges were referring to a contract or assignment, operating to convey an interest in presenti. Indeed, the language of Lord Eldon in Carleton v. Leighton, 3 Meriv. R. 667, 672, seems to admit, that a covenant to convey the expectancy of an heir might be good by way of contract to be enforced, when the estate descended to the heir; for in reference to Beckley v. Newland, 2 P. Will. 182, and Hobson v. Trevor, 2 P. Will. 191, he said; "that the cases cited were cases of covenant to settle or assign property, which should fall to the covenantor, where the interest, which passed by the covenant, was not an interest in the land, but a right under the contract." The same doctrine, as to the obligatory force of such a contract was fully recognised in Wethered v. Wethered, 2 Sim. 183; Ante, § 1021.

But military prize money, although resting in the mere bounty of the crown, is held to be different in its nature and objects from military pay, and treated as a right of property, rather than as a personal pension or reward. Alexander v. Duke of Wellington, 2 Russ. & Mylne, 35; Stevens v. Bagwell, 15 Ves. 139, 152. In this last case the Master of the Rolls (Sir William Grant) said—"The capture of the fort at Chinsurah, in July, 1781, was made by The Nymph sloop of war, commanded by Lieutenant Stevens, under the orders of Sir Edward Hughes, and by a detachment of the East India Company's forces. If the captured effects had, after the death of Lieutenant Stevens, been condemned as prize to the captors, there can be no doubt, that his share file a bill in equity for a fraud, committed upon the assignor, will be held void as contrary to public policy, and as savoring of the character of maintenance, of which we shall presently speak.<sup>1</sup> So a mere right of action for a tort is not for the like reason assignable.<sup>2</sup> Indeed, it has been laid down as a general rule, that, where an equitable interest is assigned, in order to give the assignee a locus standi in judicio in a Court of Equity, the party assigning such right must have some sub-

would have passed by his will; as, though the property was not completely vested in the captors until condemnation, yet after condemnation it is by relation considered as theirs from the time of the capture. The captured effects being condemned to the Crown, no right to any part of the produce can accrue to any one, except by the gift of the Crown; and, as Lieutenant Stevens died before any gift was made, his will could have no direct operation upon the subject of that gift. But the intention of the Crown, in all cases of this kind, is to put what is in strictness matter of bounty upon the footing of matter of right. The service performed is thought worthy of reward; and though the party performing it died before payment, the claim of bounty from the Crown is considered as transmissible to his representatives, in the same plight and condition as the claim for wages, or any other stipulated or legal remuneration of service. In such cases, the Crown never means to exercise any kind of judgment or selection with regard to the persons to be ultimately benefited by the gift. The representatives, to whom the Crown gives are those, who legally sustain that character. But the gift is made in augmentation of the estate, not by way of personal bounty to them. They take, subject to the same trusts, upon which they would have taken wages or prize money, to which the party, from whom they claim, might have been legally entitled." Lord Brougham, in the former case said; "Reference has been made to the case of Stevens v. Bagwell, (15 Ves. 139,) where that, which was a matter of bounty, is put upon the footing of a right. So far to be sure as the question regards the transmission of the right from the grantee, after it has once vested in him, he may sell or assign the bounty; he may transmit it to his heir, or sue for it, and say it has become a matter of right, and is no longer bounty. But is there a shadow of pretence for asserting, that, as against the crown, or against trustees standing in the place of the crown, prize is a matter of right and not of bounty? Such a decision will be sought for in vain."

<sup>1</sup> Prosser v. Edmonds, 1 Younge & Coll. 481, 496, 497, 498, 499. In this case Lord Abinger examined the doctrine at large and said; "With respect to the question as to the validity of an assignment of a right to file a bill in equity, I must distinguish between this sort of case and the assignment of a chose in action or equity of redemption. It may be said that the assignment of a mortgaged estate is nothing more than an assignment of a right to file a bill in equity. But the equity of redemption arises out of an interest, though only a partial interest. Courts of law and equity treat the mortgage as a mere security, and there is an interest left in the mortgagor, which he may assign. But, in a case where a party assigns his whole estate, and afterwards makes an assignment generally of the same estate to another person, and the second assignee claims to set aside the first assignment as fraudulent and void, the assignor himself making no complaint of fraud whatever, it appears to me, that the right of the second assignee to make such a claim would be a question deserving of great consideration. My present impression is, that such a claim could not be sustained in equity, unless the party, who made the assignment, joined in the prayer to set it aside. In such a case a second assignment is merely that of a right to file a bill in equity for a fraud; and I should say, that some authority is necessary to shew, that a man can assign to another a right to file a bill for a fraud committed upon himself." And again; "The remaining cause of demurrer namely, that the plaintiffs have no right to equitable relief, raises an important and curious question, which is this—whether or not parties, who either become purchasers for a valuable consideration, or who take an assignment in trust of a mere naked right to file a bill in equity, shall be entitled to become plaintiffs in equity in respect of the title so acquired. Now, in the course of the argument, it was urged, that an equitable as well as a legal interest may be the subject of conveyance, and that the assignee of a chose in action may file a bill in equity to recover it, though he cannot proceed at law for that purpose. But where an equitable interest is assigned, it appears to me, that in order to give the assignee a locus standi in a Court of equity, the party assigning that right must have some substantial possession, some capability of personal enjoyment, and not a mere naked right to overset a legal instrument. For instance, that a mortgagor, who conveys his estate in fee to a mortgagee, has in himself an equitable right to compel a re-conveyance, when the mortgage-money is paid, is true. But that is a right reserved to himself by the original security; it is a right coupled with possession and receipt of rent; and he is protected so long as the interest is paid; and it does not follow, that the assignee of the mortgage and the mortgagee may not adjust their rights without the intervention of a Court of Equity. In the present case, it is impossible, that the assignee can obtain any benefit from his security, except through the medium of the Court. He purchases nothing but a hostile right to bring parties into a Court of Equity, as defendants to a bill filed for the purpose of obtaining the fruits of his purchase. So, where a person takes an assignment of a bond, he has the possession; and, though a Court of Equity will permit him to file a bill on the bond, it does not follow, that he is obliged to go into a Court of Equity to enforce payment of it. So, other cases might be stated to shew, that where equity recognises the assignment of an equitable interest, it is such an interest as is recognised also by third persons, and not merely by the party insisting on them. What is this but the purchase of a mere right to recover? It is a rule—not of our law alone, but of that of all countries, (see Voet. Comm. ad Pandect. Lib. 41, tit. 1, sect. 38,) that the mere right of purchase shall not give a man a right to legal remedies. The contrary doctrine is nowhere tolerated, and is against good policy. All our cases of maintenance and champerty are founded on the principle, that no encouragement should be given to litigation by the introduction of parties to enforce those rights, which others are not disposed to enforce. There are many cases, where the acts charged may not amount precisely to maintenance or champerty, yet of which upon general principles, and by analogy to such acts, a Court of Equity will discourage the practice. Mr. Girdlestone was so obliging as to furnish me with a case, that of Wood v. Downes, (18 Ves. 120,) in which it appears to me, that the principle laid down by Lord Eldon goes the full length of supporting the judgment of allowing this demurrer. That was a bill filed to set aside certain conveyances, which it was alleged were obtained by the defendant, in consequence of his situation of solicitor to the plaintiffs, the estate comprised in the conveyance not being in their possession at the time, but subject to litigation. Lord Eldon, in decreeing relief, adopted not only the ground, that the party was the solicitor of the plaintiffs, but that the transaction was contrary to good policy. He said—"The objection, therefore, is not merely that, which flows out of the relation of attorney and client, but upon the fact, that this was the purchase of a title in litigation, with reference to the law of maintenance and champerty;" and he accordingly decreed the conveyance to be set aside, on the ground of litigated title. Here the proceeding is the converse of that in Wood v. Downes. It is not to set aside the conveyance in question, but to establish it. The principle is the same in both cases; for if, under the present circumstances, Robert Todd had filed his bill against the plaintiffs, I

Equity, may be very familiarly shown by a few illustrations, derived from cases of bailments and consignments. In the common case, where money or other property is delivered by a bailor to B. for the use of C., or to be delivered to C., the acceptance of the bailment [*307] amounts to an express promise from the bailee to the bailor, to deliver or pay over the property accordingly. In such a case, it has been said, that the person, for whose use the money or property is so delivered, may maintain an action at law therefor against the bailee, without any further act or assent should have declared it to be a void deed, and should have ordered it to be set aside. Upon the same facts, therefore, I ought to refuse to establish the deed in their favor. But the case does not rest here. There is a short but useful statute, which it is proper to refer to, that of the 32 of Hen. 8, c. 9, which is a legislative rule on the subject, and consistent with general policy and the principles of Courts of law and equity. Under the statute, if the person who parts with his title has not been in actual possession of the land within a year before the sale, he, as well as the buyer, is liable to the penal consequences of the act. I do not say, that that is precisely the case here, because the conveyance purports to contain an ulterior trust for the party assigning, and, therefore, an action could not be brought against him on the statute. At the same time, it is to be observed, that, from many cases in Anderson and Coke, it appears, that Courts of common law were favorable to actions on the statute, considering them to be highly beneficial, and not without good cause to be restrained. It has been the opinion of some learned persons, that the old rule of law, that a chose in action is not assignable, was founded on the principle of the law not permitting a sale of a right to litigate. That opinion is to be met with in Sir William Blackstone and the earlier reporters. Courts of Equity, it is true, have relaxed that rule, but only in the cases, which I have mentioned, where something more than a mere right to litigate has been assigned. Where a valuable consideration has passed, and the party is put in possession of that, which he might acquire without litigation, there Courts of Equity will allow the assignee to stand in the right of assignor. This is not that case. Robert Todd, when he assigned, was in possession of nothing but a mere naked right. He could obtain nothing without filing a bill. No case can be found, which decides, that such a right can be the subject of assignment, either at law or in equity." Post, § 1048, note (3).

on the part of the bailee; for a privity is created between them by the original undertaking.<sup>1</sup> But of this doctrine some doubt may perhaps be entertained, unless there is some act done by the bailee, or some promise made by him, whereby he shall directly contract an obligation to such person to deliver the money or other property over to him; otherwise it would seem, that the only contract would be between the bailor and his immediate bailee.<sup>2</sup> But be this as it may, it is certain, that a remedy would lie in Equity under the like circumstances, as a matter of trust; for it is laid down in a work of very high authority, "If a man gives goods or chattels to another

See ante, § 972, § 1036, (b); Post, 1196.—There is certainly some confusion in the cases in the books on this subject. Lord Alvanley, in Pigott v. Thompson, 3 Bos. & Pull. 149, seems to have thought, that if A. lets land to B. in consideration of which B. promises to pay the rent to C., the latter may maintain an action on that promise. But he said that his brothers thought differently. So in Marchington v. Vernon, cited in 1 Bos. & Pull. 101, note, Mr. Justice Buller, is reputed to have said, that if one person makes a promise to another for the benefit of a third, that third may maintain an action upon it. Probably it will be found, upon a thorough examination of the cases, that the true principle, on which they have proceeded, is, that where the promise is construed to be made to A., for the use or benefit of B., A. alone can maintain an action thereon. But, if there is promise in general terms, which may be construed to be made to B. through A., there, B. may maintain an action thereon. The cases of Williams v. Everett, 14 East, 582, and Tiernan v. Jackson, 5 Peters, R. 597, 601, contain the fullest expositions of the doctrine. See also the Reporter's learned note (a), to *Pigott v. § 1042. But if a remittance be made of a bill to a bailee to collect the amount, and also to pay the proceeds, or a part thereof, to certain enumerated creditors; there, it has been held, that the mere receipt of the bill, and even the collecting of the contents, will not necessarily amount to such an appropriation of the money to the use of the creditors, as that they can maintain a suit at law for the same, if there are circumstances in the case, which repel the presumption, that the bailee agreed to receive, and did receive the money for the use of the creditors.<sup>2</sup> For, until such assent, express or implied, no action lies at law, any more than it would lie against a debtor without such assent, if a debt were assigned by a creditor, in favor of the assignee.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1044. But in cases of this sort, the transaction will have a very different operation in Equity. Thus, for instance, if A., having a debt due to him from B., should order it to be paid to C., the order would amount in Equity to an assignment of the debt, and would be enforced in Equity, although the debtor had not assented thereto.<sup>2</sup> The same principle would apply to the case of an assignment of a part of such debt.<sup>3</sup> In each case, a trust would be * created in favor of the equitable assignee on [*309] the fund, and would constitute an equitable lien upon it.

§ 1045. In regard to the other class of cases, above suggested, viz. those, where the question may arise of an absolute appropriation of the proceeds of an assignment or remittance, directed to be paid to particular creditors, Courts of Equity, like Courts of Law, will not deem the appropriation to the creditors absolute, until the creditors have notice thereof, and have assented thereto. other appropriation made by the consignor or remitter of the proceeds.<sup>1</sup> The true test, whether an absolute appropriation is made or not, depends upon the point, at whose risk the property is; and, until the creditor has consented, the property will clearly be at the risk of the assignor or remitter.<sup>2</sup> But if, upon notice, the creditors should assent thereto, and no intermediate revocation should have been made by the assignor or remitter; there, in Equity, the assignee or mandatary will be held a trustee for the creditors, and they may maintain a bill to enforce a due performance of the trust. For, although the assignee or mandatary has a perfect right, in such a case, to refuse the trust; yet he cannot act under the mandate, and receive the proceeds, and hold them discharged from the trust, thus created, and still subsisting between the mandator and the creditors.<sup>3</sup> The property comes to his hands clothed with the trust, [*310] *by the act of parties competent to create and establish it; and his assent is in no just sense necessary to give validity to it in Equity. If, at the time of such assignment or remittance, the very arrangement and appropriation of the proceeds had been actually made between the assignor or remitter and the creditors, it would clearly bind the proceeds in the hands of the assignee or mandatary, subject

§ 1046. It is true, that, in every case, where a consignment or remittance is made, with orders to pay over the proceeds to a third person, the appropriation is not absolute; for it amounts to no more, than a mandate from a principal to his agent, which can give no right or interest to a third person in the subject of the mandate. It may be revoked at any time before it is executed, or at least, before any engagement is entered into by the mandatary with the third person, to execute it for his benefit; and it will be revoked by any prior disposition of the property inconsistent with such execution.<sup>3</sup> But if no revocation is made, and the mandate continues in full force, the trust, as such, continues for the benefit of such third person, who, after his assent thereto, notified to the mandatary, may avail himself of it in Equity, without any reference to the assent or dissent *of the mandatary, upon such notice; for [*311] his receipt of the property binds him to follow the orders of his principal.<sup>4</sup>

vor of C., for a valuable consideration, amounts (as we have seen) to a valid assignment of so much of the funds of A. in the hands of B.<sup>1</sup> So, indorsing and delivering a bond to an assignee for a valuable consideration, amounts to an assignment of the bond.<sup>2</sup> Indeed any order, writing or act, which makes an appropriation of a fund amounts to an equitable assignment of that fund. The reason is, that the fund being matter assignable at Law, nor capable of manual possession, an appropriation of it is all that the nature of the case admits of, and therefore it is held good in equity.<sup>3</sup> An assignment of a debt may be by parol, as well as by deed.<sup>4</sup> As the assignee is generally entitled to all the remedies of the assignor; so he is generally subject to all the equities between the assignor and his debtor.<sup>5</sup> But in order to perfect his title against the debtor it is indispensable that the assignee should immediately give notice of the assignment to the debtor, for otherwise a priority of right may be obtained by a subsequent assignee, or the debt be discharged by a payment to the assignor before such notice.<sup>6</sup>

the doctrine of champerty and maintenance; and therefore it may be here proper to glance at this important topic. Champerty (Campi partitio) is properly a bargain between a plaintiff or defendant in a cause campum partire, to divide the land, or other matter sued for between them, if they prevail at law; whereupon the champertor is to carry on *the [*312] party's suit at his own expense.<sup>1</sup> Maintenance (of which champerty is a species) is properly an officious intermeddling in a suit, which no way belongs to one, by maintaining or assisting either party with money or otherwise, to prosecute or defend it.<sup>2</sup> Each of these is deemed an offence against public justice, and punishable accordingly, both at the common law and by statute, as tending to keep alive strife and contention, and to pervert the remedial process of the law into an engine of oppression.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>3</sup> Ibid.—Hawkins, in his Pleas of the Crown, 2d vol. B. 1, ch. 86, § 1, Leach's edit. 1795, says: "It seemeth to be a high offence at common law to buy or sell any doubtful title to lands known to be disputed, to the intent, that the buyer may carry on the suit, which the seller doth not think it worth his while to do, and on that consideration sells his pretensions at an under rate. And it seemeth not to be material, whether the title so sold be a good or a bad one, or whether the seller were in possession or not, unless possession were lawful and uncontested."—This is laying down the doctrine very broadly; and more broadly than it is laid down in Blackstone's Commentaries, (4 Black. Comm. 135). The statute of 32 Hen. 8, ch. 9, provides, "that no person or persons whatsoever shall bargain, buy or sell, or by any ways or means, obtain, get or have any pretended rights or titles or take, promise, grant or covenant to have any right or title of any person or persons to any manors, lands tenements or hereditaments, but if, (unless) such person or persons their ancestors, or they by whom they claim the same, have been in possession of the same, or the reversion or remainder thereof, or taken the rents and profits thereof, by the space of one whole year next before the said bargain, covenant, grant or promise made upon pain, &c. (2 Hawk. Pleas of the Crown by Leach, B. 1 ch. 86, § 4.) Mr. Russell, (on Crimes, vol. 1, B. 2, ch. 21, p. 266,) says; "Maintenance seems to signify an unlawful taking in hand or upholding of quarrels or sides to the disturbance or hindrance of common right. This may be, where a person assists another in his pretensions to lands by taking or holding the possession of them by force or subtility, or where a person stirs up quarrels and suits in relation to matters, wherein he is no way concerned; or it may be, where a person officiously intermeddles in a suit depending in a court of justice, and in no way belonging to him, by assisting either party with money, or otherwise, in the prosecution or defence of such suit. Where there is no contract to have a part of the thing in suit, the party so intermeddling is said to be guilty of maintenance. But if the party stipulates to have part of the thing in suit, his offence is called champerty." It would seem, that, where a party purchases the whole matter in controversy, and brings the suit not to support the title of another, but to support his own title, the case would not fall within the predicament either of maintenance or champerty, as thus defined by Mr. Russell, or by Mr. Justice Blackstone, although it may be within the scope of the offence described by Hawkins, or of the statute of 32 Henry 8, ch. 9, respecting the buying or selling of pretended or disputed titles. Be this, as it may, it seems difficult to perceive, how the language can be applied to matters of trust in lands, actual or constructive, where the trust, though disputed, falls within the jurisdiction of a Court of Equity. The case of a bill brought for a specific performance of a disputed contract, respecting the purchase of lands, by an assignee of the seller or buyer turns upon the ground of trust; and yet it has been uniformly held to be within the jurisdiction of Courts of Equity. (Post, § 1049, § 1050, § 1051). So, the case of the assignment of a disputed debt, or chose in action, or covenant has been held a good assignment in Equity. See post, § 1053, § 1054, § 1057. The true distinction will perhaps be found to be, that the doctrine of maintenance and champerty, and buying pretended titles, applies only to cases, where there is an adverse right claimed under an independent title, not in privity with that of the assignor or seller, and not under a disputed right claimed in privity or under a trust for the assignor or seller. It is not strictly maintenance for a stranger to advance money for, or to agree to pay the costs of a suit not yet commenced; for the offence consists in such acts done after a suit is commenced. But Courts of Equity deem such acts as savoring of maintenance; and therefore will not enforce any signment of debts and other rights of action and securities; though (as we have seen) the same doctrine does not prevail in Equity. But still, Courts of Equity are ever solicitous to enforce all the principles of law respecting champerty and maintenance; and they will not, in any case, uphold an assignment, which involves any such offensive ingredients.<sup>1</sup> Thus, for instance, Courts of Equity, equally with [*313] Courts of Law, will repudiate any agreement or assignment made between a creditor and a third person, to maintain a suit of the former, so that they might share the profits resulting from the success of the suit; for it would be a clear case of champerty.<sup>2</sup> So, an assignment to a navy agent, of a part of the subject of a pending prize suit, in consideration of his undertaking to indemnify the assignor against the costs and charges of the suit, will be held void in Equity; for it amounts to champerty, it being the unlawful maintenance of a suit, in consideration of a bargain for part of a thing, or some profit out of it.<sup>3</sup> So, a bill to enforce a title acquired by a conveyance contracts or rights growing out of them. Wood v. Downes, 18 Ves. 125. In Harrington v. Long, (2 Mylne & K. 592,) the Master of the Rolls defined maintenance somewhat differently from what it is in the text. He said; "Maintenance is where there is an agreement, by which one party gives to a stranger the benefit of a suit, upon condition, that he prosecutes it." See also Prosser v. Edmonds, 1 Younge & Coll. 496, 497, 498, 499; ante, § 1040, c.

from a person out of possession of real estate, in consideration of money advanced, and to be advanced, on suits for the recovery thereof, will be dismissed, even though the parties are first cousins; for it amounts to maintenance and is the buying of a pretended title.<sup>1</sup> The only exceptions to the general rule are of certain relations recognised by the law; such as that of father and son; or of an heir apparent; of the husband of an heiress;<sup>2</sup> or of master and servant;<sup>3</sup> and the like.

§ 1050. But, consistently with these principles, a [*314] *party may purchase, by assignment, the whole interest of another in a contract, or security, or other property, which is in litigation, provided there be nothing in the contract, which savors of maintenance; that is, provided he does not undertake to pay any costs, or make any advances beyond the mere support of the exclusive interest, which he has so acquired.<sup>4</sup> Thus, for example, it is extremely clear, that an equitable interest, under a contract of purchase of real estate, may be the subject of sale. A person, claiming under such original contract, in case he afterwards sells his purchase to sub-purchasers, becomes, in Equity, a trustee for the persons, to whom he so contracts to sell. Without entering into any covenant for that purpose, such sub-purchasers are obliged to indemnify him from the consequence of all acts, which he must execute for their benefit. And a Court of Equity, not only allows, but actually compels him to permit them to use his name in all proceedings for obtaining the benefit of their contract. Such indemnity, and such proceedings, under such circumstances, are not deemed maintenance.<sup>1</sup>

*1051. This doctrine has been fully recog- [*315] nised by an eminent judge, who on one occasion, where a subcontract of this sort occurred in judgment, used the following language: "If G. & W., (the original vendees,) during the pendency of the suit in the Exchequer, sold the estate to A. B., he would have a right in a Court of Equity to insist, as purchaser of the estate, that they should convey to him the fee simple, or such title as they had. So insisting, he claims no more, than they would be entitled to claim, if they had not sold their equitable interest. Having sold, they become trustees of that equitable interest; their vendee acquires the same right, which they had; that is, a right to call on the original vendors, indemnifying them against all costs and charges, for the use of their names, to enable them to execute the subcontract, by which they have undertaken to transfer their benefits under the primary contract. If I were to suffer this doctrine to be shaken by any reference to the law of champerty or maintenance, I should violate the established habits of this Court, which has always given to parties, entering into a subcontract, the benefit, which the vendors derived from the primary contract.”<sup>1</sup>

§ 1052. Upon the like grounds, where a creditor, who had instituted proceedings at Law and in Equity against his debtor, entered into an agreement with the debtor to abandon those proceedings, and give up his securities, in consideration of the debtor's giving him a lien on other securities in the hands of another creditor, with authority to sue the latter, and agreeing to use his best endeavors to assist in [*316] *adjusting his accounts with the holder, and in recovering those securities; it was held, that the agreement was lawful, and not maintenance; for there was no bargain, or color of bargain, that the assignee should maintain the suit, instituted in the assignor's name against such creditor, having the other securities, in consideration of sharing in the profits to be derived from that suit. The agreement was, in effect, nothing more, than an assignment of the equity of redemption of the assignor in the securities held by such creditor, in exchange for the prior securities held by the assignee. The authority, given to the assignee to sue such creditor, was the common legal provision in the case of an assignment of a debt or security.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1053. So, where, by articles of agreement for the sale of an estate, it was agreed between the vendor and purchaser, that the purchaser, bearing all the expenses of certain suits, commenced by the vendor against an occupier for by-gone rents, should have the rents so to be recovered, and also any money recovered for dilapidations, and that the purchaser, at his own expense, and indemnifying the vendor, might use the name of the vendor in any action he might think fit to commence therefor; it was held, that the agreement was not void for maintenance or champerty.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1054. Indeed, there is no principle in Equity, which prevents a creditor from assigning his interest in a debt after the institution of a suit therefor, as *being within the statutes against champerty [*317] and maintenance. Such an assignment gives the person, to whom it is made, a right to institute a new proceeding, in order to obtain the benefit of the assignment. And the proper mode of doing this is by the assignee's filing a supplemental bill, (if the suit is still pending,) making the assignor and the debtor defendants. But, if the assignment contains an agreement, that the assignee is to indemnify the assignor, not only against all costs incurred, and to be incurred, with reference to the subject-matter assigned, but also against all costs to be incurred in that suit for collateral objects, and claims totally distinct from the subject-matter assigned, it will be held void for maintenance.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1055. So strongly are Courts of Equity inclined to uphold assignments, when bonâ fide made, that even the assignment of freight, to be earned in future, is good in Equity; and will be enforced against the party, from whom it becomes due.<sup>1</sup> And whenever an assignment is made of a debt, or other personal property, although it is charged on land, as, for example, a pecuniary legacy, charged on land, the assignment will be treated as an assignment of money only, and therefore it will not be affected by the policy of the registration laws, by which conveyances of interests in land are required to be registered.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1056. In Courts of Law, these principles of Courts of Equity are now acted on to a limited extent. But still, whenever a bond or other debt is assigned, and it is necessary to sue at law for the recovery thereof, it must be done in the name of the original creditor, the person, to whom it is transferred, being treated rather as an attorney, than as an assignee; although his rights will be recognised, and protected, in some [*318] measure, at law, against the frauds of the assignor.<sup>3</sup> making him, as well as the assignor, (if necessary,) a party to the bill. The assignment of a debt does not, in Equity, require even the assent, in any manner, of the debtor thereto ;<sup>1</sup> although, to make it effectual for all purposes, it may be important to give notice of the assignment to him ; since, until notice, he is not affected with the trust created thereby, and the rights of third persons may intervene to the prejudice of the assignee.<sup>2</sup> The ground of this doctrine is, that the creditor has, in Equity, a right to dispose of his own property, as he may choose ; and to require the debt to be paid to such person, as he may direct, without any consultation with the debtor, who holds the debt, subject to the rights of the creditor.

CHAPTER XXIX.

WILLS AND TESTAMENTS.

§ 1058. IN the next place, let us pass to the consideration of express trusts of real and personal property, created by LAST WILLS AND TESTAMENTS. These are so various in their nature and objects, and so extensive in their reach, that it would be impracticable to comprehend them within the plan of these Commentaries. They are most usually created for the security of the rights and interests of infants, of femes covert, of children, and of other relations ; or for the payment of debts, legacies, and portions ; or for the sale or purchase of real estate for the benefit of heirs, or others having claims upon the testator ; or for objects of general or special charity. Many trusts, also, under wills arise by construction and implication of law. But in whatever way, or for whatever purpose, or in whatever form, trusts arise under wills, they are exclusively within the jurisdiction of Courts of Equity. Indeed, so many arrangements, modifications, restraints, and intermediate directions are indispensable to the due administration of these trusts, that, without the interposition of Courts of Equity, there would, in many cases, be a total failure of justice.

§ 1059. The truth of this remark will at once be seen by the statement of a very few plain cases to illustrate it. In the first place, trusts are often created by will, without the designation of any trustee, who is to execute them ; or it may be matter of doubt, upon the terms of the will, who is the proper party. Now, it is a settled principle in Courts of Equity, (as has been already stated,) that a trust shall never fail for the want of a proper trustee; and, if no other is designated, Courts of Equity will take upon themselves the due execution of the trust.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1060. Thus, for example, if a testator should order his real estate, or any part thereof, to be sold for the payment of his debts, without saying, who should sell; in such a case a clear trust would be created. A Court of Law will not, in such a case, take cognizance of the trust. Nay; so strictly is this rule adhered to, that a Court of Law will not undertake to construe a will, so far as it regards mere trusts; and if a case be sent for the opinion of the Judges, stating it as a trust, they will decline giving any opinion thereon.<sup>2</sup> But a Court of Equity will not hesitate, in such a case, to declare, who is the proper party to execute the trust; or, if no one is designated, it will proceed to execute the trust by its own authority, and decree a sale of the land. In the case put of a trust for the payment of debts, if executors are named in the will, they will be deemed, by implication, to be the proper parties to sell; because, in Equity, when lands are directed to be sold, they are treated as money; and, as the executors are liable to pay the debts, and, if the lands were money, would be the proper parties to receive it for that purpose, Courts of Equity will hold it to be the intent of the testator, that the parties, who are to receive and finally to execute the

[*321] *§ 1061. In the next place, let us suppose the case of a will, giving power to trustees to sell an estate upon some specified trust; and they should all refuse to execute the trust, or should all die before executing it. Now, it is a well known rule of law, that powers are never imperative; but the acts to be done under them are left to the free will of the parties, to whom they are given. The same rule is applied at law to such powers, even when coupled with a trust. Hence, in the case supposed, the trust would at law be wholly gone. The trustees, if living, could not at law be compelled to execute the trust; and by their death the power would be entirely extinguished.<sup>2</sup> But Courts of Equity would treat the whole matter in a very different way. They would compel the trustees, if living, to execute the power, because coupled with a trust, although they would not compel them to execute a mere naked power, not coupled with a trust.<sup>3</sup> And if the trustees

Will. 490.—It is upon the same ground, that, if a power of appointment is given by will to a party to distribute property among certain classes of persons, as among relations of the testator, the power is treated as a trust; and if the party dies without executing it, a Court of Equity will distribute the property among the next of kin. The cases on this point are numerous. See Mr. Jarman's note to 1 Powell on Devises, 294; Davy v. Hooper, 2 Vern. 665; Harding v. Glynn, 1 Atk. 469; Maddison v. Andrew, 1 Ves. 57; *Watts v. should die, without executing the power, they would hold the trust to survive, and, upon a suitable bill in Equity by the parties in interest, would decree its due execution by a sale of the estate for the specified trust.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1062. In regard to powers, too, some subtle distinctions have been taken at law, which often require the interposition of Courts of Equity. Thus, for instance, it is a general rule of law, that a mere naked power, given to two, cannot be executed by one; or given, to three, cannot be executed by two, although the other be dead;<sup>2</sup> for, in this case, it is held to be a personal trust in all the persons, unless some other language is used to the contrary. Then, suppose a testator, by his will, should give authority to A. and B. to sell his estate, and should make them his executors; in such a case, it has been said, that the survivor could not sell. But, if the testator should give authority to his executors (eo nomine) to sell, and should make A. and B. his executors, there, if one should die, the survivor (it has been said) could sell.<sup>3</sup> The distinction is nice; but it proceeds upon the ground, that in the latter case the power is given to the executors virtute officii, and in the former case it is merely personal to the parties named. Now, although this distinction has been doubted, and its soundness has been denied; yet it has much authority also in its support, where the power is deemed at law to be a mere naked power.<sup>1</sup> Where the power is coupled with an interest, the construction might be different, even at law. But at all events, if the power is coupled [*323] *with a trust, Courts of Equity will insist upon its execution, upon the principles already stated.<sup>2</sup> Still, however, the construction upon the very words of the particular will might be very important even in Equity; since, if the power should survive, it would not be necessary to make the heir join in the sale of the property. If it did not survive, he would be compelled to join in the sale.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1063. Upon the construction of wills, also, many difficult questions arise, as to the nature and extent of powers, and the manner, in which they are to be executed. It would occupy too great a space to enter into a general examination, even of the leading authorities upon this subject. But one or two illustrations may not be without use, rather to open the mind to

Litt. 113 a.; has discussed this subject with great acuteness and learning. Mr. Sugden has summed up the result of the decisions in the following propositions. (1) That where a power is given to two or more by their proper names, who are not made executors, it will not survive without express words. (2) That where it is given to three or more generally, as "to my trustees," "my sons," &c., and not by their proper names, the authority will survive, whilst the plural number remains. (3.) That where the authority is given to executors, and the will does not expressly point to a joint exercise of it, even a single surviving executor may execute it. But, (4.) That where it is given to them nominatim, although in the character of executors, it is at least doubtful, whether it will survive. Sugden on Powers, ch. 3, § 2, art. 1, p. 165, 166, 3d edit.

some of the doubts, which may arise, than to satisfy inquiries.<sup>1</sup> Thus, for example, where a testator directed, that, if his personal estate and house and lands at W. should not pay his debts, then *his exe- [*324] cutors should raise the same out of his copy-hold estate; it became a question, whether the terms of the power authorized a sale of the copy-hold estate. It was held, that they did.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1064. This is a comparatively simple question. But, suppose a will should contain a direction or power to raise money out of the rents and profits of an estate, to pay debts or portions, &c.; a question might then arise, whether such a power would authorize a sale or mortgage of the estate under any circumstances; as, for instance, if it were otherwise impracticable, without the most serious delays and inconveniences, to satisfy the purposes of the trust. Now, this is a point, upon which great authorities have entertained opposite opinions. The old cases generally inclined to hold, that the power should be restricted to the mere application of the annual rents and profits.<sup>3</sup> The more recent cases hold to a more liberal exposition of the power, so as to include in it, if necessary for the purposes of the trust, a power to sell or to mortgage the estate.<sup>4</sup> Lord Eldon has significantly said, with reference to the case of a direction by a testator to pay debts and legacies out of the rents and profits of a term of five hundred years, created by his will, that if [*325] he were asked, out of Westminster *Hall, what the testator meant by rents and profits, he should say, that he probably meant the annual profits only. But that it was a settled rule, that, where a term is created for the purpose of raising money out of the rents and profits, if the trusts of the will require, that a gross sum should be raised, the expression, "rents and profits," will not confine the power to the mere annual rents; but the trustees are to raise it out of the estate itself by sale or mortgage.<sup>1</sup> Sir Thomas Plumer, speaking on the same subject, has also said, "Whatever might have been the interpretation of these words, had the case been new, whatever doubt might have arisen upon them, as denoting annual or permanent profits, it is now too late to speculate; this Court having, by a technical, artificial, but liberal, construction, in a series of authorities, admitting it not to be the natural meaning, extended those words, when applied to the object of raising a gross sum at a fixed time, when it must be raised and paid without delay, to a power to raise by sale or mortgage; unless restrained by other words."<sup>2</sup>

§ 1064. a. But the true exposition of the modern doctrine, established in Courts of Equity on this subject, does not in reality deserve to be deemed either technical, or artificial, although it is certainly a liberal construction of the words of the testator, in order to accomplish his intent. When a testator directs a gross sum to be raised out of the rents and profits of an estate at a fixed time, or for a definite purpose or object, which must be accomplished within a short period of time, or which cannot be delayed beyond a reasonable time, it is but fair to presume, that he intends, that the gross sum shall at all events be raised, so that the end may be punctually accomplished ; and that he acts under the impression, that it may be so obtained by a due application of the rents and profits within the intermediate period. But the rents and profits are but the means ; and the question, therefore may properly be put, whether the means, if totally inadequate to accomplish the end, are to control the end, or are to yield to it. Now, if the gross sum cannot be raised out of the rents and profits at all, or not so soon, as to meet the exigency contemplated by the testator, it would seem but a reasonable interpretation of his intention to presume, that he meant to dispense with the means, and at all events to require the sum to be raised. The same principle is applied by Courts of Equity in other analogous cases ; as, for example, in cases of charities, where the doctrine of cy pres is applied,<sup>1</sup> and to cases of elegits on judgments, and to other cases, where the debt cannot be paid at all out of the rents and profits, or not within a reasonable time.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1065. In the next place, independently of the consideration of powers, many very embarrassing questions arise, as to the nature and extent of the limitations of trusts, properly so called, under last wills ;

as to the persons, who are to take ; and also as to the interests, they are to take in the trust property. Many of these trusts require the positive interposition and direction of Courts of Equity, before they can be properly or safely executed by the parties in interest, so as to protect them against future litigation and controversy. And it not infrequently happens, that the final administration, settlement, and distribution of the assets of the testator, real and personal, must stand suspended, until the aid of some Court of Equity has been invoked, and a decretal order is obtained, containing a declaration of the nature and extent of these trusts, of the parties, who are entitled to take, and of the limitations of their respective interests ; and also providing means, by reference to a master, whereby the cross equities and conflicting claims of various persons, such as creditors, trustees, legatees, devisees, heirs, [*326] *and distributees, may be clearly ascertained, and definitely established.<sup>1</sup> Thus, for example, upon a will, creating a trust for the payment of debts, and charging them, as well as legacies, on the real estate of the testator, it may often be a matter of serious difficulty to ascertain from the words of the will, whether the personal estate is to be wholly exonerated from the payment of the debts and legacies ; or whether it is to be the primary fund, and the real estate only to be auxiliary thereto. And in each case, if the charges on the real estate are not sufficient to exhaust the whole, in what manner the charges are to be borne and apportioned among the different devisees and heirs.<sup>1</sup> Until these questions are settled by a Court of Equity, upon a bill, bringing all the proper parties before it, it will be impossible for the executors or trustees, (as the case may be), to proceed to a final settlement of the various claims, without manifest danger of having all their proceedings overhauled in some future suit.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1065. a. Very embarrassing questions also often arise under last wills and testaments in respect to the persons, who are entitled to take under words of general description ; as for example, under bequests to “ children,” to “ grandchildren,” “ to younger children,” to “ issue,” to “ heirs,” to “ next of kin,” to “ nephews and nieces,” to “ first and second cousins,” to “ relations,” to “ poor relations,” to the “ family,” to “ personal representatives,” and to “ servants.” For these words have not a uniform fixed sense and meaning in all cases ; but they admit of a variety of interpretations according to the context of the will, the circumstances, in which the testator is placed, the state of his family, the character and reputed connexion of the persons, who may be presumed to be the objects of his bounty, and yet who, only in a very lax and general sense, can be said to fall within the descriptive words. Thus, “ child ” or “ children ” is sometimes construed to mean “ issue ;” and “ issue ” to mean

“children;” “heirs” is sometimes construed to mean “children;” “next of kin” is sometimes construed to mean only those who are entitled to take under the statute of distributions, and sometimes to include other persons; “relations” is sometimes construed to mean the “next of kin” in the strict sense of the words, and sometimes to include persons more remote in consanguinity; “personal representatives” is sometimes construed to mean the “administrators of executors,” and sometimes to mean the “next of kin;” “executors” sometimes includes the persons named as executors in the will, and sometimes only such as take upon themselves that office; and “nephews and nieces” will sometimes include great nephews, and great nieces.<sup>1</sup> The word “family” admits of a still greater variety of applications. It may mean a man’s household, consisting of himself, his wife, children, and servants; it may mean

his wife and children, or his children, excluding his wife ; or, in the absence of wife and children, it may mean his brothers and sisters, or next of kin ; or it may mean the genealogical stock, from which he may have sprung.<sup>1</sup> In all these cases, the true meaning, in which the testator employed the word, must be ascertained by considering the circumstances, in which he is placed, the objects he had in view, and the context of the will.<sup>2</sup> Where the bequest respects personal or trust property, it naturally, nay necessarily, falls within the jurisdiction of Courts of Equity to establish the proper interpretation of such descriptive words in the particular will ; and neither executors, nor administrators, nor trustees, can safely act in such cases, until a proper bill has been brought, to ascertain the true nature and character of such bequests or trusts, and to obtain a declaration from the Court of the persons entitled to claim under the general descriptive words. Where, indeed the estate, to which the descriptive words apply, is of a legal nature, the interpretation thereof may well belong to Courts of Law. But even in such cases, from the inability of those Courts to bring all the proper parties before them in a single suit, as well as from the mixed nature of the subject matter of the bequest, the questions are most commonly discussed and settled in a declaratory suit before some Court of Equity.

§ 1066. There are also some rules of construction of the words of wills, adopted by Courts of Equity in relation to trusts, which are different from those, which are adopted by Courts of Law in construing

the same words in relation to mere legal estates and interests. We have already had occasion to take notice of this distinction, in remarking upon the difference between executed and executory trusts. In the former, Courts of Equity follow the rules of law in the interpretation of the words; in the latter, they often proceed upon an interpretation widely different.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1067. In regard also to legacies, and bequests of chattels and other personal property, Courts of Equity (as we have seen,) treat all such cases as matters of trust, and the executor, as a trustee for the benefit of the legatees, and, as to the undisposed residue of such property, as a trustee for the next of kin.<sup>2</sup> The rules, therefore, adopted by Courts of Equity, in expounding the words of wills in regard to bequests of personal property, are not precisely the same, as those adopted by Courts of Law in interpreting the same words as to real estate. For Courts of Equity, having, in a great measure, succeeded to the jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Courts over these matters; and these Courts, in the interpretation of legacies, being governed by the rules of the Civil Law, Courts of Equity have followed them in such interpretation, rather than the rules of the Common Law, where they differ.<sup>3</sup>

words in a will as applied to real estate, and as applied to personal estate, giving effect to the presumed intent of the testator to an enlarged and liberal extent, not recognised at Law. *Hence it is, that, if freehold [*328] and leasehold estates are devised to a person and the heirs of his body, with a limitation over, in case he leaves no such heirs, the words will, or at least may, be construed to mean, a dying without leaving such heirs indefinitely, as to the freehold estates, and a dying without leaving such heirs living at the time of his death, as to the leasehold estates; the effect of which will be very different in the two different species of estates, as to the title of the devisee, and the validity of the limitation over.<sup>1</sup> Where the remainder over is upon an indefinite failure of such heirs, the first devisee takes an estate tail with a vested remainder over upon the determination of that estate. Now, such a remainder over, after an estate tail, in freehold estates is valid in point of law, and awaits the regular determination of the prior estate. But in leasehold estates, it is void, as being too remote, and the tenant in tail takes the whole estate; whereas, if the devise is construed to be a dying without issue living at the decease of the first devisee, then in each case the legal effect is the same. The devise over will be treated as a good contingent remainder to take effect, if at all, at the death of the first devisee. The reason of this difference is, that in chattels, whether personal or real, there can be no good remainder over limited after an estate tail, as the tenant in tail is deemed to be the absolute owner. But in freeholds, there may be a good remainder after an estate tail by the statute de donis ; and the tenant in tail is deemed to be only the qualified owner.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1068. In the interpretation of the language of wills also, Courts of Equity have gone great lengths, by creating implied or constructive trusts from mere recommendatory and precatory words of the testator. Thus, if a testator should by his will desire his executor to give to a particular person a certain sum of money, it would be construed to be a legacy ; although the will should leave it to the executor's own free will, how, and when, and in what manner, it should be paid.<sup>2</sup> So, if a testator should desire his wife, at or before her death, to give certain personal estate among such of his relations, as she should think most deserving and approve of; it would be held to be a legacy among such relations.<sup>3</sup> So, a bequest to a wife of all the testator's freehold and copyhold estates, being well assured, that she will at her decease dispose of the same amongst all or such of my children, as she in her discretion shall think most proper, and as they by their future conduct towards her shall be deserving of the same, would be held to be a trust for such of the [*329] children, as she should *appoint.<sup>4</sup> So, a bequest to a wife of the testator's personal estate, and if she should marry again, to be secured to her separate use, and recommending the wife to give by her will what she should die possessed of to certain persons, whom he named, would be held to create a trust in favor of such persons.<sup>1</sup> In short, it may be stated, as a general result of the cases, in the language of Lord Eldon, that, whether the words of the will are those of recommendation, or precatory, or expressing hope, or that the testator has no doubt, if the objects, with regard to whom such terms are applied, are certain, and the subjects of property to be given are also certain, the words are considered imperative, and create a trust.<sup>2</sup> Or, as another learned Judge has expressed it, (in a form, indeed, open to some criticism) ; “ Wherever any person gives property, and points out the object, the property, and the way, in which it shall go, that does create a trust, unless he shows clearly, that his desire expressed is to be controlled by the party, and that he shall have an option to defeat it.”<sup>3</sup>

§ 1069. The doctrine of thus construing expressions of recommendation, confidence, hope, wish, and desire into positive and peremptory commands, is not a little difficult to be maintained upon sound principles of interpretation of the actual intention of a testator. It can scarcely be presumed, that every testator should not clearly understand the difference between such [*330] expressions, and words of *positive direction and command ; and that, in using the one, and omitting the other, he should not have a determinate end in view. It will be agreed on all sides, that, where the intention of the testator is to leave the whole subject, as a pure matter of discretion, to the good will and pleasure of the party, enjoying his confidence and favor ; and where his expressions of desire are intended, as mere moral suggestions, to excite and aid that discretion, but not absolutely to control or govern it ; there, the language cannot, and ought not to be held to create a trust. Now, words of recommendation, and other words, precatory in their nature, imply that very discretion, as contradistinguished from peremptory orders ; and, therefore, ought to be so construed, unless a different sense is irresistibly forced upon them by the context.<sup>1</sup> Accordingly, in more modern times, a strong disposition has been indicated not to extend this doctrine of recommendatory trusts ; but, as far as the authorities will allow, to give to the words of wills their natural and ordinary sense, unless it is clear, that they are designed to be used in a peremptory sense.<sup>2</sup>

In Sale v. Moore, 1 Sim. R. 534, the Vice Chancellor said; "The first case, that construed words of recommendation into a command, made a will for the testator; for every one knows the distinction between them. The current of decisions of late years has been against converting the legatee into a trustee." See also Meredith v. Heneage, 1 Sim. R. 542, where Lord Ch. Baron Richards expressed a similar opinion; and Lord Eldon also, in Wright v. Atkins, 1 V. & Beam. 315; Lechmere v. Lavie, 2 Mylne & Keen, 197; Lawless v. Shaw, 1 Lloyd & Goold, R. 154, and the Reporters' note; Benson v. Whittam, 5 Sim. R. 22; Podmore v. Gunning, 7 Sim. R. 644; Wood v. Cox, 1 Keen, R. 317; S. C. on appeal, 2 M. & Craig, 684. A strong case illustrative of the doctrine now maintained is Ex parte Payne (2 Younge & Coll. 636.) There the testator devised his estate to his daughter "as some reward for her affectionate, unwearied, and unexampled attention to him during his illness of many years;" and then added, "I strongly recommend to her to execute a settlement of the said estate and thereby to vest the same in trustees, &c. for the use and benefit of herself for life, with remainder to her husband and his assigns for life, with remainder to all and every the children she may happen to have, if more than one, share and share alike; and if but one, the whole to such one; or to such other uses, as my said daughter shall think proper; to the intent, that the said estate, in the event of her marriage, shall be effectually protected and secured;" and Lord Ch. Baron Abinger held, that the daughter took an absolute estate.

is a wide distinction between a power and a trust. In the former the party may, or may not, act in his discretion. In the latter the trust will be executed, notwithstanding his omission to act.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1071. In respect to certainty in the description of objects or persons in such recommendatory trusts, it may be proper to state, that it is not indispensable, that the persons should be described by their names. But more general descriptions will often amount to a sufficient designation of the persons to take; such, for example, as "sons," "children," "family," and "relations;" if the context fixes the particular persons, who are to take, clearly and definitely.<sup>2</sup> Thus, a devise to the family of A., will often be a sufficient designation; and may be construed to mean the heir at law of A., or the children of A.; or even the relations [*332] of A., according to *the context.<sup>3</sup> And, on the other hand, the language may be so loosely and indeterminately used, as not to amount to a clear designation of persons; and thus the recommendation may fail to create a trust.

§ 1072. We may illustrate each of these positions

ch. 1, § 2, p. 99 to 102. In Wright v. Atkyns, 1 Turn. & Russ. 157, Lord Eldon said, that in order to determine, whether a trust of this sort is a trust, which a court of Equity will interfere with, it is matter of observation; first, that the words should be imperative; secondly, that the subject must be certain; and thirdly, that the object must be as certain as the subject. The case of Wood v. Cox, 2 Mylne & Craig, 684, affords a strong illustration of the first point.

by cases, which have actually passed into judgment. Thus, where a testator devised his leasehold estates to his brother A. for ever, "hoping he will continue them in the family;" it was held, that this raised no trust for the family; for no particular objects were pointed out. There was a choice; and the devisee might dispose of the property either way; and, if he had sold it, the family could not have claimed against the vendee.<sup>1</sup> On the other hand, where a testator devised all his leasehold, as well as freehold estates, &c. "unto his mother and her heirs for ever, in the fullest confidence, that, after her decease, she would devise the property to his family;" it was held, that she took an estate for life, with a remainder in trust for the devisor's heir at law, as persona designata.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1073. In the next place, as to certainty in the description of property, or rather, as to what property is to be given. This also may be illustrated by some cases, which have already passed into judgment. Thus, where a testator bequeathed to his wife all the residue of his personal estate, "not doubting, *but that she will dispose of what shall be [*333] left at her death to our two grand-children;" it was held, that the uncertainty of the property, to which the bequest should attach, (what shall be left,) defeated it, as a recommendatory trust; for the residue might be just such, as the wife chose.<sup>3</sup> So, where a testator bequeathed to his wife all the residue of his estate, "recommending to her, and not doubting, as she has no relations of her own family, but that she will consider my near relations, should she survive me, as I should consider them myself, in case I should survive her;" it was held, that the words did not create a trust, from the uncertainty both of the objects and the property to be taken by the relations.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1074. These may suffice as specimens of the curious refinements in the interpretation of wills, which Courts of Equity have adopted in creating constructive trusts; in which, indeed, they have often been followed by Courts of Law in regard to legal estates.<sup>2</sup> It is highly probable, that some of these refinements were borrowed from the Civil Law, in which the distinction between pure legacies, and legacies clothed with trusts, was well known. Thus, it is said: Legatum est, quod legis modo, id est imperative, testamento relinquitur. Nam ea, quæ precativo modo relinquantur, fideicommissa vocantur.<sup>3</sup> And again; *Fidei-[*334] commissum est, quod non *civilibus verbis, sed precative relinquitur; non ex rigore juris civilis proficiscitur, sed ex voluntate datur relinquentis.*<sup>4</sup> And then, by way of illustration, it is declared. Fideicommittere his verbis possumus; rogo, peto, volo, mando, deprecor, cupio,

CHAPTER XXX.

ELECTION AND SATISFACTION.

§ 1075. It is in cases of wills also, that the doctrine respecting ELECTION AND SATISFACTION most frequently, though not exclusively,<sup>1</sup> arises in practice, and is acted upon and enforced by Courts of Equity.<sup>2</sup> Election, in the sense here used, is the obligation imposed upon a party to choose between two inconsistent or alternative rights or claims, in cases where there is clear intention of the person, from whom he derives one, that he should not enjoy both. Every case of election, therefore, pre-supposes, a plurality of gifts or rights, with an intention, express or implied, of the party, who has a right to control one or both, that one should be a substitute for the other. The party, who is to take, has a choice ; but he cannot enjoy the benefits of both.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> There is no question, that the doctrine of election extends to deeds in the English law. See the cases cited in Mr. Swanston's note to Dillon v. Parker, 1 Swanst. 400, 401. Mr. Swanston seems to think, that the doctrine of election in the Civil Law was confined to wills ; and originated in the like application to wills in English Jurisprudence. Perhaps it is questionable, whether, in the Civil Law, the doctrine was confined to wills. These were the most common instruments, under which it would arise ; and that may account for most of the cases being put as arising on wills. But the principle, in its own nature, seems equally applicable to other Instruments.

<sup>2</sup> Birmingham v. Kirwan, 2 Sch. & Lefr. 449 ; 2 Madd. Ch. Pr. 40 to 49 ; Jeremy on Eq. Jurisd. B. 3, Pt. 2, ch. 5, p. 534 to 537 ; 1 Roberts on Wills, ch. 1, § 10, p. 96 to 106 ; 2 Roper on Legacies, by White, ch. 23, p. 480 to 579.

§ 1076. Thus, for example, if a testator should, by his will, give to a legatee an absolute legacy of ten thousand dollars, or an annuity of one thousand dollars per annum during his life, at his election ; it would be clear, that he ought not to have both ; and that he ought to be compelled to make an election, whether he would take the one or the other. This would be a case of express and positive election. But suppose, instead of such a bequest, a testator should devise an estate belonging to his son, or heir at law, to a third person ; and should, in the same will, bequeath to his son, or heir at law, a legacy of one hundred thousand dollars, or should make him the residuary devisee of all his estate real and personal. It would be manifest, that the testator intended, that the son or heir should not take both to the exclusion of the other devisee ; and, therefore, he ought to be put to his election, which he would take ; that is, either to relinquish his own estate, or the bequest under the will. This would be a case of implied or constructive election.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1077. Now, the ground, upon which Courts of Equity interfere in all cases of this sort (for at law there is no direct remedy to compel an election) is, that the purposes of substantial justice may be obtained by carrying into full effect the whole intentions

Madd. Ch. Pr. 40 to 49 ; Jeremy on Eq. Jurisd. B. 3, Pt. 2, ch. 5, p. 534 to 538. Mr. Swanston's note is drawn up with great ability and learning ; and I have freely used it in the discussion of this topic. The whole subject of election is also most elaborately examined in Roper on Legacies by White, vol. 2, ch. 23, p. 480 to 578, to which the attention of the learned reader is invited. It is wholly inconsistent with the nature of these Commentaries to discuss all the minute distinctions belonging to it, interesting and important as they certainly are.

of the testator.<sup>1</sup> And, in regard to the cases of implied election, it has been truly remarked, that the foundation of the doctrine is still the intention of the author of the instrument; an intention, which, extending to the whole disposition, is frustrated by the failure of any part. Its characteristic, in its application to these cases, is, that, by an equitable arrangement, full effect is given to a donation of that, which is not the property of the donor. A valid gift, in terms absolute, is qualified by reference to a distinct clause, which, though inoperative as a conveyance, affords authentic evidence of intention. The intention being assumed, the conscience of the donee is affected by the condition, (although it is destitute of legal validity,) not express, but implied, which is annexed to the benefit proposed to him. For the donee to accept the benefit, while he declines the burthen, is to defraud the designs of the donor.<sup>2</sup> In short, Courts of Equity, in such cases, adopt the rational exposition of the will, that there is an implied condition, that he, who accepts a benefit under the instrument, shall adopt the whole, conforming to all its provisions, and renouncing every right, inconsistent with it.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1078. The doctrine of election, like many other doctrines of Equity Jurisprudence, appears to have been derived from the Civil Law. By that law a bequest of property, which the testator knew to belong to another, was not void; but it entitled the legatee to recover from his heir, either the subject of the bequest, or, if the owner was unwilling to part with that at a reasonable price, the pecuniary value.<sup>1</sup> Thus, it is said in the Institutes, that a testator may not only bequeath his own property, or that of his heir, but also the property of other persons; so that the heir may be obliged to purchase and deliver it; or, if he cannot purchase it, to give the legatee its value.<sup>2</sup> But, ordinarily, to give effect to a legacy, in such a case, the testator must have known, that the property so bequeathed by him belonged to another; and not have been ignorant of the fact, and *supposed the pro- [*339] perty was his own. Hæredum etiam res proprias, (says says he, "is, that a person cannot accept and reject the same instrument. And this is the foundation of the law of election, on which Courts of Equity, particularly, have grounded a variety of decisions, in cases both of deeds and of wills; though principally in cases of wills; because deeds, being generally matter of contract, the contract is not to be interpreted otherwise than as the consideration, which is expressed, requires; and voluntary deeds are generally prepared with greater deliberation, and more knowledge of preëxisting circumstances, than wills, which are often prepared with less care, and by persons uninformed of circumstances, and sometimes ignorant of the effect even of the language, which they use. In wills, therefore, it is frequently necessary to consider the general purport of the disposition, in order to extract from it, what is the intention of the testator. The rule of election, however, I take to be applicable to every species of instrument, whether deed or will, and to be a rule of Law, as well as of Equity."

§ 1079. In the Civil Law, also, wherever the heir, or devisee, took any estate under a will containing burthensome legacies, or any disposition of his own property in the manner above mentioned, he was at liberty to accept or to renounce the inheritance. But, (it has been said,) he had no other alternative. He could not accept the benefit offered by the will, and retain the property, of which it assumed to dispose, on the terms of compensation or indemnity to the disappointed claimant. The effect, therefore, of an election to take in opposition to the will was a renunciation of all the benefits offered by it. The effect of an election to take under the will was different, according to the subject-matter. If the property, of which the will assumed to deprive the devisee, was pecuniary, he was compelled to perform the bequest to the extent of the principal and interest, which he had received ; if the property was specific, then a peremptory obligation was imposed upon him to deliver that very thing, although exceeding the amount of the benefit conferred on him.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1080. The earliest cases, in which the doctrine of election was applied in English Jurisprudence, seem to have been those arising out of wills ; although it has since been extended to cases arising under other instruments.<sup>3</sup> It has been said, that the doctrine constitutes a rule of law, as well as of Equity ; and that the reason, why Courts of Equity are more frequently called upon to consider the subject, is, that in consequence of the forms of proceeding at law the party cannot be put to elect. In order to enable a Court of Law to apply the principle, the party must either be deemed concluded, being bound by the nature of the instrument, or must have acted upon it in such a manner, as to be deemed concluded by what he has done ; that is, to have elected. This frequently throws the jurisdiction into Equity, which can compel the party to make an election ; and not to leave it uncertain, under what title he may take.<sup>1</sup> Whether any such rule of election is recognised at law, has been greatly doubted ; although, in cases working by way of estoppel, there may be a rule sometimes approaching nearly to it.<sup>2</sup>

of the interposition of Courts of Equity can be found as early as the reign of Queen Elizabeth. The suggestion of Lord Hardwicke, in Boughton v. Boughton, (2 Ves. 14,) that Noyes v. Mordaunt, (2 Vern. R. 581 ; S. C. Gilb Eq. R. 2,) was the first case, is undoubtedly incorrect ; though Sir Thomas Clarke appears to have held the same opinion in Clarke v. Guise, (2 Ves. R. 618.) See Mr. Swanston's note to Dillon v. Parker, 1 Swanst. R. 399, and Rancliffe v. Parkins, (6 Dow. R. 149.)

<sup>2</sup> Mr. Swanston, in his learned note to Gretton v. Harvard, 1 Swanst. 425, note (a), has commented on this subject at large. It is so valuable a review of the whole subject, that I have ventured to present it in this place. After citing the passage in the text, from Lord Redesdale's decision, he says ; " Lord Rosslyn also is reported to have said, ' The principle of these cases ' (cases of election) ' is very clear. The application is more frequent here ; but it is recognised in Courts of Law every day. You cannot act, you cannot come forth to a Court of Justice, claiming in repugnant rights.' 2 Ves. jr. 696. Lord Mansfield, in a judgment, the authority of which, on every point, has been strongly questioned, (Sugden on Powers, 498, et seq.,) professed the same opinion. 4 T.R. 743 n. See Goodtitle v. Bailey, Cowp. 597. That no court will enforce rights, which it recognises as repugnant, may be admitted probably for an universal proposition. But courts, which differ in the rights, which they recognise, necessarily differ in the recognition of repugnancy. In no instance, it is believed, (with the exception of the anomalous cases last cited,) has a Court of Law adverted to a clause, by which a testator assumes to dispose of the property of his devisee in favor of a third person, for the purpose of declaring the right of the devisee, to the benefit offered by the will, repugnant to his right to retain the property, of which that clause purports to dispose. It is obvious, that such a clause, proceeding from one, who is not the owner, cannot transfer the legal interest in the property. Being distinct and unconnected, without words or necessary implication of reference, it cannot qualify the prior clause of devise as a condition. Nor can it operate by estoppel against the devisee, no party to the will, and whose title to his own estate is not derived from the testator. Failing, therefore, to effect, it serves only to denote, the purpose of its author ; and becomes the peculiar subject of the jurisdiction of a Court of Equity, which, in administering the rights of its suitors, by enforcing the obligations affecting their conscience, executes the intention, in which those obligations originate. The instances, in which Courts of Law have applied the maxim, Allegans contraria non est audiendus, are instances of inconsistent titles, whether to the same subject, as a contemporaneous estate for life and in tail in the same land ; (see Jenkins, Cent. 1, case 27,) ; or the claim of a tenant under and against his landlord, (mentioned by Lord Rosslyn, 2 Ves. jr. 696,) ; or to different subjects, as dower at once in the land taken, and in the land given in exchange (see the case cited, 3 Leon. 271, Perk. s. 319) ; the assertion of one title being incomplete, without a negation of the other. It is a maxim, not of morality, but of logic ; and compels election between claims, in respect, not of the injustice, but of the technical impracticability, of their contemporaneous assertion. In Courts of Law, the suitor is permitted to assert rights, which, so far as the intention of the parties constitutes repugnancy, are confessedly repugnant. ‘If a man make a feoffment in fee of lands or tenements, either before or after marriage, to the use of the husband for life, and after, to the use of A. for life, and then to the use of the wife for life, in satisfaction of her dower ; this is no jointure, within the statute, &c. ; and albeit in that case, A. should die, living the husband, and after the death of the husband, the wife entereth, yet this is no bar of her dower, but she shall have her dower also.’ (Co. Litt. 36 b. and see 4 Co. 2 b. Wilmot’s Opinion, p. 188 ; 9 Mod. 152.) So, if A. disseises B., tenant for life, or in fee, of the manor of Dale, and afterwards gives the manor of Sale to B. and his heirs, in full satisfaction of all his rights and action in Courts of Law, it is very certain, that it is principally enforced in Courts of Equity, where, tions, which he has in or for the manor of Dale, which B. accepts; yet B. may enter into the manor of Dale, or recover it in any real action. 4 Co 1, b. No legal principle is better established, than that, on which these decisions proceed; namely, that a freehold right shall not be barred by collateral satisfaction. (Co. Litt. 3 b., Doctrina Plac. 17.) The like assertion of rights, morally repugnant, has been sanctioned in many of the cases, in which the courts have overruled a plea of accord and satisfaction; (see Peyton's Case, 9 Co. 77; Grymes v. Cro. El. 541; Co. Litt. 212), the plaintiff being permitted, on technical grounds, to enforce a claim, for which he had received a compensation. A devise or bequest of that, which is not the property of the testator, is void at law. (Bransby v. Grantham, Plowd. 525, 526; Litt. s. 287; Co. Litt. 185 b.; Perk. s. 526; Godolph. Orph. Leg. Pt. 3, c. 6, s. 5; Swinb. on Wills, Pt. 3, s. 3, n. 8, s. 5, prope fin. s. 6, n. 17; Doct. & Stu. l. 2, ch. 25, p. 126.) 'If a man bequeath to one another man's horse, in the law of the realm the legacy is void to all intents; and he, to whom the legacy is made, shall neither have the horse, nor the value of the horse.' (Id. l. 2, c. 55, p. 300, and see 3 Co. 29 a.) To suppose, that more favor would be shown to a clause in a deed, purporting to pass the property of a stranger, would be to contradict the established principle of construction. Being void, therefore, to all intents, such clause, whether in a deed, or in a will, is inoperative at law, either for transferring the subject, or for qualifying a previous valid gift. To convert it into a condition, according to the equitable practice, by incorporation with a distinct clause, to which in terms it contains no reference, would be inconsistent with the rule, that conditions imposed by the particular intention of the individual, (as distinguished from conditions, founded in the nature of the relation or contract between the parties, and by us denominated conditions in law,) must, conformably to the feudal principle, (Craig. Jus. Feud. l. 2, dieg. 5, s. 4,) be expressed. Co. Litt. 201 a. Many decisions may be found on the question, what words annexed to the clause of gift, for the purpose of connecting it with a distinct clause, constitute a condition. Ea intentione, ad affectum, which are sufficient in a will (Co. Litt. 236 b.), are not sufficient in a deed (Co. Litt. 204 a.) But in no case, it is believed, has a Court of Law inferred a condition from words applicable only to another subject, and void in their obvious sense, as purporting to pass an estate, not the property of the author of the clause. The general principle of the law, on the subject of repugnant rights, is illustrated by the decisions on the concurrent claims to jointure and to dower. The Statute of Uses, (27 Hen. 8, ch. 10,) having transferred the legal estate to the cestui que use, all women, then married, would have indeed, the jurisdiction to compel the party to make an election is admitted to be exclusive. But, inde-

§ 1081. But whatever may be the truth of the case, as to the recognition of the doctrine of elec-

become dowable of lands held to the use of their husbands, retaining their title to lands settled on them in jointure. To prevent this injustice, it is, by that statute (s. 6,) declared, that a woman having an estate in jointure with her husband, (five species of which are enumerated,) shall not be entitled to dower. And a subsequent clause (s. 9,) reserves to the wife a right to refuse a jointure assured during marriage. (See Wilmot's Opinions, p. 184 et seq.) It has been decided, that the species of estates enumerated, are proposed only as examples; and the courts have in construction extended the operation of the statute to other instances within its principle, though not within its words. Vernon's Case, 4 Co. 1. By the effect of this statute, therefore, no widow can claim both jointure and dower; jointure before marriage is a peremptory bar of dower; jointure after marriage, she has an option to renounce. Lord Redesdale, in support of the proposition, that election is a principle of law, (2 Sch. & Lefr. 451,) has referred to 3 Leonard, 273. That Report (which is cited in 1 Eq. Ca. Abr. Dower B.) contains only the argument of Egerton, Solicitor-General. But the case (Butler v. Baker) is fully reported in 3 Co. 25, Poph. 87, 1 And. 348; and the decision proceeded on the construction of the statute. The passage, to which Lord Redesdale refers, (3 Leon. 272, not 273,) is no more than a dictum of Egerton, in his argument. It is true, however, that the demandant in a writ of dower might be barred by plea of entry and acceptance of lands settled in jointure after marriage (Doctrina Plac. p. 149. See the form of pleading, Co. Entr. 172 a.) But it is also true, that that plea is founded on the Act of H. 8. The Act having declared jointure a bar to dower, but reserved to the widow the option of refusing a jointure made after marriage, the question in that case was, 'whether the widow had accepted or refused the jointure?' If she had not refused, under the 9th, she was barred of dower by the 6th section. The acceptance of the jointure constituting the case there specified, the widow was barred, not by her agreement, but by the statute (Dyer, 317 a.) And it is abundantly clear, that acceptance alone, without the operation of the statute, would not have formed a bar. Vernon's Case, 4 Co. 1; Duchess of Somerset's Case, Dyer, 97, b. In Gosling v. Warburton, (Cro. El. 128, reported under various names, 1 Leon. 136, Owen, 154,) also cited by Lord Redesdale, and also referred to in Eq. Ca. Ab. ubi supra, a rent charge was devised expressly 'in recompense of dower.' And the decision establishes only, that such a benefit, so devised, is a jointure within the extended construction of the statute, and cannot be claimed after a recovery of dower. The series of decisions under this statute, (the only instances in which the doctrine of election has been applied at law, in a manner analogous to its application in Equity,) being founded expressly on the provisions of pendent of this broad and general ground of jurisdiction, the doctrine must be exclusively enforced in Equity in all cases of mere trust estates ; or where there is the intervention of complicated *cross [*345] equities between different persons, claiming in different degrees, and under different limitations and titles; or where conveyances are necessary to be decreed; or where the recompense is not of a nature capable of being applied as a bar at law. Thus, (to put a plain case,) at the common law no collateral recompense, made in satisfaction of dower, or of a right of freehold, could be pleaded in bar of such right of freehold or of dower.<sup>1</sup> But in Equity it the statute, in contrast to the rules of the common law, constitute (it is conceived) a conclusive proof, that the doctrine of election is equitable only. And one of the earliest instances (Lacy v. Anderson, ante, p. 398 n.) in which the equitable doctrine was enforced, is the case of a copyhold estate, devised and accepted, in satisfaction of dower, which not being either within the strict, or the extended import of the statute, a jointure would not have constituted a bar at law. And the aid of Equity was requisite, to prevent the disappointment of the testator's express intention. Accordingly, many authorities occur, in which the doctrine of election is described as exclusively equitable. In the report of Noys v. Mordaunt, by Chief Baron Gilbert, it is distinctly stated, that, 'although the three daughters shall at law take their proportion of the entailed lands, as co-heirs in tail; yet the eldest daughter in Equity shall have an equivalent out of the fee-simple lands.' (Rep. in Eq. 3.) Lord Hardwicke repeatedly refers to that case, which he considered the first of the kind as founded on Equity, (1 Ves. 306; 3 Bro. P. C. ed. Toml. 178, 179,) a benevolent Equity, (3 Atk. 715); and describes the right to compel election, as derived from an Equity of the Court of Chancery, (2 Atk. 629.) That description is in substance adopted by Lord Eldon, (6 Dow, R. 179) Lord Chief Justice De Grey has accurately distinguished between the mode of indirectly disposing of the property of a stranger by express condition at law, or by implied condition in Equity, (3 Ves. 530.) And Lord Commissioner Eyre describes the practice of putting devisees to election, as a strong operation of a Court of Equity. (4 Bro. C. C. 24; 1 Ves. jr. 523.)"

would be clearly held obligatory; and the party would be perpetually enjoined against asserting the title at law, or put to an election, as the circumstances of the case might require.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1082. In the actual application of the doctrine of election, Courts of Equity proceed upon principles, which are wholly incapable of being enforced in the like manner by Courts of Law. Thus, for example, suppose a case of election under a will, which disposes of other property of a devisee; and the devisee should elect to hold his own property, and renounce the benefit of the devise under the will, or (as the compendious phrase is) should elect against the will; in such a case it is clear, that the party disappointed of his bequest or devise by such an election, would, at law, be wholly remediless. The election would terminate all the interest of the parties respectively in the subject-matter of the devise to them. The election to hold his own estate would of course maintain the original title of the devisee; and his renunciation of the intended benefit in the estate devised to him *would leave the same to fall into the residuum of the testator's estate, as property undisposed of.

§ 1083. But the subject is contemplated in a very different light by Courts of Equity; for, in the event of such an election to take against the instrument, Courts of Equity will treat the substituted devise, not as an extinguished title, but as a trust in the devisee for the benefit of the disappointed claimants, to the amount of their interest therein; or, as it has been well expressed, they will assume jurisdiction to sequester the benefit intended for the refractory donee, in order to secure compensation to those, whom his election disappoints.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1084. The reasoning, by which this doctrine is sustained, has been stated by Sir William Grant, in his usual clear and felicitous manner. "If," (said he,) "the will is in other respects so framed as to create a case of election, then, not only is the estate given to the heir under an implied condition, that he shall confirm the whole of the will; but, in contemplation of Equity, the testator means, in case the condition shall not be complied with, to give the disappointed devisees out of the estate, over which he had a power, a benefit, correspondent to that, which they are deprived of by such noncompliance. So that the devise is read, as if it were to the heir absolutely, if he confirm the will; if not, then in trust for the disappointed devisees, as to so much of the estate given to him, as shall be equal in value to the estate intended for them."<sup>2</sup>

*§ 1085. Another point has arisen in Equity [*347] (and which, indeed, must be deemed one, which could arise only in Equity;) and that is, whether a devisee, electing against the will, thereby forfeits the whole of the benefit proposed for him, or so much only, as is requisite to compensate, by an equivalent, those claimants, whom he has disappointed; so that he may entitle himself to the surplus. In other words, does such an election induce an absolute forfeiture, or only impose an obligation on the renouncing party to indemnify the claimants, whom he disappoints ? There is to be found in the authorities much contrariety of opinion, incidentally expressed, upon this point. But the fair result of the modern leading decisions is, that in such a case there is not an absolute forfeiture ; but there is a duty of compensation, (at least where the case admits of compensation,) or its equivalent ;<sup>1</sup> and that the surplus, after such compensation, does not devolve as an undisposed of residuum by the will, but belongs to the donee ; the purpose being satisfied, for which alone Courts of Equity will control his legal right.<sup>1</sup> In this respect, the doctrine of Courts of Equity

the Registers, to enable me to interpret the language of the Court, as it appears in the reports, by looking at the decrees : but my present opinion, subject to contradiction upon such a search, and to what may be urged on hearing the cause, is, that a man, claiming under a marriage settlement, is a purchaser under it ; and, if he will not give the price intended by the parties to be paid at his cost, he cannot take under it ; and therefore, this defendant must give up altogether the estates comprised in this settlement, if he chooses to insist on his title to the Lawford estate. In one of the latest cases, Thellusson v. Woodford, where this doctrine is very ably discussed, it is laid down generally, that a person shall not claim an interest under an instrument, without giving full effect to that instrument, as far as he can ; and therefore having an interest under a will, shall not be permitted to defeat the disposition, where it is in his power, and yet take under the will ; the principle of election being plain and intelligible, that, if a person being about to dispose of his own property, includes in his disposition, either from mistake or not, property of another, an implication arises, that the benefit under that will shall be taken upon the terms of giving effect to the whole disposition. That was upon a will ; yet there is authority enough to say, that in that case the party is only to give up sufficient to compensate those who are disappointed : but my difficulty on a marriage settlement is, that it operates a contract by the parties for all who are to take under it ; and how one shall take the subject and retain the price. I doubt, whether the principle, stated by Lord Chief Justice De Grey, ‘ that the equity of this Court is to sequester the devised interest quousque, until satisfaction is made to the disappointed devisee,’ can apply to such a case as this. Is it possible in a Court of Equity to say, that, where a man purchases his wife’s estate for the issue of the marriage, his son shall be permitted to withhold the price, and disappoint that contract of which he takes the benefit ?” But see Mr. Belt’s note to Freke v. Lord Barrington, 3 Bro. Ch. R. 285, note (3.)

differs, or has been supposed to differ, from that laid down in the Civil Law. In that law, (it is said,) an election against the will amounts to an absolute renunciation and forfeiture of all the bounty given by the will ; and compensation to the disappointed claimants is unknown.<sup>1</sup>

From what has been stated by Swanston in a preceding note, (1 Swanst. 396, note,) the Civil Law is, in his view, different ; the election against the will being a forfeiture of the whole bounty of the testator. Mr. Sugden (Sugden on Powers, ch. 6, § 2 p. 380, 381, 3d edit.) insists, that the true rule in the English Law is, or should be, the same.

<sup>1</sup> Ante § 1079.—Mr. Swanston's note to Dillon v. Parker, 1 Swanst. 396, 2.—The propriety of this doctrine of Courts of Equity, in regard to both points, admits of a most ample vindication, however artificial it may at first seem, upon a superficial survey. It has been expounded and vindicated by the same learned writer in a masterly commentary ; and his language scarcely admits of abridgment, without injury to its force. " Assuming," says he, " that the doctrine of election is equitable only, the infliction of forfeiture on a devisee, electing to take against the will, beyond the extent of compensation to those, whom his election disappoints, would be inconsistent with the principle, on which the doctrine rests. By the assumption, the devise of the testator's property has vested the legal estate in the devisee. But a Court of Equity, (in the contemplation of which his conscience is affected by the implied condition,) interfering to control his legal right, for the purpose of executing the intention of the testator, is justified in its interference, so far only as that purpose requires. In the common case of election to take against a will, containing a devise of the property of the testator to his heir, and a second devise of the property of the heir to a stranger, the express intention of the testator, that the heir should enjoy the subject of the first devise, and the stranger, the subject of the second, is defeated by the refusal of the heir to convey the latter. And a Court of Equity, therefore, restrains him in the enjoyment of the first, till the condition, under which, in the contemplation of that Court, it was conferred on him, is satisfied. The intention of the testator having become impracticable in the prescribed form, is executed by approximation, or, in the technical phrase, cy pres. The devise to the stranger, rendered void as a gift of the specific subject, is effectuated as a gift of value, and effectuated at the expense of the heir, § 1086. In regard to the point, when an election may be insisted on, or not, every thing must

by whose interference its strict purport has been defeated. By this arrangement, the intention of the testator in favor of the stranger, though defeated in form, is, in substance, accomplished; his intention, in favor of the heir, equally express, remains to be considered. If the value of the estate retained by the heir exceeds the value of the estate designed for him, his own act is his indemnity. The benefit, which he enjoys, transcends the intention of the testator. But if the value of the estate, of which the Court deprives him, exceeds the value of the estate, of which he deprives the devisee, what disposition is to be made of the surplus? Considered as a gift of value, (and on that principle the equitable arrangement is founded,) the devise to the stranger entitles him to an equal amount; but is no authority for bestowing on him more. And the undisputed intention of the testator being, that the subjects of both devises should be enjoyed by the heir and the devisee, what is not transferred to the devisee must remain with the heir. A Court of Equity, which assumes jurisdiction to mitigate the rigor of legal conditions, and substitute for a formal a substantial performance, would act with little consistency in enforcing by the technical doctrine of forfeiture, to the eventual disappointment of the testator's intention, a condition, not expressed in the will, but supplied by the construction of the Court for the single purpose of executing that presumed intention. In the instance of pecuniary claims, the question can scarcely arise; since, in a choice between two sums of money, no probable motive exists for electing the smaller. But supposing that case, as a gift to a stranger of the benefit of a settlement, under which the heir of the testator was entitled to £1000, and a bequest of £5000 to the heir, and election by him to take under the settlement; by the deduction of £1000 from the bequest, in satisfaction of the disappointed legatee, and by payment to the heir of the remaining £4000, together with the sum due under the settlement, the intention of the testator would be executed in substance, though not in form. The heir would take £5000, and the legatee £1000. By any other arrangement that intention, which must inevitably be violated in form, would be substantially defeated. The case of specific gifts may, indeed, involve some difficulty of appreciation, by the existence of local attachments, which admit neither accurate estimation nor adequate compensation. But it is on the principle of appreciation, that the Court interferes, to transfer to one party that, which is expressly, and at law effectually, given to another. And the difficulty has been repeatedly encountered. Should any case present impediments of this nature practically insurmountable, the doctrine of compensation might become, in that instance, inapplicable; but would not for that reason cease to be the general rule of the Court. By the doctrine of compensation, and the process of seques-

(it is obvious,) depend upon the language of the particular will; and it is difficult, therefore, to lay down many general rules on the subject. On the one hand, it may be stated, that, in order to raise a case of election, there must be a clear intention expressed on the part of the testator to give that, which is not his property.<sup>1</sup> A mere recital in a will, that A. is entitled to certain property, but not declaring the intention of the testator to give it to him, would not be a sufficient demonstration of his intention to raise an election.<sup>2</sup> So, if a debtor, by his will, should recite the amount of the debt, and erroneously calculate the sum, and direct the payment of it, and also should bequeath to the creditor a legacy; in such a case the creditor would not be put to his election. But he might claim both, and dispute the calculation of the amount; for in such a case, it is not clear, that the testator did not mean to pay the full amount of the actual debt.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1087. Upon the same ground, a case of election cannot ordinarily arise, where property is devised in general terms; as, a devise of "all my real estate in A.," which estate is subject to the claims of a devisee or legatee; for it is not apparent, that he meant to dispose of any property, but what was strictly his own, subject to that charge.

tration for executing it, (though justly described as a strong operation,) the intention of the testator is, so far as circumstances admit, effected. By the doctrine of forfeiture, that intention would be defeated. 1 Swanst. R. note, p. 441, 442.

§ 1088. Again; If a testator should bequeath property to his wife, manifestly with the intention of its being in satisfaction of her dower, it would create a case of election.<sup>1</sup> But such an intention must be clear and free from ambiguity. And it would not be inferred from the mere fact of the testator's making a general disposition of all his property, although he should give his wife a legacy; for he might intend to give only what was strictly his own, subject to dower. There is no repugnancy in such a bequest.<sup>2</sup> Besides; the right to dower being in itself a clear legal right, an intent to exclude that right by a voluntary gift ought to be demonstrated, either by express words, or by clear and manifest implication. In order to exclude it, the instrument itself ought to contain some provision, inconsistent with the operation of such legal right.<sup>3</sup>

Lord Langdale said; "The principle, applicable to cases of this kind, is, that, where a testator makes provision for his widow out of his real estates, she will not be excluded from dower, unless the enjoyment of dower, together with the provision made by the will, appears to be inconsistent with the intention of the testator, as it is to be collected from the language of the will. The application of this principle has frequently occasioned considerable difficulty, and the cases are somewhat conflicting. A rent charge to a wife has been held not to be a bar of dower in the absence of circumstances showing an intention to exclude her from it." Lord Redesdale's remarks also on this point, in Birmingham v. Kirwan, 2 Sch. & Lefr. 452, deserve to be cited at large. "The principle," says he, "then, that the wife cannot have both dower, and what is given in lieu of dower, being acknowledged at law, as well as in Equity, the only question in such cases must be, whether the provision alleged to have been given in satisfaction of dower was so given, or not. If the provision results from contract, the question will be simply, whether that was part of the contract. But if the provision be voluntary, a pure gift, the intention must either be expressed in the form of the gift, or must be inferred from the terms of it. It is, however, to be collected from all the cases, that as the right to dower is in itself a clear legal right, an intent to exclude that right by voluntary gift must be demonstrated either by express words, or by clear and manifest implication. If there be any thing ambiguous or doubtful; if the Court cannot say, that it was clearly the intention to exclude; then, the averment, that the gift was made in lieu of dower, cannot be supported. And to make a case of election, that is necessary; for a gift is to be taken as pure until a condition appear. This I take to be the ground of all the decisions. Hitchen v. Hitchen, Prec. Ch. 133, proceeds clearly on this ground; and all the cases seem to have followed it. And the only question made in all the cases is, whether an intention, not expressed by apt words, could be collected from the terms of the instrument. Cases of this description can be used only to assist the judgment of the Court, in deciding what may be deemed sufficient manifestation of intention. And the result of all the cases of implied intention seems to be, that the instrument must contain some provision, inconsistent with the assertion of a right to demand a third of the lands, to be set out by metes and bounds, &c."—Mr. Eden's note on this subject to Arnold v. Kempstead, 2 Eden, R. 237, is very valuable.

§ 1089. It is upon a similar ground, that the doctrine of election has been held not to be applicable to cases, where the testator has some present interest in the estate disposed of by him, although it is not entirely his own. In such a case, unless there is an intention clearly manifested in the will, or (as it is sometimes called) a demonstration plain, or necessary implication on his part, to dispose of the whole estate, including the interests of third persons, he will be presumed to intend to dispose of that, which he might lawfully dispose of, and of no more.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1090. Other exceptions may easily be put to the general doctrine of election. Thus, for instance, if a man should, by his will, give a child, or other person, a legacy or portion, in lieu or satisfaction of a particular thing expressed; that would not exclude him from other benefits, although it might happen to be contrary to the will; for Courts of *Equity will not [*353] construe it, as meant in lieu of every thing else, when the testator has said it is in lieu of a particular thing.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1091. Again; if a legatee should decline one benefit, charged with a portion, given him by a will, he would not be bound to decline another benefit, unclogged with any burthen, given him by the same will.<sup>2</sup> So, if a legatee cannot obtain a particular benefit, designed for him by a will, except by contradicting some part of it, he will not be precluded by such contradiction from claiming other benefits under it. The ground of all these exceptions is, that it is not apparent from the face of the will, that the testator meant to exclude the party from all benefits under the will, unless in all respects the purposes of the will were fulfilled by him.<sup>3</sup> But, if it should be so appa-

rent, or fairly inferrible, from the nature of the different benefits conferred by the will, there the legatee would be put to his election, to take all, or to reject all.<sup>1</sup>

[*354] *§ 1092. It may be added, that the doctrine of election is not applied to the case of creditors. They may take the benefit of a devise for payment of debts, and also enforce their legal claims upon other funds disposed of by the will; for a creditor claims not as a mere volunteer, but for a valuable consideration, and ex debito justitiæ.<sup>2</sup>

thing else, when he has said a particular thing.' (Lord Hardwicke, East v. Cook, 2 Ves. 33.) Upon that principle it was decided in Bor v. Bor, 3 Bro. P. C. ed. Toml. 167 (see Vern. & Scriv. 53, 54), that the testator, having, by express proviso, made a disposition, in the event of his not possessing power to devise certain estates, no implied condition arose against the heir, disappointing the devisee, but complying with the proviso. So, a legatee, who cannot obtain a benefit designed for him by the will, except by contradicting some part of it, will not be precluded, by such contradiction, from claiming other benefits under it. (Huggings v. Alexander, cited 2 Ves. 31.) The intention being equal in favor of each part of the testamentary disposition, no reason is afforded for controlling one, in order to accomplish the other. Under a will, containing a bequest to the testator's widow in satisfaction of all dower or thirds, which she might claim out of his real or personal estate, or either of them, and a residuary bequest, which failed, the widow, accepting the specific bequest, was not excluded from her distributive share of the undisposed residue. For, if the Court could, (which it cannot,) on a question between the next of kin, advert to the will, it would find there no evidence of an intention to exclude the widow in their favor. (Pickering v. Lord Stamford, 3 Ves. jr. 332, 492.) Other exceptions might be mentioned; as, for example, the doctrine of Election does not apply, as between appointees under a power executed by will, where there is an excessive execution of the power, so that it is void as to some of the appointees, and good as to others. In such cases the appointees, whose shares are valid, will participate equally with those, whose shares are void, in the property of which the appointment fails. 1 Powell on Devises by Jarman, 430, note (b); Id. 440; *Bristow v. § 1093. On the other hand, it is sufficient to raise a case of election in Equity, that the testator does dispose of property, which is not his own, without any inquiry, whether he did so, knowing it not to be his own, or whether he did so under the erroneous supposition, that it was his own. If the property was known not to be his own, it would be a clear case of election. If it was supposed erroneously to be his own, still there is no certainty, that his intention to devise it would have been changed by the mere knowledge of the true state of the title; and the Court will not speculate upon it.<sup>1</sup> So, although a part of (12 Ves. 154,) speaking on this subject, says, "Another objection, made for the widow, is, that the creditors take a benefit under the will of the testator by the devise for payment of the debts generally; and, therefore, they shall not be permitted to disappoint that part of the will, by which a provision is made for the widow; that is, that the doctrine of election is to be applied to creditors. It is utterly inapplicable. It never has been so applied; and half the decrees upon marshalling assets are wrong, if there is any ground for that claim. It is true, creditors by simple contract cannot have any right, except by marshalling against the real estate; unless the testator thinks fit to devise it for satisfaction of the debts generally. Yet they have never been held to stand in the same light, as legatees. When the testator lets in such creditors by a charge, it is now settled, whatever doubt may formerly have been entertained upon it, that creditors, under a charge of debts and legacies, are to be paid in preference to legatees; and, though the Statute of Fraudulent Devises would undoubtedly prevent a devise for payment of legacies, so as to disappoint creditors by specialty, it would not prevent a devise for payment of debts generally; though the effect would be to let in creditors by simple contract, to the prejudice of creditors by specialty. If there is any foundation for this doctrine of election, the case never could have happened, where there was a charge upon any part of the estate for debts; whereas the creditors by specialty are permitted, and the creditors by simple contract are by marshalling permitted, to follow the devised estates, if there are no estates descended; or, if the descended estates have been applied. In this case the decree is wrong upon this doctrine; for the legatees are disappointed by the specialty creditors taking the personal estate." See also Mr. Swanston's note to Dillon v. Parker, 1 Swanst. R. 408; Day v. Day, 2 P. Will. 418; Earl of Darlington v. Pulteney, 3 Ves. jr. 385; Carr v. Eastabrooke, 3 Ves. 564.

the benefits, proposed by a will, should fail, the remainder may constitute a case for an election.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1094. Upon the ground of intention also, where a testator has an absolute power to dispose of the subject, and an intention is clearly expressed in his will to exercise that power, it will be sufficient to raise a case of election.<sup>2</sup> Therefore, if a testator, having an absolute power to dispose of an estate, should devise it to his heir ; although in such a case the heir would take by descent, and the devise be inoperative, whether he admitted or disputed the will ; yet, as to another estate of the heir, which was disposed of by the testator in his will without title, he would be put to his election. For, in every such case, the heir ought to elect between the estate devised, which comes to him by the bounty of the testator, and his own claims, which are adverse to the will. The estate, descend-

Forsitan, enim, si scivisset alienam rem esse, non legasset. Inst. ing to the heir under an election made by him to claim against the will, ought to be subject in his hands to the same implied condition, as if he had taken it by devise.<sup>1</sup> So, if upon the language of a will it is apparent, that it is the testator's intention to dispose of all his property at the time of his death, that intention will be considered as raising a case of election in an heir, who claims title to the after-purchased real estate of the testator, and at the same time is a devisee under the will. Thus, where a testator made a devise and bequest of all his estate and effects, both real and personal, which he should die possessed of, interested in, or entitled to, to trustees for the benefit of his grandchildren, one of whom was his heir at law ; and he afterwards purchased other real estate ; it was held, that upon the true interpretation of the words of the will, the testator meant to pass to the trustees, not only the estates he had at the date of the will, but all that he should own and possess at the time of his death ; and, therefore, the heir at law ought to be put to his election.<sup>2</sup>

*§ 1095. It was at one time supposed, that [*357] the doctrine of election was not applicable to the case of persons, claiming a remote interest in property, disposed of in a manner adverse to other rights ; as for instance, to a remainderman, claiming after an estate tail in the property disposed of.<sup>1</sup> The principle of such an exception seems extremely questionable ; for (as has been well remarked,) the doctrine of election is applied to interests, not in respect of their amount, but of their inconsistency with the testator's intention. And to assume their remoteness, or their value, as a criterion of the existence or absence of that intention, would introduce great uncertainty, which, in questions of property, is perhaps the worst defect of the law.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1096. It may be added, that when a party by his will disposes of the absolute right in property, in which he has a limited interest only, he necessarily shows an intention to extinguish all other conflicting adverse rights, whether they are present or future, vested or contingent ; and, consequently, it must be wholly unimportant, whether the interests so extinguished are great or small, immediate or remote, valuable or trifling. The duty of election, then, so far as intention goes, is equally the same in strength and presumption in all cases of this sort ; as it imports the gift of one thing to be in lieu or extinguishment of the other. Accordingly, the doctrine is now well established, that the *doctrine of election is equally applicable to all interests, whether they are immediate or remote, vested or contingent, of value or of no value ; and whether these interests are in real or in personal estate.<sup>3</sup>

Jurisd. B. 3, Pt. 2, ch. 5, p. 537.—A curious point has arisen in regard to the doctrine of election, in cases where a will is not executed, so as to pass real estate under the statute of frauds, and yet is good as a will of personalty. The question, is whether the heir can take a bequest of personalty under the will, without at the same time confirming the devises made of the real estate. It has been decided, that in a will of freehold estates, not so executed as to pass real estate, no such case of election arises; and that the devises are to be deemed blotted out of the will, and the will to be read, as if they were not contained in it; although it would be otherwise, if there was an express condition annexed to the bequest of the personalty. But in case of a specific devise of unsundered copyhold, the heir would be put to his election. Sir Wm. Grant, in Brodie v. Barry, (2 Ves. & Beam. 130,) said; "I do not understand, why a will, though not executed, so as to pass real estate, should not be read for the purpose of discovering in it an implied condition concerning real estate, annexed to a gift of personal property; as it is admitted, it must, when such condition is expressly annexed to such gift. For, if by a sound construction such condition is rightly inferred from the whole instrument, the effect seems to be the same, as if it were expressed in words. And then, if it be rightly decided, that a will, defectively executed, is not to be read against the freehold heir, I have been sometimes inclined to doubt, whether any will ought to be read against the copyhold heir; a will, however executed, being as inoperative for the conveyance of copyhold estate (without a surrender), as a will defectively executed is for the conveyance of a freehold estate." Lord Kenyon, in Cary v. Askew (1 Cox, R. 244), and Lord Eldon in Sheldon v. Goodrich (8 Ves. 496, 497), expressed doubts of a similar nature. But all these Judges admitted the distinction to be clearly established by the authorities. See Hearle v. Greenbank, 3 Atk. 715; S. C. 1 Ves. 306, 307; Thellusson v. Woodford, 13 Ves. 220, 221; Boughton v. Boughton, 2 Ves. 12; Allen v. Poulton, 1 Ves. 121; Cookes v. Hellier, 1 Ves. 234; Mr. Swanston's note, 1 Swanst. decided upon its own particular circumstances, rather than upon any definite abstract doctrine. Before any presumption of an election can arise, it is necessary to show, that the party acting, or acquiescing, was cognizant of his rights.<sup>1</sup> When this is ascertained affirmatively, it may be further necessary to consider, whether the party intended an election ;<sup>2</sup> whether the party was competent to make an election ; for a feme covert, an infant or a lunatic will not be bound by an election ;<sup>3</sup> whether he can restore the other persons, affected by his claim, to the same situation, as if the acts had not been performed, or the acquiescence had not existed ; and, whether there has been such a lapse of time, as ought to preclude the Court from entering upon such inquiries, upon its general doctrine of not entertaining suits upon stale demands, or after long delays.<sup>4</sup>

§ 1098. Questions have also arisen in Courts of Equity, as to the time when, and the circumstances, under which, an election may be required to be made. The general rule is, that the party is not bound to make any election, until all the circumstances are known, and [*360] the state and condition and *value of the funds are clearly ascertained ; for, until so known and ascertained, it is impossible for the party to make a discriminating and deliberate choice, such as ought to bind him in reason and justice.<sup>5</sup> If, therefore, he should make a choice in ignorance of the real state of the funds, or under a misconception of the extent of the claims on the fund, elected by him, it will not be conclusive on him.<sup>1</sup> And, on the other hand, he will be entitled, in order to make an election, to maintain a bill in Equity for a discovery, and to have all the necessary accounts taken to ascertain the real state of the funds.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1099. These remarks may suffice on the subject of election, a doctrine of no inconsiderable nicety and difficulty in its actual administration in Equity ; and we shall now proceed to the kindred doctrine of SATISFACTION. Satisfaction may be defined in Equity to be the donation of a thing, with the intention, expressed or implied, that it is to be an extinguishment of some existing right or claim of the donee. It usually arises in Courts of Equity, as a matter of presumption, where a man, being under an obligation to do an act, (as to pay money,) does that by will, which is capable of being considered as a performance or satisfaction of it, the thing performed being ejusdem generis with that, which he has engaged to perform. Under such circumstances, and in the absence of all counter-vailing *circumstances, the ordinary presump- [*361] tion in Courts of Equity is, that the testator has done the act in satisfaction of his obligation.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1100. It is certainly not a little difficult to vindicate the extent, to which this doctrine has been carried in Courts of Equity, as a matter of presumption.

What is given by a will ought, from the character of the instrument, ordinarily to be deemed as given as a mere bounty, unless a contrary intention is apparent on the face of the instrument;<sup>1</sup> or, as it has been well expressed, whatever is given by a will is, primâ facie, to be intended as a bounty or benevolence.<sup>2</sup> Under such circumstances, the natural course of reasoning would be, that, in order to displace this presumption, a clear expression of a contrary intention should be made out on the face of the will.<sup>3</sup> But the doctrine of Courts of Equity has proceeded upon an opposite ground; and the donation is held to be a satisfaction, unless that conclusion is repelled by the nature of the gift, the terms of the will, or the attendant circumstances. For, it has been said, that a man shall be intended to be just, before he is kind; and when two duties happen to interfere at the same point of time, that, which is the most honest and best, is to be preferred.<sup>4</sup>

§ 1101. But, although this may be fair reasoning, where there is a deficiency of assets to satisfy both claims or duties; yet it is utterly impossible to apply [*362] it to the great mass of cases, in which the doctrine of implied satisfaction has prevailed, and where there has been no deficiency of assets to discharge all the claims. The truth is, that the doctrine was introduced originally upon very unsatisfactory grounds; and it now stands more upon authority than upon principle. And a strong disposition has been manifested in modern times not to enlarge the sphere of its operation; but to lay hold of any circumstances to establish exceptions to it.<sup>1</sup> We shall presently see, that it is somewhat differently applied in cases of creditors, properly so called, from what it is in cases of portions and advancements to children; for, in the latter cases, the presumption of satisfaction is more readily entertained, and acted upon more extensively, than in the former.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1102. It is obvious from this description of the doctrine of satisfaction, that the presumption is not conclusive, but may be rebutted by other circumstances attending the will. If the benefit given to the donee, possessing the right or claim, is different in specie from that, to which he is entitled, the presumption of its being given in satisfaction will not arise, unless there be an express declaration, or a clear inference, from other parts of the will, that such is the intention of the testator.<sup>3</sup> The presumption may be rebutted not only by intrinsic evidence, thus derived from the terms of the will itself; but it may also be rebutted by extrinsic evidence, as by declarations of the testator touching the subject, or by written papers explaining or confirming the intention.<sup>4</sup>

§ 1103. Thus, for example, land given by a will is not deemed to be given in satisfaction of money due to the devisee; and money given by a will is not deemed to be given in satisfaction of an interest of the legatee in land; unless there is something more in the will explanatory of the intention of the testator.<sup>1</sup> Accordingly, it was laid down by Lord Hardwicke, in respect to the doctrine of satisfaction, that when a bequest is taken to be by way of satisfaction for money already due to the donee, the thing given in satisfaction must be of the same nature, and attended with the same certainty, as the thing, in lieu of which it is given; and that land is not to be taken in satisfaction for money, or money for land.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1104. In regard also to cases, where the thing given is ejusdem generis with that due to the donee, the presumption, that it is given in satisfaction, does not necessarily arise; nor is it, as has been already intimated, universally conclusive. To make the presumption of satisfaction hold in any such cases, it is necessary, that the thing substituted should not be less beneficial, either in amount, or certainty, or value, or time of enjoyment, or otherwise, than the thing due or contracted for.<sup>3</sup> The notion of satisfaction implies the doing or giving of something equivalent to the right extinguished. And it would be a very unjustifiable course to arraign the justice of the testator, by presuming, that he meant to ask a favor, instead of performing a duty.

§ 1105. But where the thing substituted is ejusdem generis, and it is clearly of a much greater value, and much more beneficial to the donee, than his own claim; there, the presumption of an intended satisfac-

§ 1106. We are, however, carefully to distinguish between cases of satisfaction, properly so called, and cases of the performance of agreements or covenants. In the latter cases, the acts of the party are strictly in pursuance of the contract ; in the former they are a substitute, or equivalent for the contract, and not intended as a fulfilment of it.<sup>3</sup> Some cases, which have actually passed into judgment, may illustrate this distinction. Thus, where A., on his marriage, by articles covenanted to leave his wife B., if she should survive him, £620 ; and that his executors should pay it in three months after his decease ; A. died intestate, and without issue, whereby his wife (who survived him,) became entitled to a moiety of his personal estate, which was more than the £620. The question was, whether the distributive share of B. should be deemed a satisfaction, or rather a due performance, of the covenant ; for the covenant was not broken, the wife being administratrix. And it was held to be a due performance, although it is called in the report a satisfaction.<sup>1</sup> So, where A. covenanted by marriage articles, that his executors should in three months after his decease pay his wife £3000 ; and by his will he gave all his property to his executors, in trust to divide it in such ways, shares, and proportions, as to them should appear right. The trust failed,

Thomas Plumer observes, supposes intention ; it is something different from the subject of the contract, and substituted for it. And the question always arises, was the thing intended as a substitute for the thing covenanted ? a question entirely of intent. But with reference to performance, the question is, has that identical act, which the party contracted to do, been done ? Mr. Cox, in his edition of Peere Williams's Reports, has favored the profession with a valuable note upon this subject." See also Devese v. Pontet, Prep. Ch. by Finch, p. 240, note ; *S. whereby his estate became divisible according to the statute of distributions ; and his wife survived him. It was held, that her distributive share, being greater than £3000, was a satisfaction of the covenant.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1107. The ground of each of these decisions seems to have been, that as there was no breach of the covenant, and the widow, by mere operation of law, through the statute of distributions, received from her husband a larger sum than he had covenanted to pay her, it ought to be held a full performance of his covenant. These decisions do not seem to stand on a very firm foundation, as illustrations of the doctrine of satisfaction ; for, (as has been well observed) considerable doubt might have been entertained, whether of two claims so distinct, the satisfaction of one ought to be considered as a satisfaction of the other. But Courts of Equity would now hardly deem it fit to re-examine, and upon principle discuss the point, thus settled by them, which has been at rest for more than a century.<sup>2</sup> The distinction, however, between performance of a covenant, and satisfaction of a covenant, which grows out of these decisions may not be unimportant ; for there may be a presumptive performance pro tanto in such cases, which will be recognised in Equity, whatever may be the rule as to a presumptive satisfaction pro tanto in other cases.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1108. And here it may be remarked, that the doctrine of satisfaction, and also of performance of covenants, arising from bequests in wills, was well known in the Civil Law ;<sup>1</sup> and it was probably derived from that source with some variations into our jurisprudence. [367] Thus, in *the Digest, a case is put of a father, covenanting on his daughter's marriage to give her a certain sum, as a dotal portion ; and afterwards leaving a legacy to her to the same amount ; and it was there held, that it amounted to a satisfaction of the portion.<sup>2</sup> And other cases are put of a like nature, where parol evidence was held admissible to establish the intention of satisfaction.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1109. Questions of satisfaction usually come before Courts of Equity in three classes of cases; (1.) in cases of portions secured by a marriage settlement; (2.) in cases of portions given by will, and an advancement of the donee afterwards in the life of the testator; (3.) in cases of legacies to creditors. It may be convenient, as well as proper, in our brief survey of this subject, to examine the doctrine separately in respect to each of these classes; as the application of it is not, or, at least, may not be, precisely the same throughout in all of them.<sup>4</sup> The first class may be illustrated by stating the case, where a portion or provision is secured to a child by a marriage settlement, or otherwise ; and the parent, (or person standing in loco parentis) afterwards by will gives the same child a legacy, without expressly directing it to be in satisfaction of such portion or provision. In such a case, if the legacy be of a sum as great as, or greater than, the portion or provision; if it be ejusdem generis; if it be equally certain with the latter, and subject to no contingency not applicable to both; and if it be shown, that it is not given for a different purpose; then it will be deemed a complete satisfaction.<sup>1</sup> If the legacy be less in amount than the portion or provision; or if it be payable at a different period or periods; then although there is some diversity of opinion upon the subject, the weight of authority is, that it may be or will be deemed a satisfaction pro tanto, or in full, according to the circumstances.<sup>2</sup>

Rice*, 2 Russ. & Mylne, 267.—In this last case Sir John Leach, said; "The rule of the Court is, as, in reason, I think it ought to be, that if a father makes a provision for a child by settlement on her marriage, and afterwards makes a provision for the same child by his will, it is prima facie to be presumed, that he does not mean a double provision. But this presumption may be repelled or fortified by intrinsic evidence derived from the nature of the two provisions, or by extrinsic evidence. Where the two provisions are of the same nature, or there are but slight differences, the two instruments afford intrinsic evidence against a double provision. Where the two provisions are of a different nature, the two instruments afford intrinsic evidence in favor of a double provision. But in either case extrinsic evidence is admissible of the real intention of the testator. It is not possible to define, what are to be considered as slight differences between two provisions. Slight differences are such as, in the opinion of the judge, leave the two provisions substantially of the same nature; and every judge must decide that question for himself."—See also *Jones v. B. 4, Pt. 1, ch. 1, § 5, note (l); 2 Roper on Legacies, by White, ch. 18, § 1, 2, p. 69 to 95.—It is sometimes provided in marriage settlements, that, if any advancement on marriage, or otherwise, shall be made by a parent in his lifetime, such advancement shall be deemed made as a part, or the whole, of the portion provided for in the settlement, unless the contrary appear in writing. In such cases it has been made a question, whether a legacy, given by the parent by will, the doubts, which may be justly entertained, as to the correctness of the reasoning, by which Courts of Equity have been led to these results.<sup>1</sup> As an original question, at least where the assets are sufficient to satisfy the portion, as well as the legacy, the natural presumption would be, that the testator intended the latter, as a bounty in addition to the duty already contracted for ; a bounty, fit for a parent to bestow, [*369] and far more reputable to his *sense of moral and religious obligation, than a mere dry performance of his positive contract, recognised by law, and resting on a valuable consideration. But here, as well as in many other cases, we must be content to declare, Ita lex scripta est;—It is established, although it may not be entirely approved. Even a small variance in the time of payment, or other trifling differences, where the value is substantially the same, will not vary the application of the rule, as the present inclination of Courts of Equity is against raising double portions.<sup>2</sup> amounts to a satisfaction pro tanto, as an advancement or portion in his lifetime. It has been decided, that it is. (Onslow v. Mitchell, 18 Ves. 490, 494 ; *Leake v. This whole subject is very fully considered in Roper on Legacies, by White, vol. 2, ch. 18, p. 68 to 108. The doctrine, as now held, is thus summed up. “Where a parent is under obligation, by articles of settlement, to provide portions for his children, and he afterwards by will or codicil, makes a provision for those children, it is a well established rule reference to the case, where a parent, or other person in loco parentis, bequeaths a legacy to a child or grandchild, and afterwards in his lifetime, gives a portion, or makes a provision, for the same child or grandchild without expressing it to be in lieu of the legacy. In such a case, if the portion so received, or the provision so made, on marriage or otherwise, be equal to, or exceed, the amount of the legacy; if it be certain, and not merely contingent; if no other distinct object be pointed out; and if it be ejusdem generis; then it will be deemed a satisfaction of the legacy, or, as it is more properly expressed, it will be held an ademption of the legacy.<sup>1</sup> If the portion of Equity, that such subsequent testamentary provision shall be considered a satisfaction or performance of the obligation. We have seen, that, upon questions of satisfaction of debts by legacies, trifling points of difference between the debts and legacies were adjudged sufficient to repel the presumption of satisfaction. But, with respect to the satisfaction of portions, the rule of presumption is much more favored; the inclination of the Court of Equity being against raising double portions. If, therefore, the legacies be less in amount than the portions, or payable at different periods, the legacies will, notwithstanding, be considered satisfactions, either in full or in part, according to circumstances. But, though these circumstances of difference are considered insufficient to rebut the presumption of satisfaction; yet, where the legacy is contingent, or given with a view to some other purpose, the rule of the Court is different; and such legacies are not considered as a satisfaction. The inclination, however, is so strong against double portions, that it has been decided that, although no legacy is given by a will; yet if, by the intestacy of the parent, a distributive share of his personal or any real estate devolves upon the child, of equal or greater value than the portion, it shall be a satisfaction of the portion."

note (1); Trimmer v. Bayne, 7 Ves. 515; Ellison v. Cookson, 2 Bro. Ch. R. 308, 309. Of course the contrary is true, where the legacy is not certain, but contingent; where it is not eiusdem generis; and where it is stated to be for other objects. 2 Fonbl. Eq. B. 4, Pt. 2 ch. 1, § 1, note (a). The question may sometimes arise, who is properly deemed to stand in loco parentis to another. It was held by the Vice Chancellor (Sir L. Shadwell) that no person can be deemed to stand in loco parentis to a child, whose father is living and who resides with and is maintained by the father, according to his means. He added, it may be very different, where the father, though living, does not maintain the child, and the latter does not live with him, but lives with the person assuming to stand in loco parentis; Powys v. Mansfield, 6 Sim. R. 528. But upon an appeal to the Lord Chancellor (Lord Cottenham) this decree was reversed. On that occasion his Lordship said; "No doubt the authorities leave in some obscurity the question, as to what is to be considered as meant by the expression, universally adopted, of one in loco parentis. Lord Eldon, however, in Ex parte Pye has given to it a definition, which I readily adopt, not only because it proceeds from his high authority, but, because it seems to me to embrace all that is necessary to work out and carry into effect the object and meaning of the rule. Lord Eldon says, it is a person "meaning to put himself in loco parentis; in the situation of the person described as the lawful father of the child." But this definition must, I conceive, be considered as applicable to those parental offices and duties, to which the subject in question has reference, namely, to the office and duty of the parent to make provision for the child. The offices and duties of a parent are infinitely various, some having no connection whatever with making a provision for a child; and it would be most illogical, from the mere exercise of any of such offices or duties by one not the father, to infer an intention in such person to assume also the duty of providing for the child. The relative situation of the friend and of the father may make this unnecessary, and the other benefits' most essential. Sir William Grant's definition is, "A person assuming the parental character or discharging parental duties," which may seem not to differ much from Lord Eldon's definition, namely, the referring to the intention, rather than to the act of the party. The Vice-Chancellor says, it must be a person, who has so acted towards the child, as that he has thereby imposed upon himself a moral obligation to provide for it; and that the designation will not hold, where the child has a father with whom it resides, and by whom it is maintained. This seems to infer, that the locus parentis, assumed by the stranger, must have reference to the pecuniary wants of the child; and that lord Eldon's definition is to be so understood; and so far I agree with it. But I think the other circum-

to; and if the difference between the amounts be slight, it may be deemed a complete satisfaction or ademp-

stances required are not necessary to work out the principle of the rule or to effectuate its object. The rule, both as applied to a father and to one in loco parentis, is founded upon the presumed intention. A father is supposed to intend to do, what he is in duty bound to do, namely, to provide for his child according to his means. So, one, who has assumed that part of the office of a father, is supposed to intend to do what he has assumed to himself the office of doing. If the assumption of the character be established, the same inference and presumption must follow. The having so acted towards a child as to raise a moral obligation to provide for it, affords a strong inference in favor of the fact of the assumption of the character; and the child having a father, with whom it resides, and by whom it is maintained, affords some inference against it; but neither are conclusive. If, indeed, the Vice-Chancellor's definition were to be adopted, it would still be to be considered, whether, in this case, Sir John Barrington had not subjected himself to a moral obligation to provide for his brother's children, and whether such children can be said to have been maintained by their father. A rich unmarried uncle, taking under his protection the family of a brother, who has not the means of adequately providing for them, and furnishing, through their father, to the children, the means of their maintenance and education, may surely be said to intend to put himself, for the purpose in question, in loco parentis to the children, although they never leave their father's roof. An uncle, so taking such a family under his care, will have all the feelings, intentions, and objects, as to providing for the children, which would influence him if they were orphans. For the purpose in question, namely, providing for them, the existence of the father can make no difference. If, then, it shall appear, from an examination of the evidence, that Sir John Barrington did afford to his brother the means of maintaining, educating, and bringing up his children according to their condition of life; and that the father had no means of his own, at all adequate to that purpose; that this assistance was regular and systematic, and not confined to casual presents, the repetition of which could not be relied upon; that he held out to his brother and his family, that they were to look to him for their future provision, it will surely follow, if that were material, that Sir John Barrington had so acted towards the children as to impose upon himself a moral obligation to provide for them, and that the children were, in fact, maintained by him, and not by their father. But it has been said, that Sir John Barrington would not have been guilty of any breach of moral duty, if he had permitted the property to descend to his brother. Undoubtedly, he would not, because that would have been a very rational mode of providing for the children; but if he had reason to suppose that his brother would act so unnaturally as to leave tion.<sup>1</sup> But if the difference be large and important; there, the presumption of an intention of substituting the portion for the legacy will not be allowed to prevail.<sup>2</sup>

the property away from his children, Sir John Barrington would have been guilty of a breach of moral duty towards the children, in leaving the property absolutely to their father. I should, therefore feel, great difficulty in coming to a conclusion, that Sir John Barrington had not placed himself in loco parentis to these children, even if I thought every thing necessary for that purpose, which the Vice-Chancellor has thought to be so. Adopting, however, as I do, the definition of Lord Eldon, I proceed to consider, whether Sir John Barrington did mean to put himself in loco parentis to the children, so far as related to their future provision. Parol evidence has been offered upon two points; first, to prove the affirmative of this proposition; secondly, to prove, by declarations and acts of Sir John Barrington, that he intended the provision made by the settlement should be in substitution of that made by the will. That such evidence is admissible for the first of these purposes, appears to me necessarily to flow from the rule of presumption. If the acts of a party standing in loco parentis raise, in equity, a presumption, which could not arise from the same acts of another person, not standing in that situation, evidence must be admissible to prove or disprove the facts, upon which the presumption is depended, namely, whether, in the language of Lord Eldon, he had meant to put himself in loco parentis; and, as the fact to be tried is the intention of the party, his declarations, as well as his acts, must be admissible for that purpose. And if the evidence establish the fact, that Sir John Barrington did mean to place himself in loco parentis, it will not be material to consider, whether his declarations of intention as to the particular provision in question be admissible per se, because the presumption against the double portions, which, in that case, will arise, being attempted to be rebutted by parol testimony, may be supported by evidence of the same kind."

In this last case Lord Abinger said he knew of no distinction as to this point, whether the portion was by a will or by a deed. In Wharton v. Earl of Durham, 3 Mylne & Keen, 479, Lord Brougham said; "It is equally certain, and flows equally from the same principles, that we are not to weigh in golden scales the provisions made and to determine § 1112. The ground of this doctrine seems to be, that every such legacy is to be presumed, as intended by the testator to be a portion for the child or grandchild, whether called so or not; and that, afterwards, if he advances the same sum upon the child's marriage, or any other occasion, he does it to accomplish his original object, as a portion; and that, under such circumstances, it ought to be deemed an intended satisfaction or ademption of the legacy, rather than an intended double portion. And, where the sum ad-

against ademption, merely because the two differ in amount or even in kind. A difference of amount has never been held sufficient proof of accumulation; and it has been distinctly held, that the circumstance of the sums being payable at different times, and other differences, so they be slight, say the books, will not countervail the general presumption of an intention to adeem. The cases of Ex parte Pye and Ex parte Dubost, before Lord Eldon, Hartopp v. Hartopp, before Sir William Grant, and the discussion of the question raised on Sir Joseph Jekyll's will in favor of his niece, sufficiently illustrate this proposition. Nevertheless, no case has gone so far as to shew, that a difference such as the one in this case, will have no effect upon the application of the principle; a difference no less than this, that the one portion would have gone to the issue of any marriage contracted by the child, while the other was confined to the offspring of a single bed. On the contrary, the cases, especially Roome v. Roome, Baugh v. Read, and Spinks v. Robins, shew, that differences not greater than this, perhaps less considerable, will suffice to exclude ademption. And one of those cases (Baugh v. Read), though ill reported, shews the impossibility of extending the principle of ademption to a legacy, where the provision subsequently made was expressed to be in satisfaction of a different claim. The child was entitled to 1800*l.* under her grandfather's will, and her father had left her a legacy of 8000*l.* By her settlement the husband covenanted to release the claim to her legacy of 1800*l.* in consideration of 5000*l.* portion given by the father, which was expressed to be in satisfaction of the grandfather's legacy. It is to be observed, that the question raised there, was not, whether this should operate as a total ademption of the 8000*l.* legacy given by the father's will, but only pro tanto. However, the court held it not even to be pro tanto an ademption; and yet, after satisfying the 1800*l.* of the grandfather's will, there remained upwards of 3000*l.* over to go in ademption of the father's legacy."

vanced is less than the legacy, still it may fairly be presumed, that the testator, having acted merely in the discharge of a moral obligation, may, from a change of his own views, or of his own circumstances, be satisfied, that the portion ought to be less.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1113. Now, to say the least of it, this is extremely artificial reasoning, and such as an ingenuous mind may find it extremely difficult to follow. Lord Eldon has so characterized it. After admitting it to be the unquestionable doctrine of the Court, that, where a parent gives a legacy to a child, not stating the purpose, with reference to which he gives it, the Court understands him as giving it as a portion, he has strongly remarked ; “ And by a sort of artificial rule, in the application of which legitimate children have been very harshly treated, upon an artificial notion, that the father is paying a debt of nature, and a sort of feeling, upon what is called a leaning against double portions, if the father afterwards advances a portion on the marriage of that child, though of less [*372] amount, it is *a satisfaction of the whole or in part. And in some cases it has gone a length, consistent with the principle, but showing the fallacy of much of the reasoning, that the portion, though much less than the legacy, has been held a satisfaction in some instances, upon this ground, that the father, owing what is called a debt of nature, is the judge of that provision, by which he means to satisfy it ; and though, at the time of making the will, he thought he could not discharge that debt with less than £10,000 ; yet, by a change of his circumstances and of his sentiments upon moral obligation, it may be satisfied by the advance of a portion of £5000.”<sup>1</sup> In addition to this strong language, it may be added, that Courts of Equity make out this sort of doctrine, not upon any clear intention of the testator, any where expressed by him. But they first create the intention; and then make the parent suggest all the morals and equities of the case, upon their own artificial modes of reasoning, of which, it is not too much to say, that scarcely any testator could ever have dreamed.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Ex parte Pye, and Ex parte Dubost, 18 Ves. 151.—It is not a little remarkable, that the Lord Chancellor, in Hartop v. Whitmore, (1 P. Will. 682,) should have said; “If a father gives a daughter a portion by his will; and afterwards gives to the same daughter a portion in marriage, this, by the laws of all other nations, as well as of Great Britain, is a revocation of the portion given by the will; for it will not be intended, unless proved, that the father designed two portions to one child.” We should be glad to know, where the learned Chancellor found such a rule recognised by all nations. See also Weall v. Rice, 2 Russ. & Mylne, 251, 267; Ante, § 1110, note.

<sup>2</sup> Lord Thurlow, in Grave v. Salisbury, (1 Bro. Ch. R. 425, 426,) spoke in express disapprobation of the doctrine. “The Court,” said he, “has however, certainly presumed against double portions; and, although it has encouraged that conjecture with a degree of sharpness, I cannot quite reconcile myself to, whenever an express provision is made directly, or, as a portion, by a parent or person in loco parentis, I will not displace the rule laid down by wiser men, that it shall be a satisfaction, however reluctant I may be to follow it.” On the other hand, Sir John Leach, in Weall v. Rice, 2 Russ. & Mylne, R. 251, 267, thought the rule right; and Lord Brougham in Wharton v. the Earl of Durham, 3 Mylne & Keen, 478, expressed a similar opinion. He said; “That the presumption of law is against double portions no one questions, any more than that the rule is founded on good sense. For the parent, being only bound by a duty of imperfect obligation to make provision for the child, and being the sole judge, what that provision shall be, must, generally speaking, be supposed, when he makes a second arrangement by settlement or otherwise, to put it in the stead of a former one made by will, and not to do that twice over, which no law could compel him to do once. Nevertheless, as has oftentimes happened with legal principles, there has been a tendency to push the presumption once established beyond the bounds, which the principle it was founded upon would reasonably warrant; and because the doctrine was sound, that a second provision should be taken as substitutionary for a former one, it seems to have been almost concluded, that it never could be accumulative. At least, the leaning of the courts has frequently gone so far as to make violent presumptions against the conclusions to be plainly drawn from facts indicating an intention, which excluded the general supposition of ademption; and observations have been more than once made in this place, indicating the opinion of the Court, that the principle had been pressed quite far enough, and ought to receive no more extension. The rule, then, as it now stands, must be taken to be this;—the second provision will be held to adeem the first,—say the marriage portion to adeem the legacy,—unless, from the circumstances of the case, an intention appears, that the child or other person, towards whom the testator has placed himself in loco parentis, shall take both; and there is to be no leaning, still less any straining, against inferring such an intention circumstances, any more in this than in any other case.” The case of Wharton v. the Earl of Durham was reversed in the House of Lords. 10 Bligh, R. 526. But it left the general principle untouched.

§ 1114. It has been supposed, that the origin of this particular doctrine is to be found in the Civil Law, and that it was transferred from hence into the Equity Jurisprudence of England.<sup>1</sup> But Lord Thurlow has expressed a doubt, whether the doctrine of the Civil Law proceeds so far; and whether it is there taken up on the idea of a debt, or is not rather considered as a presumption repellable by evidence.<sup>2</sup> The language, attributed to his Lordship on this occasion, seems not exactly to express his true meaning; for, in the Equity Jurisprudence of England, the presumption may be rebutted by evidence.<sup>3</sup> His meaning probably was, that the matter was a mere matter of presumption, arising from the whole circumstances of the will; and that there was no such rule in the Civil

Law, as that in English Jurisprudence, viz., that primâ facie such a portion, subsequently given, was an ademption of the legacy. No one can doubt, that in many cases such a presumption may arise from the circumstances. As, for example, in a case put in the Civil Law. A father by his will devised certain lands to his daughter, and afterwards gave the same lands to her as a marriage portion. It was held to be an ademption of the devise: *Filia legatorum non habet actionem, si ea, quæ ei in testamento *reliquit, vivus [*374] pater postea in dotem dederit.*<sup>1</sup> So, it was held in the same law to be a revocation of the legacy of a debt, if it was afterwards collected of the debtor by the testator in his lifetime. The like rule was applied, where, after the devise of specific property, the testator alienated it in his lifetime.<sup>2</sup> Testator supervivens, si eam rem, quam reliquerat, vendiderit, extinguitur fideicommissum.<sup>3</sup> These cases are so obvious, as necessary and intentional ademptions of the legacies, that they require no artificial rules of interpretation to expound the intent. And yet the Civil Law was so far from favoring ademptions, that even in these cases it admitted proof, that the testator did not intend to adeem the legacy; the rule being, Si rem suam legaverit testator, posteaque eam alienaverit; si non adimendi animo vendidit, nihilominus deberi.<sup>4</sup> And again; Si rem suam testator legaverit, eamque necessitate urgente alienaverit, fideicommissum peti posse, nisi probetur, adimere ei testatorem voluisse. Probationem autem mutatæ voluntatis ab hæredibus exigen-

[*375] § 1115. There are, however, in Equity Jurisprudence, certain established exceptions to this doctrine of constructive satisfaction, or ademption of legacies, which deserve particular notice. In the first place, it does not apply to the case of the devisee of a mere residue ; for it has been said, that a residue is always changing. It may amount to something, or be nothing ; and, therefore, no fair presumption can arise, of its being an intended satisfaction or ademption.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>2</sup> See Pothier, Pand. Lib. 34, tit. 4, n. 8, 9, 10.—Many cases like these have been adjudged precisely in the same way in Equity Jurisprudence, as they were in the Civil Law. Thus, an alienation by the testator, in his lifetime, of the subject-matter of a legacy of the same thing. Hambling v. Lister, Ambler, R. 402. So, the receipt or recovery of a debt, due by the legatee, which had been bequeathed to him, is an ademption of a legacy of the same debt. Rider v. Wager, 2 P. Will. 330 ; 2 Madd. Ch. Pr. 74 to 78 ; 1 Roper on Legacies, by White, ch. 5, § 1, p. 286 to 313.

<sup>3</sup> Watson v. The Earl of Lincoln, Ambler, R. 327 ; Farnham v. Phillips, 2 Atk. 216 ; Smith v. Strong, 4 Bro. Ch. R. 493 ; Freemantle v. Bankes, 5 Ves. 79.—It was said by Lord Hardwicke, in Farnham v. Phillips, (2 Atk. 216,) that there is no case, where the devise has been of a residue, (for that is uncertain, and, at the time of the testator's death, may be more or less,) in which a subsequent portion given has been held to be an ademption of a legacy. This seems now, accordingly, to be the established construction. Smith v. Strong, 4 Bro. Ch. R. 493 ; Watson v. Earl of Lincoln, Ambler, R. 325, and Mr. Blunt's notes (1) to (5) ; Freemantle v. Bankes, 5 Ves. 79 ; 2 Fonbl. Eq. B. 4, Pt. 2, ch. 1, § 1, note (a). Is there, in this respect, any difference between the gift of a residue, as an ademption of a legacy, and the gift of a residue, as an advancement or satisfaction, pro tanto, of a portion secured by a marriage settlement ? In Devese v. Pontet, 1 Cox, R. 188, S. C. Prec. in Ch. by Finch, 240, note, it was held, that a bequest of a residue was not any satisfaction of a pecuniary marriage portion, even though there was in the same will a bequest of specific personal property to the party, exceeding the stipulated portion. See also Bengough v. Walker, 15 Ves. 513, 514 ; 1 Roper

§ 1116. Another exception to this doctrine of constructive ademption of legacies may be gathered from the qualification, already annexed to the enunciation of it in the preceding pages. It is there limited to the case of a parent, or of a person standing in loco parentis. In relation to parents it is applicable only to legitimate children ; and in relation to persons, standing in loco parentis, it is also applicable generally to legitimate children only, unless the party has voluntarily placed himself in loco parentis to a legatee, not standing either naturally, or judicially, in that predicament. All other persons are in contemplation of law treated as strangers to the testator.<sup>1</sup>

on Legacies, by White, ch. 6, § 1, p. 226 ; Ackworth v. Ackworth, 1 Bro. Ch. 307, note. How would it be in the case of a settlement, stipulating for a portion, and that if any advancement should be made in the lifetime of the parent, it should be a part satisfaction, unless expressly declared in writing to the contrary ; and then a legacy of a residue to the party entitled to such a portion ? Would it be a satisfaction or not ? See 2 Roper on Legacies, by White, ch. 18, § 3, p. 95, &c. ; Ante, § 1110 ; and note (1). In the case of a portion secured by settlement, a distributive share, in a case of intestacy, to the full amount of the portion, will be deemed a satisfaction. Ante, § 1110, and note ; Moulson v. Moulson, 1 Bro. Ch. R. 82 ; 2 Roper on Legacies, by White, ch. 18, § 4, p. 105 to 108. But it will not be deemed a satisfaction of a clause in a marriage settlement respecting an advancement in the lifetime of the settler. pose, and for none other.<sup>1</sup> Except in cases standing upon such peculiar circumstances, and which, therefore, seem to present a very cogent presumption of an intentional ademption, the rule prevails, that a leg- [*377]acy to a stranger, *legitimate or illegitimate, is not adeemed by a subsequent portion or advancement in the lifetime of the testator, without some expression of such intent manifested in the instrument, or by some writing accompanying the portion or advancement.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1118. The reason, commonly assigned for this doctrine, is, that, as there is no such obligation upon such a testator to provide for the legatee, as subsists between a parent and child, no inference can arise, that the testator intended by the subsequent gift or advancement to perform any such duty in præsenti, instead of performing it at his death; and there is no reason, why a person may not be entitled to as many gifts, as another may choose to bestow upon him.<sup>3</sup> That this reasoning is extremely unsatisfactory, as well as artificial, may be unhesitatingly pronounced. It leads to this extraordinary conclusion; that a testator, in intendment of law, means to be more bountiful to strangers, than to his own children; that by a legacy to his children, he means, not to gratify his feelings or affections, but merely to perform his duty; but that, by a legacy to strangers, he means to gratify his feelings, affections, or caprices, without the slightest reference to his duty. What makes the doctrine still more difficult to be supported upon any general reasoning, is, that grandchildren, brothers, sisters, uncles, aunts, nephews, and nieces, as well as natural children, are deemed strangers to the testator in the sense of the rule (unless he has placed himself towards them in loco parentis); and that they are in a better condition, not only than legitimate children, but even than they would be, if the testator formally acted in loco parentis.<sup>1</sup> Considerations and consequences, like these, may well induce us to pause upon the original propriety of the doctrine. It is, however, so generally established, that it cannot be shaken, but by overthrowing a mass of authority, which no judge would feel himself at liberty to disregard.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1119. The third and last class of cases, to which we have alluded, as connected with the doctrine of satisfaction, is, where a legacy is given to a creditor. And, here, the general rule is, that where the legacy is equal to, or greater in amount, than an existing debt; where it is of the same nature; where it is certain, and not contingent; and where no particular motive is assigned for the gift; in all such cases, the legacy is deemed a satisfaction of the debt.<sup>3</sup> The ground of this doctrine is, that a testator shall be presumed to be just, before he is kind or generous. And, therefore, although a legacy is generally to be taken as a gift ; yet, when it is to a creditor, it ought to be deemed to be an act of justice, and not of bounty, in [*379] the absence of all *countervailing circumstances, according to the maxim of the Civil Law, Debitor non præsumitur donare.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1120. Some of the observations, which have been already made, apply, though with diminished force, to this class of cases. For, where a man has assets sufficient both for justice and generosity, and where the language of the instrument imports a donation, and not a payment, it seems difficult to say, why the ordinary meaning of the words should not prevail.<sup>2</sup> Where the sum is precisely the same with the debt, it may be admitted, that there arises some presumption, and, under many circumstances, it may be a cogent presumption, of an intention to pay the debt. But where the legacy is greater than the debt, the same force of presumption certainly does not exist ; and if it is less than the debt, then, (as we shall presently see,) the presumption is admitted to be gone.

§ 1121. It is highly probable, that this doctrine was derived from the Civil Law, where it is clearly laid down, but with limitations and qualifications, in some respects different from those which are recognised in Equity Jurisprudence.<sup>3</sup> Where the debt was absolutely due, and for the same precise sum, a legacy to the same amount was deemed a satisfaction of it. But, if there was a difference, even in the time of payment, between the debt and the legacy, the latter was not a satisfaction. *Sin autem, neque modo, neque tempore, neque conditione, neque loco, debitum differatur, *inutile [*380] est legatum.*<sup>1</sup> And so, if the legacy was more than the debt, it seems, that it was not a satisfaction. Quotiens debitor creditori suo legaret, ita inutile esse legatum, si nihil interesset creditoris ex testamento potius agere, quam ex pristinâ obligatione.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1122. But, although the rule, as to a legacy, being an ademption of a debt, is now well established in Equity ; yet it is deemed to have so little of a solid foundation, either in general reasoning, or as a just interpretation of the intention of the testator, that slight circumstances have been laid hold of to escape from it, and to create exceptions to it.<sup>3</sup> The rule, therefore, is not allowed to prevail, where the legacy is of less amount than the debt, even as a satisfaction pro tanto; nor where there is a difference in the times of payment of the debt and of the legacy; nor where they are of a different nature, as to the subject-matter, or as to the interest therein; nor where a particular motive is assigned for the gift; nor where the debt is contracted subsequently to the will; nor where the legacy is contingent or uncertain; nor where there is an express direction in the will for the payment of debts ; nor where the bequest is of a residue ;<sup>1</sup> nor where the debt is a negotiable security ;<sup>2</sup> nor where [*381] the debt is upon an *open and running account.<sup>3</sup> And as to a debt, strictly so called, there is no difference, whether it is a debt due to a stranger, or to a child.<sup>4</sup>

§ 1123. On the other hand, where a creditor leaves a legacy to his debtor, and either takes no notice of the debt, or leaves his intention doubtful, Courts of Equity will not deem the legacy as either necessarily, or primâ facie, evidence of an intention to release or extinguish the debt ; but they will require some evidence, either on the face of the will, or aliunde, to establish such an intention.<sup>5</sup>

CHAPTER XXX. (a)

APPLICATION OF PURCHASE-MONEY.

§ 1124. IT is in cases of Trusts under wills also, that questions often arise, as to the payment of purchase-money to the trustees, and as to the cases, in which the purchaser is bound to look to the due application of purchase-money. This subject, therefore, although it may equally apply to other cases of trusts, created inter vivos, may be conveniently treated of in this place. It has been remarked by a very learned writer, that Courts of Equity have in part remedied the mischiefs, (if they can be deemed mischiefs) arising from the admission of trusts, with respect to the cestui que trust or beneficiary, by making persons, paying money to the trustee, with notice of the trust, answerable in some cases for the proper application of it to the purposes of the trust. But at the same time he thinks it *questionable, whether the admis- [*382] sion of the doctrine is not, in general, productive of more inconvenience, than real good; for, although in many instances it is of great service to the cestui que trust, as it preserves his property from speculation, and other disasters, to which, if it were left to the mere discretion of the trustee, it would necessarily be subject; yet, on the other hand, it creates great embarrassments to purchasers in many cases; and especially, where, as in cases of infancy, the parties in interest are incapable of giving a valid assent to the receipt and application of the purchase-money by the trustee.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1125. The doctrine is not universally true, that a purchaser, having notice of a trust, is bound to see, that the trust is in all cases properly executed by the trustee. As applied to the cases of sales, authorized to be made by trustees for particular purposes, (which is the subject of our present inquiries,) the doctrine is not absolute, that the purchaser is bound to see, that the money raised by the sale is applied to the very [*383] purposes indicated by the trust. On the *contrary, there are many qualifications and limitations of the doctrine in its actual application to sales both of personal and of real estate.

§ 1126. The best method of ascertaining the true nature and extent of these qualifications and limitations will be by a separate consideration of them, as applied to each kind of estate, since the rules, which govern them, are, in some respects, dissimilar, owing to the greater power, which a testator has over his real, than he has over his personal estate.<sup>2</sup> In regard to real estate, it is well known, that at the common law it was not bound, even for the specialty debts of the testator, except in the hands of his heir ; although, by a statute in England, (3 W. & M. ch. 14,) it is made liable for such debts in the hands of his devisee. But as to simple contract debts, until a very recent period the real estate of deceased persons was not liable for the payment of any such debts. The Statute of 3d and 4th William 4th, ch. 104, has made all such real estate liable, as assets in equity, for the payment of all their debts, whether due on simple contract or by specialty.<sup>1</sup> In America the law has been generally altered ; and such real estate is made liable to the payment of all sorts of debts, as auxiliary to the personal assets. But, as to personal estate, it was at the common law, and still remains, in both countries, directly liable to the payment of all debts ; or, as it is commonly expressed, it goes to the executors as assets for creditors, to be applied in a due course of administration.<sup>2</sup> It is, therefore, in a strict sense, a trust fund for the payment of debts generally.<sup>3</sup> We shall presently see how this consideration bears upon the topic now under discussion.

<sup>1</sup> Mr. Butler's note to Co. Litt. 290 b. note (1), § 12; In Belfour v. Welland, 16 Ves. 156, Sir Wm. Grant expressed his dissatisfaction with the doctrine, in the following terms. "The objection is, that, if they misemploy the price, the purchaser may be called upon to pay the money over again; in other words, that the purchaser is bound to see to the application of the purchase-money. I think, the doctrine upon that point has been carried farther, than any sound equitable principle will warrant. Where the act is a breach of duty in the trustee, it is very fit, that those, who deal with him, should be affected by an act, tending to defeat the trust, of which they have notice. But, where the sale is made by the trustee, in performance of his duty, it seems extraordinary, that he should not be able to do, what one should think incidental to the right exercise of his power; that is, to give a valid discharge for the purchase-money." See also Mr. Sugden's Remarks, Sugden on Vendors, ch. 11, §1, p. 515, 523 to 531, 7th edition. Id. 9th edit. ch. 11, vol. 2, p. 30 to p. 56.

§ 1127. The general principle of Courts of Equity, *in regard to the duty of purchasers, (not espe- [*384] cially exempted by any provision of the author of the trust,) in cases of sales of property or charges on property under trusts (for there is no difference in point of law between sales and charges) to see to the application of the purchase money, is this ; that wherever the trust or charge is of a defined and limited nature, the purchaser must himself see, that the purchase money is applied to the proper discharge of the trust ; but wherever the trust is of a general and unlimited nature, he need not see to it.<sup>1</sup> Thus, for example, if a trust is created to sell for the payment of a portion, or of a mortgage, there, the purchaser must see to the application of the purchase-money to that specified object. If, on the other hand, a trust is created, or a

<sup>1</sup> 1 Madd. Ch. Pr. 352, 496 ; 2 Madd. Ch. Pr. 103 ; 1 Powell on Mortgages, ch. 9, p. 214 to 250. Coventry & Rand's Edit. In Elliot v. Merriam, Barnard. Ch. R. 78, (cited and approved in Shaw v. Borrer, 1 Keen R. 574.) the Master of the Rolls said : "The general rule is that if a trust directs that land should be sold for payment of debts generally, the purchaser is not bound to see that the money be rightly applied. If the trust directs that lands should be sold for the payment of certain debts, mentioning in particular to whom those debts are owing, the purchaser is bound to see that the money is applied for payment of those debts. The present case, indeed, does not fall within either of these rules, because here lands are not given to be sold for the payment of debts, but are only charged with such payment. However, the question is, whether that circumstance makes any difference, and his Honor was of opinion that it did not. And if such a distinction was to be made, the consequence would be, that whenever lands are charged with the payment of debts generally, they could never be discharged of that trust, without a suit in this court, which would be extremely inconvenient. No instances have been produced, to show that in any other respect the charging land with the payment of debts differs from the directing them to be sold for such a purpose ; and, therefore, there is no reason that a difference should be established in this respect. The only objection that seemed to be of weight with regard to this matter, is, that where lands are appointed to be sold for the payment of debts generally, the trust may be said to be performed as soon as those lands are sold ; but where they are only charged with the payment of debts, it may be said that the trust is not performed till these debts are discharged. And so far, indeed, it is true, that where lands are charged with the payment of annuities, those lands will be charged in the hands of a purchaser, because it was the very purpose of making the lands a fund for that payment, that it should be a constant and subsisting fund ; but, where lands are not burthened with such a subsisting charge, the purchaser ought not to be bound to look to the application of the money ; and that seems to be the true distinction." See also Shaw v. Borrer, 1 Keen R. 559, 575, 576. Post, § 1131.

devise is made, or a charge is established, by a party for the payment of debts generally, the purchaser is exempted from any such obligation.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1128. Let us, in the first place, consider the doctrine in its application to personal estate, including therein leasehold estates, which are equally with personal chattels subject to the payment of debts. And here the rule is, that the personal estate being liable for the payment of the debts of the testator generally, the purchaser of the whole, or of any part of it, is not, upon the principle already stated, bound to see, that the purchase money is applied by the executor to the discharge of the debts; for the trust is general and unlimited, it being for the payment of all debts. It is true, that there is an apparent exception to the rule; and that is, that he must be a bonâ fide purchaser, without notice, that there are no debts; and he must not collude with the executor in any wilful misapplication of the assets.<sup>2</sup> But *this proceeds upon the [*385] ground of fraud, which is of itself sufficient to vacate any transaction whatsoever.

§ 1129. It will not make any difference in the application of this general doctrine, as to the personal estate, that the testator has directed his real estate to be sold for the payment of his debts, whether he specifies the debts or not; or that he has made a specific bequest of a part of his personal estate for a particular purpose, or to a particular person, although such specific bequest is known to the purchaser, if he has no reason to suspect any fraudulent purpose.<sup>1</sup> The ground of this doctrine is, that otherwise it would be indispensable for a person, before he could become the purchaser of any personal estate, specifically bequeathed, to come into a Court of Equity to have an account taken of the assets of the testator, and of the debts due from him, and whether it was necessary for the executor to sell; which would be a most serious inconvenience, and greatly retard the due settlement of estates.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1131. In the case of sales of real estate for the payment of debts generally, the purchaser is not only not bound to look to the application of the purchase-money ; but, if more of the estate is sold, than is sufficient for the purposes of the trust, it will not be to his prejudice.<sup>1</sup> Nor will it make any difference in cases of this sort, whether the testator charges both his personal and real estate with payment of his debts, or the real only ; for, ordinarily, the personal estate, unless specially exempted, is the primary fund ; and if exempted, still the charge on the real estate is general and unlimited.<sup>2</sup> Nor will it make any difference, whether the devise directs a sale of the real estate for the payment of debts, or only charges the real estate therewith.<sup>3</sup> Nor will it make any difference, that the trust is only to sell, or is a charge for so much as the personal estate is deficient to pay the debts.<sup>4</sup> Nor will it make any difference, that a specific part of the real estate is devised for a particular purpose or trust, if the whole real estate is charged with the payment of debts generally by the will.<sup>5</sup> If, how-

<sup>5</sup> This point was directly decided in Shaw v. Borrer, 1 Keen R. 559, 574, 575, 576. That was the case of a will, which charged the real estate generally with the payment of debts, and devised an advowson on a special trust. The trustees (one of whom was also executor) had sold the

advowson; and the question was, whether they could make a good title without the institution of a suit, to ascertain, whether there was a deficiency of the personal assets, and whether the purchaser was bound to see to the application of the purchase-money. It was held, that he was not. Lord Langdale on that occasion said; "It seems, therefore, clear that a charge of this nature has been and ought to be treated as a trust, which gives the creditors a priority over the special purposes of the devise; and no doubt is raised but that, on the application of the creditors, the Court would, in a suit, to which the executors were parties, compel the trustees for special purposes to raise the money requisite for payment of the debts. If so, is there any good reason to doubt, but that the trustees and executors may themselves do that, which the Court would compel them to do on the application of the creditors? Though the advowson is devised to trustees for special purposes, the testator has, in the first instance, charged all his estates with payment of his debts. The charge affects the equitable but not the legal estate; and, upon the construction, the trusts of the will affect this estate, first, in common with the testator's other property for the payment of debts, and next, separately for the special purposes mentioned in the will. Possibly, upon the testator's death, it might not be necessary to resort to the real estate at all for the payment of the testator's debts. And, if it should be necessary to resort to the real estate, some part ought in a due administration to be applied in payment of debts before other parts; and it is said that the necessity for raising money to pay the debts out of the real estate, and if such necessity exists, the proper selection of that part of the real estate, which ought to be first sold ought to appear, and can only be proved by the Master's report in a suit for the administration of assets. It is true, that, if the administration of assets devolves on the Court by the institution of a suit for the purpose, the Court, in the exercise of its jurisdiction, acts with all practicable caution, and proceeds in strict conformity with its established rules. But this is a caution exercised, not for the benefit of the creditors or at their instance; for they ask nothing, and have a right to nothing, but payment of their debts; and the question is not, what the Court thinks it right to do for the benefit of the persons, who have claims, subject to the debts; but whether the estate, subject to debts by the will, and sold and conveyed by the devise for special purposes at the instance of the executors, would remain in the hands of the purchaser subject to any claims created by or founded on the will, or whether there is any obligation to see that done, which the Court would do in a suit to administer assets. An argument is deduced from the statutes, which has made real estates assets in courts of equity for payment of simple-contract debts; but it does not appear to me, that the

sonal estate be deficient, the power to sell does not arise.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1132. But, where in cases of real estate, the trust is for the payment of legacies, or of specified or scheduled debts, the case is different; for they are ascertained; and the purchaser may see, and, in the view of a Court of Equity, he is bound to see, that the money is actually applied in discharge of them.<sup>2</sup> On the other hand, cases may occur, where the devise is for the payment of debts generally, and also for the payment of legacies, and then the trust becomes a mixed one. In such a case the purchaser is not bound to see to the application of the purchase-money; because, to hold him liable to see the legacies paid, would in fact involve him in the necessity of taking an account of all the debts and assets.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1133. Where the time directed by the devise for a sale of the real estate is arrived, and the persons entitled to the money are infants, or are unborn; there, rule, which the legislature has thought fit to apply in cases where the real estate is not charged with payment of debts, is necessarily to be applied in cases, where the testator has charged his real estate with such payment. And, on the whole, considering that the charge creates or constitutes a trust for the payment of debts, or, as Lord Eldon in one place, adopting the language of Lord Thurlow, expressed it, that 'a charge is a devise of the estate in substance and effect pro tanto to pay the debts,' and conceiving that the purchaser is not bound either to inquire whether other sufficient property is applicable, or ought to be applied first in payment of debts, or to see to the application of the purchase money. I think that the exception must be overruled."

the purchaser is not bound to see to the application of the purchase-money, because he might otherwise be implicated by a trust of long duration.<sup>1</sup> But, if an estate is charged with a sum of money, payable to an infant at his majority ; there, the purchaser is bound to see the money duly paid on his arrival at age ; for the estate will remain chargeable with it in his hands.<sup>2</sup>

[*388] *§ 1134. Where the trusts are defined, and yet the money is not merely to be paid over to third persons, but it is to be applied by the trustees to certain purposes, which require, on their part, time, deliberation, and discretion, it seems, that the purchaser is not bound to see to the due application of the purchase-money,<sup>3</sup> as, where it is to pay all debts, which shall be ascertained within eighteen months after the sale ; or where the trustees are to lay out the money in the funds, or in the purchase of other lands on certain trusts.<sup>4</sup>

§ 1135. These are some of the most important and nice distinctions, which have been adopted upon this intricate topic ; and they lead strongly to the conclusion, to which not only eminent Jurists, but also eminent Judges, have arrived, that it would have been far better to have held in all cases, that the party, having the right to sell, had also the right to receive the purchase-money, without any further responsibility on the part of the purchaser as to its application.

CHAPTER XXXI.

CHARITIES.

§ 1136. IT is in cases of wills, also, that we most usually find provisions for public CHARITIES; and to the consideration of this subject, constituting, as it does, a large and peculiar source of Equity Jurisdiction under the head of Trusts, we shall now proceed.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1137. It is highly probable, that the rudiments of the law of charities were derived from the Roman or Civil Law. One of the earliest fruits of the Emperor Constantine's real or pretended zeal for Christianity was a permission to his subjects to bequeath their property to the church.<sup>2</sup> This permission was soon abused to so great a degree, as to induce the Emperor Valentinian to enact a mortmain law, by which it was restrained.<sup>1</sup> But this restraint was gradually relaxed, and in the time of Justinian it became a fixed maxim of Roman Jurisprudence, that legacies to pious uses, (which included all legacies destined for works of piety or charity, whether they related to spiritual or to temporal concerns,) were entitled to peculiar favor, and to be deemed privileged testaments.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1138. Thus, for example, a legacy of ornaments for a church, a legacy for the maintenance of a clergyman to instruct poor children, and a legacy for their sustenance, were esteemed legacies to pious and charitable uses.<sup>3</sup> In all these cases the bequests had their charitable motives, independent of the consideration of the merit of the particular legatees. But other legacies, although not of a pious or charitable nature, but yet for objects of a public nature, or for a general benefit, were also deemed entitled to the like

<sup>1</sup> Cod. Theodos. Lib. 16, tit. 2, l. 20.—To those, who may not be familiar with the term "mortmain," it may be proper to state, that the statutes in England, which prohibit corporations from taking lands by devise, even for charities, except in certain special cases, are generally called The Statutes of Mortmain, in mortuà manu; for the reason of which appellation Sir Edward Coke offers many conjectures. But, (says Mr. Justice Blackstone, 1 Black. Comm. 479,) there is one, which seems more probable, than any, that he has given us; viz., that these purchasers being usually made by ecclesiastical bodies, the members of which (being professed) were reckoned dead persons in law; land, therefore, holden by them, might with great propriety be said to be held in mortuà manu. The word is now commonly employed to designate all prohibitory laws, which limit, restrain, or annul gifts, grants, or devises of lands and other corporeal hereditaments to charitable uses. See on this subject 2 Black. Comm. 268 to 274.

encouragement and protection. Thus, for example, a legacy destined for some public ornament, or for some public use, such as to build a gate for a city, or for the embellishment and improvement of a public street or square, or as a prize to persons excelling in an art or science, was deemed a privileged legacy, and of complete validity.<sup>1</sup> Siquid relictum sit civitatibus, omne valet, sive in distributionem relinquatur, sive in opus, sive in alimenta, vel in eruditionem puerorum, sive quid aliud.<sup>2</sup> Again. Civitatibus legari potest etiam, quod ad honorem ornatumque civitatis pertinet. Ad ornatum; puta, quod instruendum forum, theatrum, stadium, legatum fuerit. Ad honorem; puta, quod ad munus edendum, venationemve, ludos scenicos, ludos Circenses, relictum fuerit; aut, quod ad divisionem singulorum civium vel epulum, relictum fuerit. Hoc amplius, quod in alimenta infirmæ ætatis, (puta, senioribus, vel pueris, puellisque) relictum fuerit; ad honorem civitatis pertinere respondetur.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1139. The construction of testaments of this nature was most liberal; and the legacies were never permitted to be lost, either by the uncertainty or failure of the persons or objects, for which they were destined. Hence, if a legacy was given to the church, or to the poor generally, without any description of what church, or what poor, the law sustained it, by giving it, in the first case, to the parish church of the place, where the testator lived; and, in the latter case, to the hospital of the same place; and, if there was none, then to the poor of the same *parish.<sup>4</sup> The same [*392] rule was applied, where, instead of a bare legacy, the testator appointed for his heir, or devisee, or legatee, the church or the poor. It was construed to belong to the church, or the poor of the parish, where he resided.<sup>1</sup> So, if a legacy were given to God, (as seems sometimes to have been the usage in the time of Justinian,) it was construed to be a legacy to the church of the parish, where the testator resided.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1140. If the testator himself had designated the person, by whom the charity was to be carried into effect, he was compellable to perform it. If no person was designated, the bishop or ordinary of the place of the testator's nativity might compel its due execution.<sup>3</sup> And in all cases, where the objects were indefinite, the legacy was carried into effect under the direction of the Judge, who had cognizance of the subject.<sup>4</sup> So, if a legacy was given for a definite object, which either was previously accomplished, or which failed, it was, nevertheless, held valid, and applied under judicial discretion to some other object.<sup>5</sup> Thus, for example, if the testator had left a legacy for building a parish church, or an apartment in a hospital ; and before his death the church or apartment had been built ; or it was not necessary or useful ; the legacy did not become a nullity ; but it was applied by the proper [*393] functionary *to some other purposes of piety or charity.<sup>6</sup> And we shall presently see, that the like doctrine has been carried to a great extent in the jurisprudence of England on the same subject.

§ 1141. The high authority of the Roman Law, coinciding with the religious notions of the times, could hardly fail to introduce these principles of pious legacies into the Common Law of England; and the zeal and learning of the ecclesiastical tribunals must have been constantly exercised to enlarge their operation. Lord Thurlow<sup>1</sup> was clearly of opinion, that the doctrine of charities grew up from the Civil Law; and Lord Eldon,<sup>2</sup> in assenting to that opinion, has judiciously remarked, that, at an early period the Ordinary had the power to apply a portion of every man's personal estate to charity; and when afterwards the statute compelled a distribution, it is not impossible, that the same favor should have been extended to charity in wills, which, by their own force, purported to authorize such a distribution. Be the origin, however, what it may, it cannot be denied, that many of the privileges attached to pious legacies have been for ages incorporated into the English law.<sup>3</sup> Indeed, in former times, the construction of charitable bequests was pushed to the most alarming extravagance. And although it has been, in a great measure, checked in later and more enlightened times, there are *still [*394] some anomalies in the law on this subject, which are hardly reconcilable with any sound principles of judicial interpretation, or with any proper exercise of judicial authority.

emphatically called the Statute of Charitable Uses, is extremely obscure. It may, nevertheless, be useful to endeavor to trace the general outline of that history, since it may materially assist us in ascertaining, how far the present authority and doctrines of the Court of Chancery, in regard to charitable uses, depend upon that statute ; and how far they arise from its general jurisdiction, as a Court of Equity, to enforce trusts, and especially to enforce trusts to pious uses.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1143. It is not easy to arrive at any satisfactory conclusion on this head. Few traces remain of the exercise of this jurisdiction, in any shape, prior to the statute of Elizabeth. The principal, if not the only cases now to be found, were decided in the Courts of Common Law, and turned upon the question, whether the uses were void, or not, within the statutes against superstitious uses.<sup>2</sup> One of the *earliest cases is [*395] Porter's case ;<sup>3</sup> which was a devise of lands, devisable by custom, to the testator's wife in fee, upon condition, that she should assure the lands devised for the maintenance and continuance of a free school and certain almsmen and almswomen ; and it appeared, that the heir had entered for condition broken, and conveyed the same lands to the Queen. It was held, that the use, being for charity, was a good and lawful use, and not void by the statutes against superstitious uses ; and that the Queen might well hold the land for the charitable uses. Lord Eldon, in commenting on this case, has observed ; “ It does not appear, that this Court, (i. e. Chancery,) at that period had cognizance upon informations for the establishment of charities. Prior to the time of Lord Ellesmere,<sup>1</sup> as far as the tradition of the times immediately following goes, there were no such informations, as that, upon which I am now sitting (i. e. an information to establish a charity) ; but they made out their case, as well as they could, by law.”<sup>2</sup>

§ 1144. So that the result of Lord Eldon’s researches on this point is, that, until about the period of enacting the statute of Elizabeth, bills were not filed in Chancery to establish charities. It is remarkable, that Sir Thomas Egerton and Lord Coke, who argued Porter’s case for the Queen, though they cited many antecedent cases, refer to *none, which were not [*396] decided at law. And the doctrine established by Porter’s case is, that if a feoffment is made to a general legal use, not superstitious, though indefinite, though no person is in esse, who could be the cestui que use, yet the feoffment is good ; and if the use is bad, the heir of the feoffor will be entitled to enter, the legal estate remaining in him.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1145. The absence, therefore, of all authority derived from Equity decisions on an occasion, when they would probably have been used, if any existed, certainly does very much favor the conclusion of Lord Eldon. If we might hazard a conjecture, it would be, that Porter's case having established, that charitable uses, not superstitious, were good at law, the Court of Chancery, in analogy to other cases of trusts, immediately held the feoffees to such uses accountable in Equity for the due execution of them; and that the inconveniences felt in resorting to this new and anomalous proceeding, from the indefinite nature of some of the uses, gave rise, within a very few years, to the statute of 43 Elizabeth, ch. 4.<sup>1</sup>

of a person, having a sufficient capacity, to take as devisee.<sup>1</sup> The Statute of Elizabeth, in favor of charitable uses, cured this defect,<sup>2</sup> and provided (as we shall hereafter have occasion more fully to consider) a new mode of enforcing such uses by a commission under the direction of the Court of Chancery.

§ 1147. Shortly after this statute, it became a matter of doubt, whether the Court of Chancery could grant relief by original bill in cases within that statute, or whether the remedy was not confined to the proceeding by commission. That doubt remained until the reign of Charles II., when it was settled in favor of the jurisdiction of the Court by original bill.<sup>3</sup> But on one occasion, when this very question was argued before him, Lord Keeper Bridgman declared, "That the king, as pater patriæ, may inform for any public benefit for charitable *uses, before the Statute of [*398] 30 [43] of Elizabeth, for Charitable Uses. But it was doubted, the Court could not by bill take notice of that statute, so as to grant a relief according to that statute upon a bill."<sup>4</sup> On another occasion, soon afterwards, where the devise was to a college, and was held void at law by the judges for a misnomer, and on a bill to establish the devise as a charity, the same question was argued; Lord Keeper Finch (afterwards Lord Nottingham) held the devise good, as an appoint-

§ 1149. In a subsequent case,<sup>4</sup> which was an information filed by the Attorney General against the master and governors of a school, calling them to account in Chancery, as having the general superintendency of all charitable donations, the same learned Chancellor, in discussing the general jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery on this head, and distinguishing the case before him from others, because the trustees or governors were invested with the visitorial power, said ; “ Consider the nature of the foundation. It is at the petition of two private persons, by charter of the crown, which distinguishes this case from cases of the Statute of Elizabeth on charitable uses, or cases before that statute, in which this Court exercised jurisdiction of charities at large. Since that statute, where there is a charity for the particular purposes therein, and no charter given by the crown to found and regulate it, unless a particular exception out of the statute, it must be regulated by commission. But there may be a bill by information in this Court, founded on its general jurisdiction ; and that is from necessity ; because there is no charter to regulate it, and the king has a general jurisdiction of this kind. There must be somewhere a power to regulate. But where there is a charter, with proper powers, there is no ground to come into this Court to establish that charity ; and it must be left to be regulated in the manner the charter has put [*400] *it, or by the original rules of law. Therefore, though I have often heard it said in this Court, if an information is brought to establish a charity, and praying a particular relief and mode of regulation, and the party fails in that particular relief ; yet that information is not to be dismissed, but there must be a decree for the establishment. That is always with this distinction, where it is a charity at large, or in its nature before the statute of charitable uses ; but not in the case of charities incorporated and established by the king’s charter, under the great seal, which are established by proper authority allowed.” And again ; “ It is true, that an information in the name of the Attorney General, as an officer of the crown, was not a head of the statute of charitable uses, because that original jurisdiction was exercised in this court before. But that was always in cases now provided for by that statute, that is, charities at large, not properly and regularly provided for in charters of the crown."

§ 1150. It was manifestly, therefore, the opinion of Lord Hardwicke, that, independent of the statute of Elizabeth, "the Court of Chancery did exercise original jurisdiction in cases of charities at large, which he explains to mean charities not regulated by charter. But it does not appear, that his attention was called to discriminate between such as could take effect at law, by reason of the interposition of a feoffee or devisee, capable of taking, and those where the purpose was general charity, without the interposition of any trust to carry it into effect. The same remark applies to the dictum by Sir Joseph Jekyll.

[*401] *§ 1151. In a still later case,<sup>1</sup> which was an information to establish a charity, and aid a conveyance in remainder to certain officers of Christ's College to certain charitables uses, Lord Keeper Henley (afterwards Lord Northington) is reported to have said; "The conveyance is admitted to be defective, the use being limited to certain officers of the corporation, and not to the corporate body; and, therefore, there is a want of proper persons to take in perpetual succession. The only doubt is, whether the court shall supply this defect for the benefit of the charity under the Statute of Elizabeth. And I take the uniform rule of this court, before, at, and after the Statute of Elizabeth, to have been, that, where the uses are charitable, and the person has in himself full power to convey, the court will aid a defective conveyance to such uses. Thus, though devises to corporations were void under the Statute of Henry VIII. ; yet they were always considered as good in Equity, if given to charitable uses." And he then proceeded to declare, that he was obliged, by the uniform course of precedents, to assist the conveyance; and therefore he established the conveyance expressly under the Statute of Elizabeth.

§ 1152. There is some reason to question, if the language here imputed to Lord Northington be minutely accurate. His Lordship manifestly aided the conveyance, as a charity, in virtue of the Statute of Elizabeth. And there is no doubt, that it has been the constant practice of the court, since that statute, to aid defects in conveyances to charitable uses. *But there is no case, in which such defects [*402] were aided, before that statute. The old cases, although arising before, were deemed to be within the reach of that statute by its retrospective language; and were expressly decided on that ground.<sup>1</sup> And the very case put of devises to corporations, which are void under the Statute of Henry VIII., and are held good solely by the Statute of Elizabeth, shows, that his Lordship was looking to that statute; for it is plain, that a devise, void by statute, cannot be made good upon any principles of general law. What, therefore, is supposed to have been stated by him, as being the practice before the statute, is probably founded in the mistake of the reporter. The same case is reported in another book, where the language is ; “ The constant rule of the court has always been, where a person has a power to give, and makes a defective conveyance to charitable uses, to supply it as an appointment ; as in Jesus’ College, Collinson’s Case in Hobart, 136.’”<sup>1</sup> Now, Collinson’s Case was expressly held to be sustainable, only as an appointment under the Statute of Elizabeth; and this shows, that the language is limited to cases governed by that statute.

§ 1153. In a very recent charity case, Sir Arthur Piggott in argument said; “ The difference between the case of individuals, and that of charities, is founded on a principle, which has been established ever since the [*403] Statute of Charitable Uses, in the *reign of Elizabeth, and has been constantly acted upon from those days to the present.” Lord Eldon adopted the remark, and said; “ I am fully satisfied, as to all the principles laid down in the course of this argument, and accede to them all.” His Lordship then proceeded to discuss the most material of the principles and cases from the time of Elizabeth, and built his reasoning, as indeed he had built it before, upon the supposition, that the doctrine in Chancery, as now established, rested mainly on that statute.<sup>2</sup> And his Lordship’s opinion, in the case already alluded to,<sup>3</sup> when commenting on Porter’s Case, is entitled to the more weight, because it seems to have been given after a very careful examination of the whole judicial history of charities.

§ 1154. These are the principal cases, which my own researches have enabled me to find, where the jurisdiction of Chancery over charities antecedent to the Statute of Elizabeth, has been directly or incidentally discussed. The circumstance, that no cases, prior to that time, can be found in Equity; the tradition, that has passed down to our own times, that original bills to establish charities were first entertained in the time of Lord Ellesmere; and the fact, that the cases immediately succeeding that statute, in which devises, void at law, were held good as charities, might have been argued and sustained upon the general jurisdiction of the court, if it existed; and yet were exclusively argued and decreed *upon the [*404] footing of that statute; these facts and circumstances do certainly afford a very strong presumption, that the jurisdiction of the court to enforce charities, where no trust is interposed, where no devisee is in esse, and where the charity is general and indefinite, both as to persons and objects, mainly rests upon constructions (whether ill or well founded is now of no consequence) of that statute.

§ 1155. It is very certain, also, that, since the Statute of Elizabeth, no bequests are deemed within the authority of Chancery, and capable of being established and regulated thereby, except bequests for those purposes, which that statute enumerates as charitable, or which, by analogy, are deemed within its spirit and intendment.<sup>1</sup> A bequest may, in an enlarged sense, be charitable, and yet not within purview of the statute. Charity, as Sir William Grant, (the Master of the Rolls,) has justly observed, in its widest sense denotes all the good affections, men ought to bear towards each other ; in its more restricted and common sense, relief to the poor. In neither of these senses is it employed in the Court of Chancery.<sup>1</sup> In that court it means such charitable bequests only, as are within the letter and the spirit of the Statute of Elizabeth.

§ 1156. Therefore, where a testatrix bequeathed the residue of her personal estate to the bishop of D., to dispose of the same "to such objects of benevolence [*405] and liberality, as the bishop, in *his own discretion, shall most approve of;" and she appointed the bishop her executor ; on a bill brought to establish the will, and declare the residuary bequest void, the bequest was held void, upon the ground, that objects of benevolence and liberality were not necessarily charitable within the Statute of Elizabeth, and were, therefore, too indefinite to be executed. On that occasion it was said by the court, that no case had yet been decided, in which the court had executed a charitable purpose, unless the will had contained a description of that, which the law acknowledged to be a charitable purpose, or had devoted the property to purposes of charity in general, in the sense, in which that word is used in the Court of Chancery. The devise here was of a trust of so indefinite a nature, that it could not be under the control of the court ; so that the administration of it could be reviewed by the court ; or so that, if the trustee died, the court itself could execute the trust. It fell, therefore, within the rule of the court, that, where a trust is ineffectually declared, or fails, or becomes incapable of taking effect, the party taking it shall be deemed a trustee, if not for those, who were to take by the will, for those, who are to take under the disposition of the law. And the residue was accordingly decreed to the next of kin.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1157. Upon the like principles, a bequest in these words, "In case there is any money remaining, I should wish it to be given in private charity," has been held inoperative; for the objects are too general and indefinite, not being within the Statute *of [*406] Elizabeth, and not being so ascertained, that the trust could be controlled or executed by a Court of Equity.<sup>2</sup> So, a bequest to trustees to such charitable or public purpose or purposes, person or persons, as the trustees should, in their discretion think fit, has been held void; for it is in effect a gift in trust, to be absolutely disposed of in any manner, that the trustees might think fit, consistent with the laws of the land, which is too general and undefined to be executed.<sup>3</sup> So, a bequest for such benevolent, religious, and charitable purposes, as the trustees should, in their discretion think most beneficial, has been held void, upon the ground of its generality, as it did not limit the gift to cases of charity, but extended it to those of benevolence also.<sup>4</sup> So, a bequest to executors of a fund to apply it to and for such charitable and other purposes, as they shall think fit, without being accountable to any persons for their disposition thereof, has been held void on account of its indefiniteness.<sup>1</sup>

1158. So that it appears from these cases, that, since the Statute of Elizabeth, the Court of Chancery will not establish any trusts for indefinite purposes of a benevolent nature, not charitable within the purview of that statute, although there is an existing trustee, in whom it is vested; but it will declare the trust void, and distribute the property among the next of kin. And yet, if there were an original jurisdiction in Chancery over all bequests, charitable in their own nature, and not superstitious, to establish and regulate them, independent of the statute, it is not easy to perceive, why an original bill might not be sustained in that court to establish such a bequest; especially where a trustee is interposed to effectuate it; for the statute does not contain any prohibition of such a bequest. An argument may, therefore, be fairly drawn from this source against any general jurisdiction existing in Chancery over charities of an indefinite nature prior to the statute.

§ 1159. The statute itself may also be resorted to, as affording an additional argument in corroboration of the opinion already expressed. It begins by a recital, that lands, goods, money, &c. had been given, &c. heretofore, to certain purposes, (which it enumerates in detail,) which lands, &c. had not been employed according to the charitable intent of the givers and founders, by reason of frauds, breaches of trusts, and negligence in those, that should *pay, de- [*407] liver, and employ the same. It then enacts, that it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, &c. to award commissions under the great seal, to proper persons, to inquire, by juries, of all and singular such gifts, &c. breaches of trusts, &c. in respect to such gifts, &c. heretofore given, &c., or which shall hereafter be given, &c. “to or for any, the charitable and godly uses before rehearsed;” and upon such inquiry, to set down such orders, judgments, and decrees, as the lands, &c. may be duly and faithfully employed to, and for such charitable uses before rehearsed, for which they were given; “which orders, judgments, and decrees, not being contrary to the orders, statutes, or decrees of the donors and founders, shall stand firm and good, according to the tenor and purpose thereof, and shall be executed accordingly, until the same shall be undone and altered by the Lord Chancellor, &c. upon complaint by any party grieved, to be made to them.” Then follow several provisions, excepting certain cases from the operation of the statute, which are not now material to be considered. The statute then directs the orders, &c. of the commissioners to be returned under seal into the Court of Chancery, &c. and declares, that the Lord Chancellor, &c. shall, and may, “take such orders for the due execution of all or any of the said judgments, orders, and decrees, as to them shall seem fit and convenient.” And lastly, the statute enacts, that any person aggrieved with any such orders, &c. may complain to the Lord Chancellor, &c. for redress therein; and upon such complaint the Lord Chancellor, &c. may, by such course, as to their wisdom shall seem meetest, the cir- [*408] cumstances of the case *considered, proceed to the examination, hearing, and determining thereof; “and upon hearing thereof, shall and may annul, diminish, alter, or enlarge the said orders, judgments, and decrees of the said commissioners, as to them shall be thought to stand with Equity and good conscience, according to the true intent and meaning of the donors and founders thereof;” and may tax and award costs against the persons complaining, without just and sufficient cause, of the orders, judgments, and decrees before mentioned.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1160. The uses enumerated in the preamble of the statute, as charitable, are gifts, devises, &c. for the relief of aged, impotent, and poor people; for maintenance of sick and maimed soldiers and mariners; for schools of learning, free schools, and scholars of universities; for repairs of bridges, ports, havens, causeways, churches, sea banks, and highways; for education and preferment of orphans; for, or towards the relief, stock, or maintenance for houses of correction; for marriages of poor maids; for supportation, aid, and help of young tradesmen, handicraftsmen, and persons decayed; for relief or redemption of prisoners or captives; and for aid, or ease of any poor inhabitants, concerning payments of fifteenths, setting out of soldiers, and other taxes.<sup>2</sup> These are all the classes of uses, which the statute in terms reaches.

§ 1161. From this summary statement of the contents of the statute, it is apparent, that the authority *conferred on the Court of Chancery, in rela- [*409] tion to charitable uses, is very extensive ; and it is not at all wonderful, considering the religious notions of the times, that the statute should have received the most liberal, not to say in some instances the most extravagant, interpretation. It is very easy to perceive, how it came to pass, that, as power was given to the court in the most unlimited terms to annul, diminish, alter, or enlarge the orders and decrees of the commissioners, and to sustain an original bill in favor of any party aggrieved by such order or decree, the court arrived at the conclusion, that it might, by original bill, do that in the first instance, which it certainly could do circuitously upon the commission.<sup>1</sup> And, as in some cases, where the trust was for a definite object, and the trustee living, the court might, upon its ordinary jurisdiction over trusts, compel an execution of it by an original bill, independent of the statute,<sup>2</sup> we are at once let into the origin of the practice of mixing up the jurisdiction by original bill with the jurisdiction under the statute, which Lord Hardwicke alluded to in the passage already quoted,<sup>3</sup> and which, at that time, was inveterately established. This mixture of the Jurisdictions serves also to illustrate the remark of Lord Nottingham in the case already cited ;<sup>4</sup> where, upon an original bill, he decreed a devise to charity, void at law, to be good in Equity, as an appointment; although before the Statute of Elizabeth no such decree could have been made.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1162. Upon the whole, it seems to be the better opinion, that the Jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery over charities, where no trust is interposed, or where there is no person in esse, capable of taking, or where the charity is of an indefinite nature, is not to be referred to the general jurisdiction of that court, but sprung up after the Statute of Elizabeth, and rests mainly on its provisions.<sup>2</sup> This opinion is supported by the preponderating weight of the authorities, speaking to the point, and particularly by those of a very recent date, which appear to have been most thoroughly considered. The language, too, of the statute, lends a confirmation to this opinion, and enables us to trace, what would otherwise seem a strange anomaly, to a legitimate origin.

§ 1163. Be this as it may, it is very certain, that the Court of Chancery will now relieve by original bill or information upon gifts and bequests, within the Statute of Elizabeth; and informations by the Attorney General, to settle, establish, or direct such charitable donations, are very common in practice.<sup>3</sup> But where the gift is not a charity within the statute, no information lies in the name of the Attorney General to enforce it.<sup>4</sup> And if an information is brought in the name of the Attorney General, and it appears to be such a charity as the court ought to support, although the information is mistaken in the title or in the prayer of relief, yet the bill will not be dismissed; but the court will support it, and establish the charity in such manner, as by law it may.<sup>1</sup> However; the jurisdiction of Chancery over charities does not exist, where there are local visitors appointed; for it then belongs to them and their heirs to visit and control the charity.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1164. As to what charities are within the statute, it may be proper to say a few words in this place, although it is impracticable to go into a thorough review of the cases.<sup>3</sup> It is clear, that no superstitious uses are within the purview of it; such as are gifts of money for the finding or maintenance of a stipendiary priest; or for the maintenance of an anniversary or obit; or of any light or lamp in any church or chapel; or for prayers for the dead; or for such purposes as the superior of a convent, or her successor, may judge expedient.<sup>4</sup> But there are certain uses, which, though not within the letter, are yet deemed charitable within the equity of the *statute. Such is money given to maintain a [*412] preaching minister; to maintain a schoolmaster in a

§ 1165. Charities are also so highly favored in the law, that they have always received a more liberal construction, than the law will allow in gifts to individuals.<sup>2</sup> In the first place, the same words in a will, when applied to individuals, may require a very different construction, when they are applied to the case of a charity. If a testator gives his property to such person, as he shall hereafter name to be his executor, and afterwards he appoints no executor ; or if, having appointed an executor, the latter dies in the lifetime of the testator, and no other person is appointed in his stead ; in either of these cases, as these bequests are to individuals, the testator will be held intestate ; and his next of kin will take the estate. But, if a like bequest be given to the executor in favor of a charity, the Court of Chancery will, in both instances, supply the place of an executor, and carry into effect that very bequest, which, in the case of individuals, must have failed altogether.<sup>3</sup>

executor shall name, and no executor is appointed ; or, if one being appointed, he dies in the testator's lifetime, and no other is appointed in his place ; the bequest becomes a mere nullity. Yet such a bequest, if expressed to be for a charity, would be good ; and the Court of Chancery would, in such a case, assume the office of an executor, and execute it.<sup>1</sup> So, if a legacy is given to trustees to distribute in charity, and they all die in the testator's lifetime ; although the legacy becomes thus lapsed at law, (and if the trustees had taken to their own use, it would have been gone for ever,) yet it will be enforced in Equity.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1167. Again ; although in carrying into execution a bequest to an individual, the mode, in which the legacy is to take effect, is deemed to be of the substance of the legacy ; yet where the legacy is to charity, the Court of Chancery will consider charity as the substance ; and in such cases, and in such cases only, if the mode pointed out fail, it will provide another mode, by which the charity may take effect, but by which no other charitable legatees can take.<sup>3</sup> A still stronger case is, that if the testator has expressed an absolute intention to give a legacy to charitable purposes, but he has left uncertain, or to some future act, the mode, by which it is to be carried into effect ; there, the Court of Chancery, if no mode

is pointed out, will of itself supply the defect, and enforce the charity.<sup>1</sup> Therefore, it has been held, that if a man devises a sum of money to such charitable uses, as he shall direct by a codicil annexed to his will, or by a note in writing, and he afterwards leaves no direction by note or codicil, the Court of Chancery will dispose of it to such charitable purposes, as it thinks fit.<sup>2</sup> So, if a testator bequeaths a sum for such a school, as he shall appoint, and he appoints none, the Court of Chancery may apply it for what school it pleases.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1168. The doctrine has been pressed yet farther; and it has been established, that, if the bequest indicate a charitable intention, but the object, to which it is to be applied, is against the policy of the law, the court will lay hold of the charitable intention, and execute it for the purpose of some other charity, agreeable to the law, in the room of that contrary to it.<sup>4</sup> Thus, a sum of money bequeathed to found a Jews' synagogue has been enforced by the Court of Chancery as a charity, and judicially transferred to the benefit of a foundling hospital!<sup>5</sup> And a bequest for the education of poor children in the Roman Catholic faith has been decreed in Chancery to be dis-

§ 1169. Another principle, equally well established, is, that if the bequest be for charity, it matters not, how uncertain the persons, or the objects may be ; or whether the persons, who are to take, are in esse, or not ; or whether the legatee be a corporation, capable in law of taking, or not ; or whether the bequest can be carried into exact execution, or not ; for in all these and the like cases, the Court will sustain the legacy, and give it effect according to its own principles.<sup>2</sup> And, where a literal execution becomes inexpedient or impracticable, the Court will execute it, as nearly, as it can, according to the original purpose, or, (as the technical expression is,) cy prés.<sup>3</sup>

some future act of the crown, as, for instance, a gift to found a new college, which requires an act of incorporation, the gift will be held valid, and the court will execute it.<sup>1</sup> So, if a devise be to an existing corporation by a misnomer, which makes it void at law, it will be held good in Equity.<sup>2</sup> So, where a devise was to the poor generally, the Court decreed it to be executed in favor of three public charities in London.<sup>3</sup> So a legacy towards establishing a bishop in America, was held good, although none was yet appointed.<sup>4</sup> And, where a charity is so given, that there can be no objects, the court will order a new scheme to execute it. But if objects may, though they do not at present, exist, the Court will keep the fund for the old scheme.<sup>5</sup> And when the specified objects cease to exist, the Court will new model the charity.<sup>6</sup>

§ 1171. In further aid of charities, the Court will supply all defects of conveyances, where the donor hath a capacity, and a disposable estate, and his mode of donation does not contravene the provisions of any statute.<sup>7</sup> The doctrine is laid down with great

§ 1145. The absence, therefore, of all authority derived from Equity decisions on an occasion, when they would probably have been used, if any existed, certainly does very much favor the conclusion of Lord Eldon. If we might hazard a conjecture, it would be, that Porter's case having established, that charitable uses, not superstitious, were good at law, the Court of Chancery, in analogy to other cases of trusts, immediately held the feoffees to such uses accountable in Equity for the due execution of them; and that the inconveniences felt in resorting to this new and anomalous proceeding, from the indefinite nature of some of the uses, gave rise, within a very few years, to the statute of 43 Elizabeth, ch. 4.<sup>1</sup>

of a person, having a sufficient capacity, to take as devisee.<sup>1</sup> The Statute of Elizabeth, in favor of charitable uses, cured this defect,<sup>2</sup> and provided (as we shall hereafter have occasion more fully to consider) a new mode of enforcing such uses by a commission under the direction of the Court of Chancery.

§ 1147. Shortly after this statute, it became a matter of doubt, whether the Court of Chancery could grant relief by original bill in cases within that statute, or whether the remedy was not confined to the proceeding by commission. That doubt remained until the reign of Charles II., when it was settled in favor of the jurisdiction of the Court by original bill.<sup>3</sup> But on one occasion, when this very question was argued before him, Lord Keeper Bridgman declared, “That the king, as pater patriæ, may inform for any public benefit for charitable *uses, before the Statute of [*398] 30 [43] of Elizabeth, for Charitable Uses. But it was doubted, the Court could not by bill take notice of that statute, so as to grant a relief according to that statute upon a bill.”<sup>4</sup> On another occasion, soon afterwards, where the devise was to a college, and was held void at law by the judges for a misnomer, and on a bill to establish the devise as a charity, the same question was argued; Lord Keeper Finch (afterwards Lord Nottingham) held the devise good, as an appointment under the Statute of Elizabeth; and he “decreed the charity, though before the statute no such decree could have been made.”<sup>1</sup>

§ 1148. It would seem, therefore, to have been the opinion of Lord Nottingham, that an original bill would not, before the Statute of Elizabeth, lie to establish a charity, where the estate did not pass at law, to which the charitable uses attached. In Eyre v. Shaftesbury,<sup>2</sup> Sir Joseph Jekyll said, in the course of his reasoning on another point; “In like manner, in the case of charity, the king, pro bono publico, has an original right to superintend the care thereof, so that, abstracted from the Statute of Elizabeth relating to charitable uses, and antecedent to it, as well as since, it has been every day’s practice to file informations in Chancery in the Attorney General’s name, for the establishment of charities.” In The Bailiffs, &c. of Burford v. Lenthall,<sup>3</sup> Lord Hardwicke is reported to have said; “The courts have mixed the jurisdiction of bringing informations *in the name of the Attorney General with the jurisdiction given them under the Statute of Elizabeth, and proceed either way, according to their discretion.”

§ 1149. In a subsequent case,<sup>4</sup> which was an information filed by the Attorney General against the master and governors of a school, calling them to account in Chancery, as having the general superintendency of all charitable donations, the same learned Chancellor, in discussing the general jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery on this head, and distinguishing the case

before him from others, because the trustees or governors were invested with the visitorial power, said ; “ Consider the nature of the foundation. It is at the petition of two private persons, by charter of the crown, which distinguishes this case from cases of the Statute of Elizabeth on charitable uses, or cases before that statute, in which this Court exercised jurisdiction of charities at large. Since that statute, where there is a charity for the particular purposes therein, and no charter given by the crown to found and regulate it, unless a particular exception out of the statute, it must be regulated by commission. But there may be a bill by information in this Court, founded on its general jurisdiction ; and that is from necessity ; because there is no charter to regulate it, and the king has a general jurisdiction of this kind. There must be somewhere a power to regulate. But where there is a charter, with proper powers, there is no ground to come into this Court to establish that charity ; and it must be left to be regulated in the manner the charter has put [*400] *it, or by the original rules of law. Therefore, though I have often heard it said in this Court, if an information is brought to establish a charity, and praying a particular relief and mode of regulation, and the party fails in that particular relief ; yet that information is not to be dismissed, but there must be a decree for the establishment. That is always with this distinction, where it is a charity at large, or in its nature before the statute of charitable uses ; but not in the case of charities incorporated and established by the king’s charter, under the great seal, which are established by proper authority allowed.” And again ; “ It is true, that an information in the name of the Attorney General, as an officer of the crown, was not a head of the statute of charitable uses, because that original jurisdiction was exercised in this court before. But that was always in cases now provided for by that statute, that is, charities at large, not properly and regularly provided for in charters of the crown."

§ 1150. It was manifestly, therefore, the opinion of Lord Hardwicke, that, independent of the statute of Elizabeth,"the Court of Chancery did exercise original jurisdiction in cases of charities at large, "which he explains to mean charities not regulated by charter. But it does not appear, that his attention was called to discriminate between such as could take effect at law, by reason of the interposition of a feoffee or devisee, capable of taking, and those where the purpose was general charity, without the interposition of any trust to carry it into effect. The same remark applies to the dictum by Sir Joseph Jekyll.

[*401] *§ 1151. In a still later case,<sup>1</sup> which was an information to establish a charity, and aid a conveyance in remainder to certain officers of Christ's College to certain charitables uses, Lord Keeper Henley (afterwards Lord Northington) is reported to have said; "The conveyance is admitted to be defective, the use being limited to certain officers of the corporation, and not to the corporate body; and, therefore, there is a want of proper persons to take in perpetual succession. The only doubt is, whether the court shall supply this defect for the benefit of the charity under the Statute of Elizabeth. And I take the uniform rule of this court, before, at, and after the Statute of Elizabeth, to have been, that, where the uses are charitable, and the person has in himself full power to convey, the court will aid a defective conveyance to such uses. Thus, though devises to corporations were void under the Statute of Henry VIII. ; yet they were always considered as good in Equity, if given to charitable uses." And he then proceeded to declare, that he was obliged, by the uniform course of precedents, to assist the conveyance; and therefore he established the conveyance expressly under the Statute of Elizabeth.

§ 1152. There is some reason to question, if the language here imputed to Lord Northington be minutely accurate. His Lordship manifestly aided the conveyance, as a charity, in virtue of the Statute of Elizabeth. And there is no doubt, that it has been the constant practice of the court, since that statute, to aid defects in conveyances to charitable uses. *But there is no case, in which such defects [*402] were aided, before that statute. The old cases, although arising before, were deemed to be within the reach of that statute by its retrospective language; and were expressly decided on that ground.<sup>1</sup> And the very case put of devises to corporations, which are void under the Statute of Henry VIII., and are held good solely by the Statute of Elizabeth, shows, that his Lordship was looking to that statute; for it is plain, that a devise, void by statute, cannot be made good upon any principles of general law. What, therefore, is supposed to have been stated by him, as being the practice before the statute, is probably founded in the mistake of the reporter. The same case is reported in another book, where the language is ; “ The constant rule of the court has always been, where a person has a power to give, and makes a defective conveyance to charitable uses, to supply it as an appointment ; as in Jesus’ College, Collinson’s Case in Hobart, 136.”<sup>1</sup> Now, Collinson’s Case was expressly held to be sustainable, only as an appointment under the Statute of Elizabeth; and this shows, that the language is limited to cases governed by that statute.

§ 1153. In a very recent charity case, Sir Arthur Piggott in argument said; “ The difference between the case of individuals, and that of charities, is founded on a principle, which has been established ever since the [*403] Statute of Charitable Uses, in the *reign of Elizabeth, and has been constantly acted upon from those days to the present.” Lord Eldon adopted the remark, and said; “ I am fully satisfied, as to all the principles laid down in the course of this argument, and accede to them all.” His Lordship then proceeded to discuss the most material of the principles and cases from the time of Elizabeth, and built his reasoning, as indeed he had built it before, upon the supposition, that the doctrine in Chancery, as now established, rested mainly on that statute.<sup>2</sup> And his Lordship’s opinion, in the case already alluded to,<sup>3</sup> when commenting on Porter’s Case, is entitled to the more weight, because it seems to have been given after a very careful examination of the whole judicial history of charities.

§ 1154. These are the principal cases, which my own researches have enabled me to find, where the jurisdiction of Chancery over charities antecedent to the Statute of Elizabeth, has been directly or incidentally discussed. The circumstance, that no cases, prior to that time, can be found in Equity; the tradition, that has passed down to our own times, that original bills to establish charities were first entertained in the time of Lord Ellesmere; and the fact, that the cases immediately succeeding that statute, in which devises, void at law, were held good as charities, might have been argued and sustained upon the general jurisdiction of the court, if it existed; and yet were exclusively argued and decreed *upon the [*404] footing of that statute; these facts and circumstances do certainly afford a very strong presumption, that the jurisdiction of the court to enforce charities, where no trust is interposed, where no devisee is in esse, and where the charity is general and indefinite, both as to persons and objects, mainly rests upon constructions (whether ill or well founded is now of no consequence) of that statute.

§ 1155. It is very certain, also, that, since the Statute of Elizabeth, no bequests are deemed within the authority of Chancery, and capable of being established and regulated thereby, except bequests for those purposes, which that statute enumerates as charitable, or which, by analogy, are deemed within its spirit and intendment.<sup>1</sup> A bequest may, in an enlarged sense, be charitable, and yet not within purview of the statute. Charity, as Sir William Grant, (the Master of the Rolls,) has justly observed, in its widest sense denotes all the good affections, men ought to bear towards each other ; in its more restricted and common sense, relief to the poor. In neither of these senses is it employed in the Court of Chancery.<sup>1</sup> In that court it means such charitable bequests only, as are within the letter and the spirit of the Statute of Elizabeth.

§ 1156. Therefore, where a testatrix bequeathed the residue of her personal estate to the bishop of D., to dispose of the same "to such objects of benevolence [*405] and liberality, as the bishop, in *his own discretion, shall most approve of;" and she appointed the bishop her executor ; on a bill brought to establish the will, and declare the residuary bequest void, the bequest was held void, upon the ground, that objects of benevolence and liberality were not necessarily charitable within the Statute of Elizabeth, and were, therefore, too indefinite to be executed. On that occasion it was said by the court, that no case had yet been decided, in which the court had executed a charitable purpose, unless the will had contained a description of that, which the law acknowledged to be a charitable purpose, or had devoted the property to purposes of charity in general, in the sense, in which that word is used in the Court of Chancery. The devise here was of a trust of so indefinite a nature, that it could not be under the control of the court ; so that the administration of it could be reviewed by the court ; or so that, if the trustee died, the court itself could execute the trust. It fell, therefore, within the rule of the court, that, where a trust is ineffectually declared, or fails, or becomes incapable of taking effect, the party taking it shall be deemed a trustee, if not for those, who were to take by the will, for those, who are to take under the disposition of the law. And the residue was accordingly decreed to the next of kin.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1157. Upon the like principles, a bequest in these words, "In case there is any money remaining, I should wish it to be given in private charity," has been held inoperative; for the objects are too general and indefinite, not being within the Statute *of [*406] Elizabeth, and not being so ascertained, that the trust could be controlled or executed by a Court of Equity.<sup>2</sup> So, a bequest to trustees to such charitable or public purpose or purposes, person or persons, as the trustees should, in their discretion think fit, has been held void; for it is in effect a gift in trust, to be absolutely disposed of in any manner, that the trustees might think fit, consistent with the laws of the land, which is too general and undefined to be executed.<sup>3</sup> So, a bequest for such benevolent, religious, and charitable purposes, as the trustees should, in their discretion think most beneficial, has been held void, upon the ground of its generality, as it did not limit the gift to cases of charity, but extended it to those of benevolence also.<sup>4</sup> So, a bequest to executors of a fund to

1158. So that it appears from these cases, that, since the Statute of Elizabeth, the Court of Chancery will not establish any trusts for indefinite purposes of a benevolent nature, not charitable within the purview of that statute, although there is an existing trustee, in whom it is vested; but it will declare the trust void, and distribute the property among the next of kin. And yet, if there were an original jurisdiction in Chancery over all bequests, charitable in their own nature, and not superstitious, to establish and regulate them, independent of the statute, it is not easy to perceive, why an original bill might not be sustained in that court to establish such a bequest; especially where a trustee is interposed to effectuate it; for the statute does not contain any prohibition of such a bequest. An argument may, therefore, be fairly drawn from this source against any general jurisdiction existing in Chancery over charities of an indefinite nature prior to the statute.

§ 1159. The statute itself may also be resorted to, as affording an additional argument in corroboration of the opinion already expressed. It begins by a recital, that lands, goods, money, &c. had been given, &c. heretofore, to certain purposes, (which it enume-

was for such religious and charitable purposes as the major part of the trustees should think proper, it was held, to be a good bequest to charity within the Statute of Elizabeth. Baker v. Sutton, 1 Keen, R. 224, 232, 233.

rates in detail,) which lands, &c. had not been employed according to the charitable intent of the givers and founders, by reason of frauds, breaches of trusts, and negligence in those, that should *pay, de- [*407] liver, and employ the same. It then enacts, that it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, &c. to award commissions under the great seal, to proper persons, to inquire, by juries, of all and singular such gifts, &c. breaches of trusts, &c. in respect to such gifts, &c. heretofore given, &c., or which shall hereafter be given, &c. “to or for any, the charitable and godly uses before rehearsed;” and upon such inquiry, to set down such orders, judgments, and decrees, as the lands, &c. may be duly and faithfully employed to, and for such charitable uses before rehearsed, for which they were given; “which orders, judgments, and decrees, not being contrary to the orders, statutes, or decrees of the donors and founders, shall stand firm and good, according to the tenor and purpose thereof, and shall be executed accordingly, until the same shall be undone and altered by the Lord Chancellor, &c. upon complaint by any party grieved, to be made to them.” Then follow several provisions, excepting certain cases from the operation of the statute, which are not now material to be considered. The statute then directs the orders, &c. of the commissioners to be returned under seal into the Court of Chancery, &c. and declares, that the Lord Chancellor, &c. shall, and may, “take such orders for the due execution of all or any of the said judgments, orders, and decrees, as to them shall seem fit and convenient.” And lastly, the statute enacts, that any person aggrieved with any such orders, &c. may complain to the Lord Chancellor, &c. for redress therein; and upon such

complaint the Lord Chancellor, &c. may, by such course, as to their wisdom shall seem meetest, the cir- [*408] cumstances of the case *considered, proceed to the examination, hearing, and determining thereof; “and upon hearing thereof, shall and may annul, diminish, alter, or enlarge the said orders, judgments, and decrees of the said commissioners, as to them shall be thought to stand with Equity and good conscience, according to the true intent and meaning of the donors and founders thereof;” and may tax and award costs against the persons complaining, without just and sufficient cause, of the orders, judgments, and decrees before mentioned.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1160. The uses enumerated in the preamble of the statute, as charitable, are gifts, devises, &c. for the relief of aged, impotent, and poor people; for maintenance of sick and maimed soldiers and mariners; for schools of learning, free schools, and scholars of universities; for repairs of bridges, ports, havens, causeways, churches, sea banks, and highways; for education and preferment of orphans; for, or towards the relief, stock, or maintenance for houses of correction; for marriages of poor maids; for supportation, aid, and help of young tradesmen, handicraftsmen, and persons decayed; for relief or redemption of prisoners or captives; and for aid, or ease of any poor inhabitants, concerning payments of fifteenths, setting out of soldiers, and other taxes.<sup>2</sup> These are all the classes of uses, which the statute in terms reaches.

§ 1161. From this summary statement of the contents of the statute, it is apparent, that the authority *conferred on the Court of Chancery, in relation to charitable uses, is very extensive; and it is not at all wonderful, considering the religious notions of the times, that the statute should have received the most liberal, not to say in some instances the most extravagant, interpretation. It is very easy to perceive, how it came to pass, that, as power was given to the court in the most unlimited terms to annul, diminish, alter, or enlarge the orders and decrees of the commissioners, and to sustain an original bill in favor of any party aggrieved by such order or decree, the court arrived at the conclusion, that it might, by original bill, do that in the first instance, which it certainly could do circuitously upon the commission.<sup>1</sup> And, as in some cases, where the trust was for a definite object, and the trustee living, the court might, upon its ordinary jurisdiction over trusts, compel an execution of it by an original bill, independent of the statute,<sup>2</sup> we are at once let into the origin of the practice of mixing up the jurisdiction by original bill with the jurisdiction under the statute, which Lord Hardwicke alluded to in the passage already quoted,<sup>3</sup> and which, at that time, was inveterately established. This mixture of the Jurisdictions serves also to illustrate the remark of Lord Nottingham in the case already cited;<sup>4</sup> where,

upon an original bill, he decreed a devise to charity, void at law, to be good in Equity, as an appointment; although before the Statute of Elizabeth no such decree could have been made.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1162. Upon the whole, it seems to be the better opinion, that the Jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery over charities, where no trust is interposed, or where there is no person in esse, capable of taking, or where the charity is of an indefinite nature, is not to be referred to the general jurisdiction of that court, but sprung up after the Statute of Elizabeth, and rests mainly on its provisions.<sup>2</sup> This opinion is supported by the preponderating weight of the authorities, speaking to the point, and particularly by those of a very recent date, which appear to have been most thoroughly considered. The language, too, of the statute, lends a confirmation to this opinion, and enables us to trace, what would otherwise seem a strange anomaly, to a legitimate origin.

§ 1163. Be this as it may, it is very certain, that the Court of Chancery will now relieve by original bill or information upon gifts and bequests, within the Statute of Elizabeth; and informations by the Attorney General, to settle, establish, or direct such charitable donations, are very common in practice.<sup>3</sup> But where the gift is not a charity within the statute, no information lies in the name of the Attorney General to enforce it.<sup>4</sup> And if an information is brought in the name of the Attorney General, and it appears to be such a charity as the court ought to support, although the information is mistaken in the title or in the prayer of relief, yet the bill will not be dismissed; but the court will support it, and establish the charity in such manner, as by law it may.<sup>1</sup> However; the jurisdiction of Chancery over charities does not exist, where there are local visitors appointed; for it then belongs to them and their heirs to visit and control the charity.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1164. As to what charities are within the statute, it may be proper to say a few words in this place, although it is impracticable to go into a thorough review of the cases.<sup>3</sup> It is clear, that no superstitious uses are within the purview of it; such as are gifts of money for the finding or maintenance of a stipendiary priest; or for the maintenance of an anniversary or obiit; or of any light or lamp in any church or chapel; or for prayers for the dead; or for such purposes as the superior of a convent, or her successor, may judge expedient.<sup>4</sup> But there are certain uses, which, though not within the letter, are yet deemed charitable within the equity of the *statute. Such is money given to maintain a [*412] preaching minister; to maintain a schoolmaster in a

§ 1165. Charities are also so highly favored in the law, that they have always received a more liberal construction, than the law will allow in gifts to individuals.<sup>2</sup> In the first place, the same words in a will, when applied to individuals, may require a very different construction, when they are applied to the case of a charity. If a testator gives his property to such person, as he shall hereafter name to be his executor, and afterwards he appoints no executor ; or if, having appointed an executor, the latter dies in the lifetime of the testator, and no other person is appointed in his stead ; in either of these cases, as these bequests are to individuals, the testator will be held intestate ; and his next of kin will take the estate. But, if a like bequest be given to the executor in favor of a charity, the Court of Chancery will, in both instances, supply the place of an executor, and carry into effect that very bequest, which, in the case of individuals, must have failed altogether.<sup>3</sup>

executor shall name, and no executor is appointed ; or, if one being appointed, he dies in the testator's lifetime, and no other is appointed in his place ; the bequest becomes a mere nullity. Yet such a bequest, if expressed to be for a charity, would be good ; and the Court of Chancery would, in such a case, assume the office of an executor, and execute it.<sup>1</sup> So, if a legacy is given to trustees to distribute in charity, and they all die in the testator's lifetime ; although the legacy becomes thus lapsed at law, (and if the trustees had taken to their own use, it would have been gone for ever,) yet it will be enforced in Equity.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1167. Again ; although in carrying into execution a bequest to an individual, the mode, in which the legacy is to take effect, is deemed to be of the substance of the legacy ; yet where the legacy is to charity, the Court of Chancery will consider charity as the substance ; and in such cases, and in such cases only, if the mode pointed out fail, it will provide another mode, by which the charity may take effect, but by which no other charitable legatees can take.<sup>3</sup> A still stronger case is, that if the testator has expressed an absolute intention to give a legacy to charitable purposes, but he has left uncertain, or to some future act, the mode, by which it is to be carried into effect ; there, the Court of Chancery, if no mode

is pointed out, will of itself supply the defect, and enforce the charity.<sup>1</sup> Therefore, it has been held, that if a man devises a sum of money to such charitable uses, as he shall direct by a codicil annexed to his will, or by a note in writing, and he afterwards leaves no direction by note or codicil, the Court of Chancery will dispose of it to such charitable purposes, as it thinks fit.<sup>2</sup> So, if a testator bequeaths a sum for such a school, as he shall appoint, and he appoints none, the Court of Chancery may apply it for what school it pleases.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1168. The doctrine has been pressed yet farther; and it has been established, that, if the bequest indicate a charitable intention, but the object, to which it is to be applied, is against the policy of the law, the court will lay hold of the charitable intention, and execute it for the purpose of some other charity, agreeable to the law, in the room of that contrary to it.<sup>4</sup> Thus, a sum of money bequeathed to found a Jews' synagogue has been enforced by the Court of Chancery as a charity, and judicially transferred to the benefit of a foundling hospital!<sup>5</sup> And a bequest for the education of poor children in the Roman Catholic faith has been decreed in Chancery to be dis-

§ 1169. Another principle, equally well established, is, that if the bequest be for charity, it matters not, how uncertain the persons, or the objects may be ; or whether the persons, who are to take, are in esse, or not ; or whether the legatee be a corporation, capable in law of taking, or not ; or whether the bequest can be carried into exact execution, or not ; for in all these and the like cases, the Court will sustain the legacy, and give it effect according to its own principles.<sup>2</sup> And, where a literal execution becomes inexpedient or impracticable, the Court will execute it, as nearly, as it can, according to the original purpose, or, (as the technical expression is,) cy prés.<sup>3</sup>

some future act of the crown, as, for instance, a gift to found a new college, which requires an act of incorporation, the gift will be held valid, and the court will execute it.<sup>1</sup> So, if a devise be to an existing corporation by a misnomer, which makes it void at law, it will be held good in Equity.<sup>2</sup> So, where a devise was to the poor generally, the Court decreed it to be executed in favor of three public charities in London.<sup>3</sup> So a legacy towards establishing a bishop in America, was held good, although none was yet appointed.<sup>4</sup> And, where a charity is so given, that there can be no objects, the court will order a new scheme to execute it. But if objects may, though they do not at present, exist, the Court will keep the fund for the old scheme.<sup>5</sup> And when the specified objects cease to exist, the Court will new model the charity.<sup>6</sup>

tate, partly to his heirs, and partly to charity, that the bequest, though void at law, was good as an appointment under the Statute of Elizabeth, for this reason "that the goods in the hands of administrators are all for charitable uses; and the office of the ordinary, and of the administrator, is to employ them to pious uses; and the kindred and children have no property nor pre-eminence but under the title of charity."<sup>1</sup>

§ 1172. With the same view, the Court of Chancery was in former times most astute to find out grounds to sustain charitable bequests. Thus, an appointment to charitable uses under a will, that was precedent to the Statute of Elizabeth, and so was utterly void, was held to be made good by the statute.<sup>2</sup> So, a devise, which was not within the statute, was nevertheless decreed as a charity, and governed in a manner wholly different from that contemplated by the testator, although there was nothing unlawful in his intent; the Lord Chancellor giving, as his reason, Summa est ratio, quæ pro religione facit.<sup>3</sup> So, where the charity was for a weekly sermon, to be preached by a person to be chosen by the greatest part of the best inhabitants of the parish, it was treated as a wild direction, and a decree was made, that the bequests should be to maintain a catechist in the parish, to be approved by the bishop.<sup>4</sup>

the Statute of Elizabeth.<sup>1</sup> Lord Chancellor Cowper, in a case, where he was called upon to declare a charitable bequest valid, notwithstanding the will was not executed according to the Statute of Frauds, and in which these cases were cited, observed ; “ I shall be very loth to break in upon the Statute of Frauds and Perjuries in this case, as there are no instances, where men are so easily imposed upon, as at the time of their dying, under the pretence of charity.”—“ It is true, the charity of Judges has carried several cases on the Statute of Elizabeth great lengths; and this occasioned the distinction between operating by will, and by appointment, which surely the makers of that statute never contemplated.”<sup>2</sup>

§ 1174. It has been already intimated, that the disposition of modern judges has been to curb this excessive latitude of construction, assumed by the Court of Chancery in early times. But, however strange some of the doctrines already stated may seem to us, as they have seemed to Lord Eldon ; yet they cannot now be shaken, without doing that (as he has said) in effect, which no Judge will avowedly take upon himself to do, to reverse decisions, that have been acted upon for centuries.<sup>3</sup>

[*420] * § 1175. A charity must be accepted upon the same terms, upon which it is given, or it must be relinquished to the right heir; for it cannot be altered by any new agreement between the heir of the donor and the donees.<sup>4</sup> And where several distinct charities

§ 1176. The doctrine of cy près, as applied to charities, was formerly pushed to a most extravagant length.<sup>2</sup> But this sensible distinction now prevails, that the Court will not decree the execution of the trust of a charity in a manner different from that intended, except so far as it is seen, that the intention cannot be literally executed. In that case another mode will be adopted, consistent with the general intention; so as to execute it, though not in mode, yet in substance. If the mode should become by subsequent circumstances impossible, the general object is not to be defeated, if it can in any other way be obtained.<sup>3</sup> Where there are no objects remaining to take the benefit of a charitable corporation, the Court will dispose of its revenues by a new scheme, upon the principle of the original charities, cy près.

§ 1177. The general rule is, that if lands are given to a corporation for any charitable uses, which [*421] *the donor contemplates to last for ever, the heir never can have the land back again. But, if it should become impracticable to execute the charity, as expressed, another similar charity will be substituted, so long as the corporation exists.<sup>4</sup> If the charity does not fail, but the trustees or corporation fail, the court of Chancery will substitute itself in their stead, and thus carry on the charity.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1178. When the increased revenues of a charity extend beyond the original objects, the general rule, as to the application of such increased revenues, is, that they are not a resulting trust for the heirs at law; but they are to be applied to similar charitable purposes, and to the augmentation of the benefits of the charity.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1179. In former times, the disposition of Chancery to assist charities was so strong, that, in Equity, the assets of the testator were held bound to satisfy charitable uses before debts or legacies; although at law the assets were held bound to satisfy debts before charities. But even at law, charities were then preferred to other legacies.<sup>3</sup> And this, indeed, was in conformity to the civil law, by which charitable legacies are preferred to all others.<sup>4</sup>

out of a mixed fund of real and personal estate, whether these bequests have been particular, or residuary, by refusing to direct the debts and other legacies to be paid out of the real estate, and reserving the personal to fulfil the charity, although the charity would be void, as to the real estate.<sup>1</sup> So that, in effect, the court appropriates the fund, as if no legal objection existed to applying any part of it to the charity bequests, and then holds, that so much of these bequests fail, as would in that way be to be paid out of the prohibited fund.<sup>2</sup> The ground of this doctrine is said to be, that a Court of Equity is not warranted to set up a rule of Equity, contrary to the common rules of the Court, merely to support a bequest, which might otherwise be contrary to law. But, where there are general legacies, and the testator has charged his estate with the payment of all his legacies; if the personal estate be not sufficient to pay the whole, the court will direct the charity to be paid out of the personal estate, and the other legacies out of the real estate, so that the will may be performed in toto.<sup>3</sup>

as to the persons or as to the objects, to which they are to be applied.<sup>1</sup> Almost all the cases on this subject have been collected, compared, and commented *on [*423] by Lord Eldon, with his usual diligence and ability, in two recent decisions. The result of these decisions is, that, if the testator has manifested a general intention to give to charity, the failure of the particular mode, by which the charity is to be effected, will not destroy the charity. For the substantial intention being charity, Equity will substitute another mode of devoting the property to charitable purposes, although the formal intention as to the mode, cannot be accomplished.<sup>2</sup> The same principle is applied, when the persons or objects of the charity are uncertain, or indefinite, if the predominant intention of the testator

<sup>2</sup> The first was the case of Moggridge v. Thackwell, 7 Ves. R. 36, where the testator gave the residue of her personal estate to James Vaston, his executors and administrators, "desiring him to dispose of the same in such charities, as he shall think fit, recommending poor clergymen, who have large families and good characters;" and appointed Mr. Vaston one of her executors. Mr. Vaston died in her lifetime, of which she had notice; but the will remained unaltered. The next of kin claimed the residue, as being lapsed by the death of Mr. Vaston; but the bequest was held valid, and established. In the next case, Mills v. Farmer, 1 Meriv. R. 55, the testator, by his will, after giving several legacies, proceeded, "the rest and residue of all my effects I direct may be divided for promoting the gospel in foreign parts, and in England; for bringing up ministers in different seminaries, and other charitable purposes, as I do intend to name hereafter, after all my worldly property is disposed of to the best advantage." The bill was filed by the next of kin, praying an account and distribution of the residue, as being undisposed of by the will or any codicil of the testator. The Master of the Rolls held the residuary bequest to charitable purposes void for uncertainty, and because the testator expressed not a present, but a future, intention to devise this property. Lord Eldon, however, upon an appeal, reversed the decree, and established the bequest, as a good charitable bequest, and directed it to be carried into effect accordingly.

is still to devote the property to charity. In like manner, if the original funds are more than sufficient for [*424] the *specified objects of charity, the surplus will be applied to other similar purposes.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1182. All these doctrines proceed upon the same ground, that is, the duty of the court to effectuate the general intention of the testator.<sup>2</sup> And, accordingly, the application of them ceases, whenever such general intention is not to be found. If, therefore, it is clearly seen, that the testator had but one particular object in his mind, as for example, to build a church at W., and that purpose cannot be answered, the next of kin will take, there being in such a case no general charitable intention.<sup>3</sup> So, if a fund should be given in trust, to apply the income to printing and promoting the doctrines of the supremacy of the Pope in ecclesiastical affairs in England, the trust would be held void, on grounds of public policy; and the property would go to the personal representatives of the party creating the trust; and it would not be liable to be applied to other charitable purposes by the crown, because it was not intended to be a general trust for charity.<sup>4</sup> Even in the case of gifts or bequests to superstitious uses, which (as we have seen) are not held to be void, but the funds are applied in Chancery to other lawful objects of charity,<sup>5</sup> the professed ground of the doctrine is, (though certainly it is a most extraordinary sort of interpretation of intention,) that the party has indicated a general purpose *to de- [*425] vote the property to charity; and therefore, although his specified object cannot be accomplished, yet his general intention of charity is supposed to be effectuated, by applying the funds to other charitable objects.<sup>1</sup> How Courts of Equity could arrive at any such conclusion, it is not easy to perceive, unless, indeed, where the nature of the gift necessarily led to the conclusion, that the object specified was a favorite, though not an exclusive, object of the donor. To such cases it has in modern times been practically and justly limited.<sup>2</sup>

Butcher*, 1 Turn. & Russ. R. 260, 270.—In De Themmines v. De Bonneval, (5 Russ. R. 297,) the Master of the Rolls said; “The policy of the law will not permit the execution of a superstitious use. But the court avails itself of the general intention to give the property to charity, although the particular charity chosen by the founder be superstitious; and it effectuates the general intention, by devoting the fund to some other charitable purpose.” How can the court presume an intention of the testator to give to charity generally, when he has expressed himself only as to a particular object, that is, as to a superstitious use?

<sup>2</sup> This practical application of the doctrine was strongly illustrated in a recent case, where a testator gave the residue of his estate to trustees, positively forbidding them to diminish the capital by giving away any part thereof, or that the interest and profit arising be applied to any other use or uses, than in the will directed, viz. one half, yearly and every year for ever, unto the redemption of British slaves in Turkey and Barbary; one fourth part, yearly and every year for ever, unto charity schools in the city and suburbs of London, &c. and not giving to any one above £20 a year; and the other fourth to other specified uses. The question was, what was to become of the income of the moiety for the redemption of British slaves in Turkey and Barbary, there being, from the altered circumstances of the countries, no objects of this bounty. The Master of the Rolls said on that occasion, that the jurisdiction of Courts of

Equity, with respect to charitable bequests, is derived from their authority to carry into execution the trusts of any will or other instrument; and the court is to proceed according to the intention expressed in the will or testament; that the court, in the present case, had no authority to apply the moiety to any other use, as it would not be executing the expressed intention of the testator; and that it could be applied to some other use by a new scheme under the sanction of the legislature. Upon appeal, Lord Chancellor Brougham reversed the decree, and held, that the court might apply it to a new scheme cy près. Upon this occasion he said; "When a testator gives one charitable fund to three several classes of objects, unless he excludes, by most express provisions, the application of one portion to the purpose, to which the others are destined, it is clear, that the court may thus execute his intention, in the event of an impossibility of applying that portion to its original destination. The character of charity is impressed on the whole fund. There is good sense in presuming that, had the testator known, that one object was to fail, he would have given its appropriated fund to the increase of the funds destined to the other objects of his bounty; and there is convenience in acting, as he would himself have done. This is the foundation of the doctrine cy près. &c. I should have been disposed to favor the relators' argument, on which the decree must rest, had the will been, that one half should be employed in redeeming captives, and in no other way whatever; or that the two fourths should be employed in other charities, and no more than these two fourths in those, or any such charities. But that is far from being the case. The testator says; 'The capital shall not be diminished by giving away any part thereof; and the interest shall not be applied to any other use or uses, than those hereinafter mentioned.' The object of this general prohibition plainly is, to secure the whole fund, principal and interest, to charitable uses; to forbid any alienation of the capital, and any diversion of the income to any other purposes, than those, which he specifies. The expression 'use or uses,' even literally taken, lets in all the charities specified, provided the fund be given among them, and not otherwise applied. Undoubtedly the funds must be applied in the proportions specified; one half to one, and one fourth to each of the two other objects; and it would be a breach of trust to give part of the moiety to either of the two other purposes, as long as there remained captives to redeem. But, then, it would be just as much a breach of trust, without the prohibitory clause, as with it. &c. So, in the case of a charity, where I bequeath £100 to one object, and £50 each to two other objects of bounty, my trustees violate their duty, general, indefinite, and mere private nature, or not within the scope of the Statute of Elizabeth, it will be treated as utterly void, and the property will go to the next of kin. For, in such a case, as the trust is not ascertained, it must either go as an absolute gift to the individual selected to distribute it, or that individual must be a trustee for the next of kin.<sup>1</sup> If the testator means to create a trust, and the trust is not effectually created, or fails, the next of kin must take.<sup>2</sup> On the other hand, if the party selected to make the distribution is to take it, it must be upon the ground, that the testator did not intend to create a trust, but to leave it entirely to the

if they give less than £100 to the one, and more than £50 to each of the other two; and that, whether I use words of exclusion, such as 'no otherwise,' 'no other charities,' &c., or omit to use them. But when the one object fails, the doctrine of cy près becomes applicable, although it has no place in legacies to individuals; and the intention, to which the court is to approximate, will be gathered from the other gifts, and from the gift itself. Should words be used, which positively exclude such an approximation,—as, for instance, if there be an express direction, that each of the charities named shall have so much, and neither more, nor less, and one shall not be extended in case the objects of another fail,—then, clearly, the doctrine can have no place. But that is, because the will of the testator has expressly said so; and by acting against his clear intent, the court would not be executing cy près, (as near as possible,) but departing, as far as possible from that intent. This cannot be said of the general words used here, which are abundantly satisfied, if no part of the capital is given away at all; and no part of the interest to any other than the specified purposes. Nor is the will at all violated by applying the undisposed and undisposable surplus of one branch to increase the objects of the other branches of the same charity." *Attorney General v. R. 142.— In the case of Mr. Boyle's will, the bequest was not limited in terms to foreign countries or objects, but it was applied to a foreign object under a decree of the Court of Chancery; and when that object failed, a new scheme was directed. (Attorney General v. City of London, 3 Bro. Ch. Cas. 171; S. C. 1 Ves. Jr. 243.) There are several other cases, in which charities for foreign objects have been carried into effect. In the Provost, &c. of Edinburgh v. Aubery, Ambl. R. 236, there was a devise of £3,500, South Sea annuities, to the plaintiffs, to be applied to the maintenance of poor laborers residing in Edinburgh and the towns adjacent. Lord Hardwicke said, he could not give any directions as to the distribution of the money, that belonging to another jurisdiction, that is, to some of the courts in Scotland; and therefore he directed, that the annuities should be transferred to such persons as the plaintiffs should appoint, to be applied to the trusts in the will. So, in Oliphant v. Hendrie, where A., by will, gave £300 to a religious society in Scotland, to be laid out in the purchase of heritable securities in Scotland, and the interest thereof to be applied to the education of twelve poor children, the court held it a good bequest. (1 Bro. Ch. Cas. 571.) In Campbell v. Radnor, the court held a bequest of £7,000 to be laid out in the purchase of lands in Ireland, and the rents and profits to be distributed among poor people in Ireland, &c. to be valid in law. (1 Bro. Ch. Cas. 171.) So, a legacy towards establishing a bishop in America was supported, although no bishop was then established. (Attorney General v. Bishop of Chester, 1 Bro. Ch. Cas. 444.) In the late case of Curtis v. Hutton, a bequest of personal estate, for the maintenance of a charity (a college) in Scotland, was established. (14 Ves. 537.) And in another still more recent case, a bequest in trust to the magistrates of Inverness in Scotland, to apply

Of course this must be understood, as subject to the implied exception, that the objects of the charities are not against the public policy or laws of the state, where they are sought to be enforced, or put into execution; for no state is under any obligation to give effect to any acts of parties, which contravene its own policy or laws. Upon this ground, where a bequest was given by the will of a testator in England, in trust for certain nunneries in foreign countries, it was held void, and the Court of Chancery refused to enforce it.<sup>1</sup> Upon the same ground, a pecuniary legacy, given for such purposes, as the superior of a foreign convent, or her successor, should judge most expedient, was held void.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1185. But every bequest, which, if it were to be executed in England, would be void under its mortmain laws, is not, as a matter of course, held to be void, solely on that account, when it is to be executed in a foreign country. There must be some other ingredient, making it reprehensible in point of public policy generally, or bringing it within the reach of the mortmain acts. Thus, for example, money bequeathed by a will to be laid out in lands abroad, (as in Scotland,) may be a valid bequest,

There, the bequests were to Roman Catholic clergymen, or for Roman Catholic establishments; and were considered as void and illegal, being equally against the policy and the enactments of the British legislature. § 1186. Where money is bequeathed to charitable purposes abroad, which are to be executed by persons within the same territorial jurisdiction, where the Court of Equity sits, the latter will secure the fund, and cause the charity to be administered under its own direction. But where the charity is to be established abroad, and is to be executed by persons there, the Court not having any jurisdiction to administer it, will simply order the money to be paid over to the proper persons in the foreign county, who are selected by the testator, as the instruments of his benevolence; and will leave it to the foreign local tribunals to see to its due administration.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1187. It is clear upon principle, that the Court of Chancery, merely in virtue of its general jurisdiction over trusts, independently of the special jurisdiction conferred by the statute of 43d. of Elizabeth, ch. 4, must, in many cases, have a right to enforce the due performance of charitable bequests; for, (as has been well observed,) the jurisdiction of Courts of Equity, with respect to charitable bequests, is derived from their general authority to carry into execution the trusts of a will or other instrument, according to the intention expressed in that will or instrument.<sup>1</sup> We shall presently see, that this is strictly true in all cases, where the charity is definite in its objects, is lawful, and is to be executed and regulated by trustees, who are specially appointed for the purpose.<sup>2</sup> But there are many cases, (as we shall also see,) in which the jurisdiction exercised over charities in England can scarcely be said to belong to the Court of Chancery, as a Court of Equity ; *and where it is to be [*431] treated as a personal delegation of authority to the Chancellor, or as an act of the Crown, through the instrumentality of that dignity.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1188. The jurisdiction, exercised by the Chancellor, under the Statute of 43d Elizabeth, ch. 4, over charitable uses, is held to be personal in him, and not exercised in virtue of his ordinary or extraordinary jurisdiction in Chancery ; and in this respect it resembles the jurisdiction exercised by him in cases of idiots and lunatics, which is exercised purely as the personal delegate of the Crown.<sup>4</sup> Where a commission has issued under that statute, any person, excepting to the decree of the commissioners, is treated as a plaintiff in an original cause in Chancery, and the respondents as defendants ; and in the examination of witnesses in the cause, thus brought by way of appeal before the Chancellor, neither side is bound by what appeared before the commissioners ; but they may set forth new matter, if they think proper. § 1189. But as the Court of Chancery may also proceed in many, although not in all, cases of charities by original bill, as well as by commission under the Statute of Elizabeth, the jurisdiction has become mixed in [*432] practice, that is to say, the jurisdiction of *bringing informations in the name of the Attorney General has been mixed with the jurisdiction given to the Chancellor by the statute.<sup>2</sup> So that it is not always easy to ascertain, in what cases he acts as a judge, administering the common duties of a Court of Equity, and in what cases he acts as a mere delegate of the Crown, administering its peculiar duties and prerogatives. And again, there is a distinction between cases of charity, where the Chancellor is to act in the Court of Chancery, and cases where the charity is to be administered by the King, by his sign manual. But in practice the cases have often been confounded from similar causes.<sup>3</sup>

ity generally, and indefinitely, without any trustees pointed out, who are to administer it, there does not seem to be any difficulty in considering it as a personal trust, devolved upon the King, as the constitutional trustee, to be administered by him, through the only proper functionary known to that government, viz. the Lord Chancellor, who is emphatically, for all public purposes of this sort, styled the Keeper of his Conscience.<sup>1</sup> In such a case, it *is not ordina- [*433] rily very important, whether the Chancellor acts as the special delegate of the Crown, or the King acts under the sign manual through his Chancellor, guiding his discretion. In practice, however, it has been found very difficult to distinguish, in what cases the one, or the other course ought, upon the strict principles of prerogative, to be adopted. For where money has been given to trustees for charity generally, without any objects selected, the charity has sometimes been administered by the King under his sign manual, and sometimes by the Court of Chancery. Lord Eldon, after a full review of all the cases, came to the conclusion (which is now the settled rule,) that where there

The whole matter of charities has been regulated by recent statutes, (52 Geo. 3, ch. 101; 59, Geo. 3, ch. 91,) so that proceedings may now, in many cases, be had to establish and execute them in a more brief and summary manner, than formerly. But where a charity is definite in its objects, and lawful in its creation, and it is to be executed and regulated by trustees, whether they are private individuals or a corporation; there, the administration properly belongs to such trustees; and the King, as parens patriæ, has no general authority to regulate or control the administration of the funds. In all such cases, however, if there be any abuse or misuse of the funds by the trustees, the Court of Chancery will interpose, at the instance of the Attorney General, or the parties in interest, to correct such abuse or misuse of the funds. But, in such cases, the interposition of the Court is properly referrible to its general jurisdiction, as a Court of Equity, to prevent abuses of a trust, and not to any original right to direct the management of a charity, or the conduct of the trustees.<sup>1</sup> Indeed, if the trustees of the charity should grossly abuse their trust, a Court of Equity may go the length of taking it away from them, and commit the administration of the charity to other hands.<sup>2</sup> But this is no more than the court will do, in proper cases, for any gross abuse of other trusts.

§ 1191. a. Some doctrines on the subject of what constitutes such an abuse or misuse of charitable trusts, and especially of trusts of a religious nature, by trustees, have been recently promulgated, which are of such deep interest, and general application, that they seem to require a brief notice in this place. Thus, where a meeting house was founded by certain Protestant Dissenters, and the property vested in trustees, upon the trust to be used "for the worship and service of God ;" it has been held, that no doctrines ought to be allowed to be taught in it, which were opposed to the opinions of the founders, although those opinions were not expressed in the trust deed, and no particular doctrines were there required to be taught ; and that it would be a breach of trust in the trustees to allow any other doctrines than those of the founders to be so taught. So that, if the founders were Trinitarians, no Unitarian doctrine should be allowed to be taught there ; and è converso, if the founders were Unitarian, the doctrines of Trinitarians should not there be taught. —The effect of this doctrine is to expound the language of the instrument, not upon its own terms, but to incorporate into them the presumed parol intentions of the parties not expressed in the instrument. It hence assumes, as a necessary result, that the founders never could intend, that any other religious doctrines than what they themselves then professed, should be taught therein throughout all future times.<sup>1</sup>

Shore, 7 Sim. R. 290, note. In this latter case Lord Lyndhurst in giving judgment stated the general ground of the doctrine in these words : " In every case of charity, whether the object of the charity be directed to religious purposes or to purposes purely civil, it is the duty of the court to give effect to the intent of the founder, provided this can be done without infringing any known rule of law. It is a principle, that is uniformly acted upon in courts of Equity. If, as they have stated, the terms of the deed of foundation be clear and precise in the language, and clear and precise in the application, the course of the court is free from difficulty. If, on the other hand, the terms, which are made use of, are obscure, doubtful or equivocal, either in themselves or in the application of them, it then becomes the duty of the court to ascertain by evidence, as well as it is able, what was the intent of the founder of the charity, in what sense the particular expressions were used. It is a question of evidence, and that evidence will vary with the circumstances of each particular case. It is a question of fact to be determined, and the moment the fact is known and ascertained, then the application of the principles is clear and easy. It can scarcely be necessary to cite authorities in support of these principles. They are founded in common sense and common justice ; but if it were necessary to refer to any authority, I might refer to the case, which has been already mentioned, the case of the Attorney General v. Pearson, and to another case, which was cited at the bar, the case in the House of Lords. Throughout those judgments the principles, which have been stated, were acknowledged and acted upon by a noble and learned judge, of more experience in courts of Equity, and more experience in questions of this nature, than any other living person. I look upon it, then, that these principles are clear and established ; that they admit of no doubt whatever." It is not my design to enter into any comments upon the doctrine stated in the text. That the judgments are free from difficulty, and that they stand upon as unquestionable principles, as the learned Judges suppose in their reasoning, may admit of serious doubt and discussion. No such doctrine has as yet ever been promulgated in America ; and from the peculiar circumstances of the country and the diversity of religious opinions it is improbable, that it ever will.

§ 1192. a. It seems, that the statute of limitations, and the bar from lapse of time will not be allowed to prevail in cases of charitable trusts, in the same manner as it would in cases of mere private trusts. Thus, in the case of a charitable trust, where a corporation had purchased with notice of the trust, and had held the property under an adverse title for one hundred and fifty years, it was decided, that the corporation should reconvey the property upon the original trusts.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1193. These are the principal doctrines and decisions, under the Statute of Elizabeth respecting charitable uses, which it seems most important to bring in review before the learned reader. It may not be useless to add, that the Statute of Mortmain and Charities of the 9th of Geo. II, ch. 36, has very materially narrowed the extent and operation of the Statute of Elizabeth; and has formed a permanent barrier against what the statute declares to be a “public mischief,” which “had of late greatly increased, by many large and improvident alienations or dispositions, made by languishing and dying persons or others, to uses called charitable uses, to take place after their deaths, to the disherison of their lawful heirs.”

§ 1194. This statute of 9th George, II. ch. 36, was never extended to, or adopted by, the American Colonies generally.<sup>2</sup> But certain of the provisions of it, and of the older Statutes of Mortmain,<sup>3</sup> have been adopted by some of the States of the Union.<sup>4</sup> And it deserves the

CHAPTER XXXII.

IMPLIED TRUSTS.

§ 1195. We have now in pursuance of the plan already laid down,<sup>1</sup> gone over some of the most important branches of Express Trusts, and shall next proceed to the consideration of some of the more usual cases of IMPLIED TRUSTS, including therein cases of constructive and resulting trusts.<sup>2</sup> Implied trusts may be divided into two general classes; first, those, which stand upon the presumed intention of the parties; secondly, those, which are independent of any such intention, and are forced upon the conscience of the party by operation of law ; as, for example, in cases of meditated fraud, imposition, notice of an adverse equity, and other cases of a similar nature. It has been said to be a general rule, that the law never implies, and a Court of Equity never presumes a trust, except in case of absolute necessity.<sup>1</sup> Perhaps, this is stating the doctrine a little too strongly. The more correct exposition of the general rule would seem to be, that a trust is never presumed or implied, as intended by the parties, unless taking all the circumstances together, that is the fair and reasonable interpretation of their acts and transactions.

<sup>2</sup> Lord Nottingham's judgment, in Cook v. Fountain, 3 Swanst. R. 585, contains a classification of trusts, and of the general principles, which regulate implied trusts. "All trusts," (said he,) "are either, first, express trusts, which are raised and created by act of the parties; or implied trusts, which are raised or created by act or construction of law. Again; express trusts are declared either by word or writing; and these declarations appear either by direct and manifest proof, or violent and necessary presumption. These last are commonly called presumptive trusts; and that is, when the court, upon consideration of all circumstances, presumes there was a declaration, either by word or writing, though the plain and direct proof thereof be not extant. In the case in question, there is no pretence of any proof, that there was a trust declared, either by word or in writing; so the trust, if there be any, must either be implied by the law, or presumed by the court. There is one good, general, and infallible rule, that goes to both these kinds of trusts. It is such a general rule, as never deceives; a general rule, to which there is no exception; and that is this; the law never implies, the court never presumes a trust, but in case of absolute necessity. The reason of this rule is sacred; for, if the Chancery do once take liberty to construe a trust by implication of law, or to presume a trust unnecessarily, a way is opened to the Lord Chancellor to construe or presume any man in England out of his estate. And so at last every case in court will become casus pro amico."

§ 1196. And, first, let us consider such implied trusts as are founded in the supposed intention of the parties. The most simple form, perhaps, in which such an implied trust can be presented, is that of money, or other property, delivered by one person to another, to be by the latter paid or delivered over to and for the benefit of a third person. In such a case, (as we have seen,<sup>2</sup>) the party so receiving the money, or other property, holds it upon a trust ; a trust necessarily implied from the nature of the transaction, in favor of such beneficiary, although no express agreement has been entered into to that effect.<sup>3</sup> But, even here, the trust is not, under all circumstances, absolute ; for if the trust is purely voluntary, and without any consideration, and the beneficiary has not become a party to it by his express assent after notice of it, it is revocable; and if revoked, then the original trust is gone, and an implied trust results in favor of the party, who originally created it.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1196. a. Another form, in which a resulting trust may appear, is, where there are certain trusts created either by will or deed, which fail in whole or in part; or which are of such an indefinite nature that Courts of Equity will not carry them into effect; or which are illegal in their nature and character; or which are fully executed and yet leave an unexhausted residuum. In all such cases there will arise a resulting trust to the party creating the trust, or to his heirs and legal representatives, as the case may require.<sup>2</sup>

Hutchinson*, 1 Keen R. 42, 50, where a father made a deed to a son upon certain trusts for himself, his wife, and her children by him, after his decease, and no trust was declared of the surplus, it was held, that there was no resulting trust to the father; and that the son took the surplus. On this occasion, Lord Langdale said; "Upon this deed a question is made, whether there is or is not a resulting trust to the grantor as to the surplus, with respect to which there is no declaration of trust; and for the purpose of determining that question, it is necessary to look carefully to the language of the deed, and to the circumstances of the particular case. In general, where an estate or fund is given in trust for a particular purpose, the remainder, after that purpose is satisfied, will result to the grantor; but that resulting trust may be rebutted even by parol evidence, and certainly cannot take effect, where a contrary intention, to be collected from the whole instrument, is indicated by the grantor. The distinctions applicable to cases of this kind are pointed out in the case of King v. Denison, by Lord Eldon, who adopts the principles laid down by Lord Hardwicke in Hill v. the Bishop of London. The conclusion, to which

§ 1197. Another common transaction, which gives rise to the presumption of an implied resulting use or trust, is, where a conveyance is made of land or other property without any consideration, express or implied, or any distinct use or trust stated. In such a case, the intent is presumed to be, that it shall be held by the grantee for the benefit of the grantor, as a resulting trust.<sup>1</sup> But if there be an express declaration, that it is to be in trust, or for the use of another person, nothing will be presumed against such a declaration. And if there be either a good or a valuable consideration, there, Equity will immediately raise a use or trust cor-

Lord Hardwicke comes is, that the question, whether there is, or is not a resulting trust, must depend upon the intention of the grantor. 'No general rule' he observes, 'is to be laid down, unless where a real estate is devised to be sold for payment of debts, and no more is said; there it is clearly a resulting trust. But if any particular reason occurs, why the testator should intend a beneficial interest to the devisee, there are no precedents to warrant the Court to say, it shall not be a beneficial interest.' Let us consider, what was the intention of the grantor of this deed. The father being upwards of eighty years of age, executes a deed, which recites, that he was desirous of settling the property, to which he was entitled, therein described, in such manner as to make a provision for himself during his life, and for his wife and children after his death, and for such other purposes as were thereafter expressed. This was the object he had in view; this was his intention as expressed in the instrument. He proceeds to make a release and assignment of the property comprised in the deed, to his son, 'upon the trusts thereafter declared concerning the same;' and when he comes to declare those trusts, he does not exhaust the whole of the property. But I am of opinion that this is immaterial; for, after having carefully looked through the whole of this deed, I have come to the conclusion, considering the relation between the parties, and the object and purport of the instrument, that the father intended to part with all beneficial interest in the property, and that he meant his son to have the benefit of that part of the property of which the trusts are not expressly declared." respondent to such consideration,<sup>1</sup> in the absence of any controlling declaration or other circumstances.

§ 1198. This is in strict conformity to the rule of the common law, applied to resulting uses, which, indeed, were originally nothing but resulting trusts. Thus, a feoffment, made without consideration, was, at a very early period of the common law, held to be made for the use of feoffor.<sup>2</sup> Lord Bacon, after repudiating a distinction set up in Dyer, 146 b., assigning the origin of this doctrine to the time of the statute, quia emptores, said; “The intendment of an use to the feoffor, where the feoffment was made without consideration, grew long after, when uses waxed general; and for this reason; because, when feoffments were made, it grew doubtful, whether the estates were in use or in purchase; because purchases were things notorious, and uses were things secret. The Chancellor thought it more convenient to put the purchaser to prove his consideration, than the feoffor and his heirs to prove the trust; and so made the intendments towards the use, and put the proof upon the purchaser.”<sup>3</sup> Be the origin of the doctrine, however, as it may, it is firmly established in Equity Jurisprudence in matters of trust. And it is not in any manner affected by the provisions of the Statute of Frauds of 29th Charles II. ch. 3; for that statute contains an express exception of “trusts arising by implication, and transferred and extinguished by acts of law.”<sup>4</sup>

§ 1199. The same principle applies to cases, where a man makes a feoffment, or other conveyance, and parts with or limits a particular estate only, and leaves the residue undisposed of. In such *a case the [*442] residue will result to the use of the feoffor or grantor, even though the feoffment or conveyance be made for a consideration. For it is the intent, which guides the use; and, here, the party having expressly declared a particular estate of the use, the presumption is, that, if he had intended to part with the residue, he would have declared that intention also.<sup>1</sup> This distinction, however, is to be observed in cases, where a consideration, though purely nominal, is stated in the deed. If no uses are declared, the grantee will take the whole use; and there will be no resulting use for the grantor; because the payment, even of a nominal consideration, shows an intent, that the grantee should have some use; and no other being specified, he must take the whole use. But where a particular use is declared, there the residue of the use results to the grantor; for the presumption, that the grantor meant to part with the whole use, is thereby repelled.<sup>2</sup>

(m); Id. ch. 5, § 5, note (q); Ante, § 972. In cases within the Statute of 29 Charles II., ch. 3, it is not necessary that the trust should be in writing. Whitney*, (4 Russ. R. 422,) stands upon the utmost limits of the doctrine of the inadmissibility of parol evidence, as to resulting trusts. A son had conveyed an estate to his father nominally as purchaser for the consideration expressed in the deed of £400, but really as a trustee, in order that the father, who was in better credit than the son, might raise money upon it by way of mortgage for the use of the son. The father died shortly afterwards before any money was raised, having by his will made a general devise of all his real estate. The law was held by Sir John Leach to be within the statute of frauds, and that parol evidence was not admissible to prove the trust. On this occasion the learned Judge said :—" There is here no pretence of fraud, nor is there any misapprehension of the parties, with respect to the effect of the instruments. It was intended, that the father should by legal instruments appear to be the legal owner of the estate. There is here no trust arising or resulting by the implication or construction of law. The case of Cripps v. Jee is the nearest to this case in its circumstances. There, the estate being subject to certain incumbrances, the grantor mortgaged the equity of redemption by deeds of lease and release to two persons of the name of Rogers, as purchasers, for a consideration stated in the deed ; the real intention of the parties being, that the Rogerses should be mere trustees for the grantor, and should proceed to sell the estate, and after paying the incumbrances, should pay the surplus money to the grantor. In the book of accounts of one of the Rogerses, there appeared an entry in his handwriting of a year's interest paid to an incumbrancer on the estate, on an account of the grantor and other entries of the repayment of that interest to Rogers by the grantor ; and there was also evidence of a note and bond given by the Rogerses to a creditor of the grantor, in which they stated themselves to be trustees of the estate of the grantor. Lord Kenyon held, that, this written evidence being inconsistent with the fact, that the Rogerses were the actual purchasers of the equity of redemption, further evidence was admissible to prove the truth of the transaction. Unfortunately, there is here no evidence in writing, which is inconsistent with the fact, that the father was the actual purchaser of this estate ; and it does appear to me, that, to give effect to the trust here, would be in truth to repeal the statute of frauds. Considering myself bound, therefore, to treat this case as a purchase by the father from the Plaintiff, there does, however, arise an equity for the Plaintiff, which, consistently with the facts stated and proved, and under the prayer for general relief, he is entitled to claim. It is stated and proved, that no

but for particular objects and purposes, or on particular trusts. In all such cases, if those objects, or purposes, or trusts, by accident or otherwise, fail, and do not take effect; or if they are all accomplished and do not exhaust the whole property; there, a resulting trust will arise for the benefit of the grantor or deviser and his heirs.<sup>1</sup>

following observations occur. If the consideration money is expressed in the deed to be paid by the person, in whose name the conveyance is taken, and nothing appears in such conveyances to create a presumption that the purchase money belonged to another, then parol proof cannot be admitted after the death of the nominal purchaser to prove a resulting trust; for that would be contrary to the Statute of Frauds and Perjuries. Kirk v. Webb, Prec. Ch. 84; Walter de Chirton's Case, Ibid. 88; Heron v. Heron, Ibid. 163; Newton v. Preston, Ibid. 103; Gascoyne v. Thwing, 1 Vern. 366; Hooper v. Eyles, 2 Vern. 480; Crop v. Norton, 2 Atk. 75. But if the nominal purchaser, in his lifetime, gives a declaration of, or confesses the trust, then it takes it out of the statute. Ambrose v. Ambrose, 1 P. Will. 322; Ryall v. Ryall, 1 Atk. 59, 60. In Lane v. Dighton, Ambl. R. 409, there was evidence in Mr. Dighton's handwriting, that the trust stocks had been sold, and the money laid out from time to time in the purchase of land. So, if it appears on the face of the conveyance (whether by recital or otherwise), that the purchase was made with the money of a third person, that will create a trust in his favor. Kirk v. Webb, Prec. Ch. 84; Deg. v. Deg, 2 P. Will. 414; Ryall v. Ryall, 1 Atk. 59; Younge v. Peachy, 2 Atk. 257." As to the proper proof of the payment of the purchase money in such a case, Mr. Maddock, in his Treatise on the Principles and Practice in Chancery, (vol. 2, p. 98,) says; "Such proof may appear either from expressions or recitals in the purchase deed (see 2 Vern. 168; Prec. Ch. 104; Kirk v. Webb, Ibid. 84, cited 1 Sanders on Uses, p. 258); or from some memorandum or note of the nominal purchaser (O'Hara v. O'Neal, 2 Eq. Abr. 745); or from his answer to a bill of discovery (Cottington v. Fletcher, 2 Atk. 155; but see Edwards v. Moore, 4 Ves. 23, cited 1 Sand. 258); or from papers left by him, and discovered after his death (Ryall v. Ryall, Ambl. R. 413; Lane v. Dighton, Ibid. 409). But, whether, after the death of the supposed nominal purchaser, parol proof alone is admissible, against the express declaration of the deed, has been a subject of controversy (see 1 Sand. on Uses, p. 259, and the note to Lloyd v. Spillet, 2 Atk. 150; Roberts on Frauds, p. 99; Sugd. Vend. and Purch. 616, 617, 7th edit.; 2 Sugden on Vendors, p. 136, 137, 9th edit.), though it seems it may. See *Lench v. the legal estate, whether freehold, copyhold, or leasehold, whether taken in the names of the purchaser and others jointly, or in the name of others without the purchaser, whether in one name or several, whether jointly or successively, (successive) results to the man, who advances the purchase money. This is a general proposition, supported by all the cases; and there is nothing to contradict it. And it goes on a strict analogy to the rule of the common law, that where a feoffment is made without consideration, the use results to the feoffor.<sup>1</sup> In truth, it has its origin in the natural presumption, in the absence of all rebutting circumstances, that he, who supplies the money, means the purchase to be for his own benefit, rather than for that of another; and that the conveyance in the name of the latter is a matter of convenience and arrangement between the parties for other collateral purposes. The same doctrine is applied to cases, where securities are taken in the name of another person. As if A. takes a bond in the name of B., for a debt due to himself, B. will be a trustee of A. for the money.<sup>2</sup>

→ § 1201. a. But the doctrine is strictly limited to cases, where the purchase has been made in the name of one person, and the purchase-money has been paid by another. For where a man employs another person by parol, as an agent, to buy an estate for him, and the latter buys it accordingly in his own name, and no part of the purchase-money is paid by the principal;

there, if the agent denies the trust, and there is no written agreement or document establishing it, he cannot, by a suit in Equity, compel the agent to convey the estate to him; for (as has been truly said) that would be decidedly in the teeth of the Statute of Frauds.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1201. b. There is an exception to the doctrine of a resulting trust in favor of a purchaser, who pays the money, and takes the conveyance in the name of a third person, which stands upon a principle of public policy; and that is, that Courts of Equity will never raise a resulting trust, where it would contravene any statuteable provisions founded in public policy, or would assist the parties in evading these provisions. Thus, if an alien, for the purpose of evading any law of a state, prohibiting aliens from holding real estate, should purchase land, and pay the money, and take a conveyance in the name of a third person, without any written declaration of trust, there, courts of Equity would never raise or enforce a resulting trust in favor of the alien purchaser, in fraud of the rights of the state, or the law of the land.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1202. But there are other exceptions to the doctrine of a resulting or implied trust, even where the principal has paid the purchase-money, as has been already intimated, or, perhaps, more properly speaking, as the resulting or implied trust is, in such cases, a mere matter of presumption, it may be rebutted by other circumstances, established in evidence, and even by parol proofs, which satisfactorily *contradict [*446] it.<sup>1</sup> And resulting or implied trusts in such cases may in like manner be rebutted, as well to part of the land, as to part of the interest in the land purchased in the name of another.<sup>2</sup> Thus, where A. took a mortgage in the name of B., declaring that he intended the mortgage to be for B.'s benefit, and that the principal after his own death, should be B.'s; and A. received the interest therefor during his lifetime; it was held, that the mortgage belonged to B. after the death of A.<sup>3</sup> But a more common case of rebutting the presumption of a trust is, where the purchase may be fairly deemed to be made for another from motives of natural love and affection. Thus, for example, if a parent should purchase in the name of a son, the purchase would be deemed primâ facie, as intended as an advancement; so as to rebut the presumption of a resulting trust for the parent.

§ 1203. The moral obligation of a parent to provide for his children is the foundation of this exception, or rather of this rebutter of a presumption; since it is not only natural, but reasonable in the highest degree, to presume, that a parent, by purchasing in the name of a child, means a benefit for the latter, in discharge of this moral obligation, and also as a token of parental affection. This presumption in favor of the child, being thus founded in natural affection and moral obligation, ought not to be frittered away by nice refinements.<sup>1</sup> It is perhaps rather to be lamented, that it has been suffered to be broken in upon by any sort of evidence of a merely circumstantial nature.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup> Lord Ch. Justice Eyre, in Dyer v. Dyer, 2 Cox, R. 92, has discussed this matter with great ability. "It is the established doctrine," said he, "of a Court of Equity, that this resulting trust may be rebutted by circumstances in evidence. The cases go one step further, and prove, that the circumstance of one or more nominees being a child or children of the purchaser, it is to operate by rebutting the resulting trust. And it has been determined in so many cases that the nominee being a child shall have such operation, as a circumstance of evidence, that we should be disturbing land-marks, if we suffered either of these propositions to be called in question; namely, that such circumstance shall rebut the resulting trust, and that it shall do so, as a circumstance of evidence. I think it would have been a more simple doctrine, if the children had been considered as purchasers for a valuable consideration. Natural love and affection raised a use at Common Law; surely then it will rebut a trust resulting to the father. This way of considering it would have shut out all the circumstances of evidence, which have found their way into many of the cases, and would have prevented some very nice distinctions, and not very easy to be understood. Considering it as a circumstance of evidence, there must be of course evidence admitted on the other side. Thus, it was resolved into a question of intent, which was getting into a very wide sea, without very certain guides. In the most simple case of all, which is that of a father purchasing in the name of his son, it is said, that this shows the father intended an advancement, and therefore the resulting trust is rebutted. But then a circumstance is added to this, namely, that the son happened to be provided for; then the question is, did the father intend to advance a son already provided for? Lord Nottingham could not get over this; and he ruled, that in such a case the resulting trust was not rebutted; and in Pole v. Pole, in Vesey, Lord Hardwicke thought so too. And yet the rule in a

Court of Equity, as recognised in other cases, is, that the father is the only judge, as to the question of a son's provision. That distinction, therefore, of the son being provided for, or not, is not very solidly taken, or uniformly adhered to. It is then said, that a purchase in the name of a son is a prima facie advancement (and indeed it seems difficult to put it in any way. In some of the cases some circumstances have appeared, which go pretty much against that presumption; as where the father has entered and kept possession, and taken the rents; or where he has surrendered or devised the estate; or where the son has given receipts in the name of the father. The answer given is, that the father took the rents, as guardian of his son. Now, would the court sustain a bill by the son against the father for these rents? I should think it pretty difficult to succeed in such a bill. As to the surrender and devise, it is answered, that these are subsequent acts; whereas the intention of the father in taking the purchase in the son's name must be proved by concomitant acts; yet these are pretty strong acts of ownership, and assert the right, and coincide with the possession and enjoyment. As to the son's giving receipts in the name of the father, it is said, that the son, being under age, he could not give receipts in any other manner. But I own this reasoning does not satisfy me. In the more complicated cases, where the life of the son is one of the lives to take in succession, other distinctions are taken. If the custom of the manor be, that the first taken might surrender the whole lease, that shall make the other lessees trustees for him. But this custom operates on the legal estate, not on the equitable interest; and therefore this is not a very solid argument. When the lessees are to take successively, it is said, that, as the father cannot take the whole in his own name, but must insert other names in the lease, then the children shall be trustees for the father. And to be sure, if the circumstance of a child being the nominee is not decisive the other way, there is a great deal of weight in this observation. There may be many prudential reasons for putting in the life of a child in preference to that of any other person. And if in that case, it is to be collected from circumstances, whether an advancement was meant, it will be difficult to find such as will support that idea. To be sure, taking the estate in the name of the child, which the father might have taken in his own, affords a strong argument of such an intent. But where the estate must necessarily be taken to him in succession, the inference is very different. These are the difficulties, which occur, from considering the purchase in the son's name, as a circumstance of evidence only. Now, if it were once laid down, that the son was to be taken, as a purchaser for a valuable consideration, all these matters of sumption is, that it is intended as an advancement, unless the contrary is established in evidence.<sup>1</sup> And the like presumption exists in the case of a purchase of a husband in the name of his wife, and of securities taken in her name. Indeed, the presumption is stronger in the case of a wife than of a child; for she cannot at law be the trustee of her husband. The same rule applies to the case of a joint purchase by the husband, in the name of himself, his wife, and his daughters; and it will be presumed an advancement and provision for the wife and his daughter; and the husband and wife will be held to take one moiety by entireties, and the daughter to take the other moiety.<sup>2</sup>

[*449] *§ 1205. Hence, also, it is, that where a purchase is made by a father in the joint names of himself and of a child, unprovided for, (whatever may be the case, as to a child otherwise provided for,) if the father dies, the child will hold the estate, and have the benefit thereof by survivorship against the heir at law of the father, and against all volunteers claiming under the father, and also against purchasers from him with notice.<sup>3</sup> So, where a father transferred stock from his own name into the joint names of his son, and of a person, whom the father and son employed as their banker to receive dividends, and the father told the banker to carry the dividends, as they were received, to the son's account; and they were accordingly received and enjoyed by the son during his father's lifetime; it was held, that the transfer created an executed trust for the son, and that he was absolutely entitled to the stock.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1206. In the cases of joint purchases, made by two persons, who advance and pay the purchase-money in equal proportions, and take a conveyance to them and their heirs, it constitutes a jointtenancy, that is, a purchase by them jointly of the chance of survivorship; and of course the survivor will take the whole estate. This is the rule at law; and it prevails also in Equity under the same circumstances, for, unless there are controlling circumstances, Equity follows the law.<sup>2</sup> But wherever such circumstances occur, Courts of Equity will lay hold of them to prevent a survivorship, and create a trust; for jointtenancy is not favored in Equity.<sup>3</sup> Thus, if a joint purchase is made in the name of one of the purchasers, and the other pays, or secures his share of the purchase-money, he will be entitled to his share, as a

resulting trust.<sup>1</sup> So, if two persons advance a sum of money by way of mortgage, and take a mortgage to them jointly, and one of them dies, the survivor shall not have the whole money due on the mortgage; but the representative of the deceased party shall have his proportion, as a trust; for the nature of the transaction, as a loan of money, repels the presumption of an intention to hold the mortgage, as a jointtenancy.<sup>2</sup> So, if two persons jointly purchase an estate, and pay unequal proportions of the purchase-money, and take the conveyance in their joint names, in case of the death of either of them there will be no survivorship; for the very circumstance, that they have paid the money in unequal proportions, excludes any presumption, that they intended to bargain for the chance of survivorship.<sup>3</sup> They are, therefore, deemed to pur-

advancing the smaller proportion, it is fair to presume, that no such intention existed. The inequality of proportion can scarcely be attributed to the relative value of the lives; because neither of the parties can be supposed not to know, that the other may, immediately after the purchase, compel a legal partition of the estate, or may sever the jointtenancy by a clandestine act." Sugden on Vendors, ch. 15, § 1, p. 607, note (I.), 7th edit., S. P. and note; 2 Sugden on Vendors, ch. 15, § 1, p. 127, 128, note I, 9th edit. There is much force in these observations of the latter learned author. But the real ground of the distinction probably is, that jointtenancy is not favored in Equity; that where there is nothing, demonstrating an apparent intent to vary the rule of law, it must prevail; so that in cases of equal advances, no such intent is apparent. But that where the advances are unequal, there is nothing in the transaction necessarily leading to the conclusion, that the parties mean to follow the rule of law; and then a Court of Equity is not bound to presume any intention to follow it; since it may work an inequality in point of right and justice. In other words, a Court of Equity will not adopt a rule of law, which has no foundation in general justice or convenience, unless it is compelled to do so by the absence of all circumstances, which will enable it to control it. See Ante, § 1201.

and the conveyance is taken ; whether in the name of one partner, or of all the partners ; whether in the name of a stranger alone, or of a stranger jointly with one partner. In all these cases, let the legal title be vested in whom it may, it is in Equity deemed partnership property, not subject to survivorship ; and the partners are deemed the cestuis que trust thereof.<sup>1</sup> A Court of Law, may, nay, must, in general, view it only according to the state of the legal title. And if the legal title is vested in one partner, or in a stranger, a bonâ fide purchaser of real estate from him, having no notice, either express or constructive, of its being partnership property, will be entitled to hold it free from any claim of the partnership.<sup>2</sup> But if he has such notice, then in Equity he is clearly bound by the trust ; and he takes it cum onere, exactly like every other purchaser of a trust estate.<sup>3</sup> whose name it is purchased, may, upon a dissolution of the partnership, be entitled to hold it as his own; so that it will be trust property sub modo only. Thus, for example, an office may be purchased or a license be obtained in the name of a partner out of the partnership funds, (as for example, a stockbroker's license, or the office of a clerk in court) to be used during the continuance of the partnership for partnership purposes by the person obtaining the same. § 1208. Another illustration of the doctrine of implied and resulting trusts arises from the appointment of an executor of a last will and testament. *In [*453] cases of such an appointment the executor is entitled, both at law and in Equity, (for in this respect Equity follows the law,) to the whole surplus of the personal estate, after payment of all debts and charges, for his own benefit, unless it is otherwise disposed of by the testator.<sup>2</sup> The inclination of Courts of Equity has been strongly evinced to lay hold of any circumstances, which may rebut the presumption of such a gift to the executor; and some very nice and curious distinctions have been taken in England, in order to escape from the operation of the general rule. In America the surplus is by law universally distributable among the next of kin in the absence of all contrary expressions of intention by the testator ; and, therefore, it is scarcely necessary to present these distinctions at large. In general it may be stated, that at law the appointment of an executor vests in him all the personal estate of the testator ; and the surplus, after the payment of all debts, will belong to him. But in Equity, if it can be collected from any circumstance or expression in the will, that the testator intended his executor to have only the office, and not the beneficial interest, such intention will receive effect ; and the executor will be deemed a trustee for those, on whom the law would have cast the surplus, in cases of a complete intestacy.<sup>1</sup>

death of the residuary legatee, in the lifetime of the testator, it is undisposed of at the time of the testator's death. Nichols v. Crisp, Amb. 769; Bennet v. Bachelor, 3 Bro. Ch. R. 28. 4. The next class of cases, in which an executor shall be excluded from the residue, is, where the testator has given him a legacy expressly for his care and trouble; which, as observed by Lord Hardwicke in Bp. of Cloyne v. Young, 2 Ves. 97, is a very strong case for a resulting trust; not on the foot of giving all and some; but that it was evidence, that the testator meant him, as a trustee, for some other, for whom the care and trouble should be, as it could not be for himself; Foster v. Munt, 1 Vern. 473; Rachfield v. Careless, 2 P. Will. 157; Cordel v. Noden, 2 Vern. 148; Newstead v. Johnstone, 2 Atk. 46. 5. Though the objection to the executor's taking part and all has been thought a very weak and insufficient ground for excluding him from the residue, as the testator might intend the particular legacy to him in case of the personal estate falling short; yet it has been allowed to prevail; and it is now a settled rule in Equity, that if a sole executor has a legacy generally and absolutely given to him, (for, if given under certain limitation, which will be hereafter considered, it will not exclude,) he shall be excluded from the residue; Cook v. Walker, cited 2 Vern. 676; Joslin v. Brewit, Bunb. 112; Davers v. Dewes, 3 P. Will. 40; Farrington v. Knightly, 1 P. Will. 544; Vachell v. Jefferies, Prec. Ch. 170; Petit v. Smith, 1 P. Will. 7. Nor will the circumstance of the legacy being specific be sufficient to entitle him; Randall v. Bookey, 2 Vern. 425; Southcot v. Watson, 3 Atk. 226; Martin v. Rebow, 1 Bro. Ch. R. 154; Nesbit v. Murry, 5 Ves. 149. Nor will the testator's having bequeathed legacies to his next of kin vary the rule; Bayley v. Powell, 2 Vern. 361; Wheeler v. Sheers, Moseley, 288; Andrew v. Clark, 2 Ves. 162; Kennedy v. Stainsby, E. 1755, stated in a note, 1 Ves. jr. 66; for the rule is founded rather on a presumption of intent to exclude the executor, than to create a trust for his next of kin; and, therefore, if there be no next of kin, a trust shall result for the crown; Middleton v. Spicer, 1 Bro. Ch. R. 201. 6. Where the testator appears to have intended to dispose of any part of his personal estate; Urquhart v. King, 7 Ves. 225. 7. Where the residue is given to the executors, as tenants in common, and one of the executors dies, whereby his share lapses, the next of kin, and not the surviving executors, shall have the lapsed share; Page v. Page, 2 P. Will. 489; 1 Ves. jr. 66, 542. With respect to co-executors, they are clearly within the three first stated grounds, on which a sole executor shall be excluded from the residue. And as to the fourth ground of exclusion, it seems to be now settled, that a legacy, given to one executor, expressly for his care

guishes his debt, and it cannot be revived; although a debt due by an administrator would only be suspended. [*456] The reason of the difference is, that the one is the act of the law, and the other is the act

and trouble, will, though no legacy be given to his co-executor, exclude. White v. Evans, 4 Ves. 21. As to the fifth ground of exclusion of a sole executor, several points of distinction are material in its application to co-executors. A sole executor is excluded from the residue by the bequest of a legacy; because it shall not be supposed, that he was intended to take part and all. But if there be two or more executors, a legacy to one is not within such objection; for the testator might intend a preference to him pro tanto; Colesworth v. Brangwin, Prec. Ch. 323; Johnson v. Twist, cited 2 Ves. 166; Buffar v. Bradford, 2 Atk. 220. So where several executors have unequal legacies, whether pecuniary or specific, they shall not be thereby excluded from the residue; Brasbridge v. Woodroffe, 2 Atk. 69; Bowker v. Hunter, 1 Bro. Ch. R. 328; Blinkhorn v. Feast, 2 Ves. 27. But where equal pecuniary legacies are given to two or more executors, a trust shall result for those, on whom, in case of an intestacy, the law would have cast it. Petit v. Smith, 1 P. Will. 7; Carey v. Goodinge, 3 Bro. Ch. R. 110; Muckleston v. Brown, 6 Ves. 64. But see Heron v. Newton, 9 Mod. 11. Qu. whether distinct specific legacies, of equal value to several executors, will exclude them? It now remains to consider, in what cases an executor shall not be excluded from the residue. Upon which it may be stated as an universal rule, that a Court of Equity will not interfere to the prejudice of the executor's legal right, if such legal right can be reconciled with the intention of the testator, expressed by, or to be collected from, his will. And, therefore, even the bequest of a legacy to the executor shall not exclude, if such legacy be consistent with the intent, that the executor shall take the residue; as where a gift to the executor is an exception out of another legacy. Griffith v. Rogers, Prec. Ch. 231; Newstead v. Johnstone, 2 Atk. 45; Southcot v. Watson, 3 Atk. 229. Or where the executorship is limited to a particular period, or determinable on a contingency, and the thing bequeathed to the executor, upon such contingency taking place, is bequeathed over. Hoskins v. Hoskins, Prec. Ch. 263. Or where the gift is only a limited interest, as for the life of the executor. Lady Granville v. Duchess of Beaufort, 1 P. Will. 114; Jones v. Westcombe, Prec. Ch. 316; Nourse v. Finch, 1 Ves. jr. 356. Or where the wife is executrix, and the bequest is of her paraphernalia. Lawson v. Lawson, 7 Bro. P. O. 521; Ball v. Smith, 2 Vern. 675; 3 Woodes. of the party.<sup>1</sup> But in Equity a debt due by an executor is not extinguished; and it will go to the same party, who would be entitled to the surplus estate, if the debt were due from a third person.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1210. Another illustration of the doctrine of implied trusts arises from acts done by trustees, apparently within the scope and objects of their duty. Thus, for instance, if a trustee, authorized to purchase lands for his cestuis que trust, or beneficiaries, should purchase lands with the trust money, and take the conveyance in his own name, without *any [*457] declaration of the trust, a Court of Equity would, in such a case, deem the property to be held as a resulting trust for the persons beneficially entitled thereto.<sup>3</sup> For, in such a case, a Court of Equity will presume, that the party meant to act in pursuance of his trust, and not in violation of it. So, where a man has covenanted to lay out money in the purchase of lands, or to pay money to trustees to be laid out in the purchase of lands; if he afterwards purchases lands to the amount, they will be affected with the trust; for it will be presumed, at least until the contrary absolutely appears, that he purchased in fulfilment of his covenant.<sup>4</sup> In every such case, however, it must be clear, that the land has been paid for out of the trust money; and if this appears, a trust will be implied, not only when the party may be presumed to act in execution of the trust; but even when the investment is in violation of the trust. For, in every such case, where the trust money can be distinctly traced, a Court of Equity will fasten a trust upon the land in favor of the persons beneficially entitled to the money.<sup>1</sup>

[*458] * § 1211. Upon grounds of an analogous nature, the general doctrine proceeds, that whatever acts are done by trustees in regard to the trust property, shall be deemed to be done for the benefit of the cestui que trust, and not for the benefit of the trustee.<sup>2</sup> If, therefore, the trustee makes any contract, or does any act in regard to the trust estate for his own benefit,

In the case of a purchase of land by a trustee in his own name, in pursuance of the trust, the cestui que trust is entitled to the estate. But, where it is purchased with trust money, in violation of the trust, Mr. Atherley is of opinion, that the cestui que trust has a lien only on the estate, and not a right to the estate. There is much sound sense in the distinction; but he admits, that Bennett v. Mayhew is apparently against it. Atherley on Marr. Sett. ch. 28, p. 443, 444. It is of course to be understood, that the cestui que trust is not in any case, where the trust money is invested in lands or other things in fraud or breach of the trust, bound to take the land, or to insist on his lien. He has an election to do so, or not. Ibid.

he will, nevertheless, be held responsible therefor to the cestui que trust, as upon an implied trust. Thus, for example, if a trustee should purchase a lien or mortgage on the trust estate at a discount, he would not be allowed to avail himself of the difference; but the purchase would be held a trust for the benefit of the cestui que trust.<sup>1</sup> So, if a trustee should renew a lease of the trust estate, he would be held bound to account to the cestui que trust for all advantages made thereby.<sup>2</sup>

→ § 1211. a. The same principle will apply to persons standing in other fiduciary relations to each other. Thus, for example, if an agent, who is employed to purchase for another, purchases in his own name, or for his own account, he will be held to be a trustee of the principal at the option of another.<sup>3</sup> So, if he is employed to purchase up a debt of his principal, and he does so at an undervalue or discount, the principal will be entitled to the benefit thereof, in the nature of a trust.<sup>4</sup> In this predicament sureties are also held to be, who purchase up the securities of the principal, on which they are sureties; and the principal will be entitled to the benefit of every such purchase at the price given for them.<sup>5</sup>

doctrine of implied trusts, is that, which embraces, what is commonly called, the equitable conversion of property. By this is meant an implied or equitable change of property from real to personal, or from personal to real, so that each is considered transferable, transmissible, and descendible, according to its new character, as it arises out of the contracts, or other acts, and intentions of the parties. This change is a mere consequence of the common doctrine of Courts of Equity, that where things are agreed to be done, they are to be treated for many purposes, as if they were actually done.<sup>1</sup> Thus, (as we have already had occasion to consider,) where a contract is made for the sale of lands, the vendor is, in Equity, immediately deemed a trustee for the vendee of the real estate; and the vendee is deemed a trustee for the vendor of the purchase-money. Under such circumstances, the vendee is treated as the owner of the land, and it is devisable and descendible, as his real estate. On the other hand, the money is treated as the personal estate of the vendor, and is subject to the like modes of disposition by him, as other personalty, and is distributable in the same manner on his death.<sup>2</sup> So, land, articulated to be sold and turned into money, is reputed [*460] money; and money, *articled or bequeathed to be invested in land, is ordinarily deemed to be land.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1213. So, if money is devised to be laid out in the purchase of land, which is to be settled on one and his heirs, the person, for whose benefit the purchase is to be made, may come into a Court of Equity, and have the money paid to him without any purchase of the land; for he has a complete title to the same as owner.<sup>1</sup> But if he should die before any such purchase is made, or the money is paid, so that the question comes between his heir or devisee, and executors or administrators, which of them shall have the money; in such a case Courts of Equity will decree it to the heir or devisee, precisely as if the land had been purchased in his lifetime, upon the ground above stated.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1214. In general, Courts of Equity do not incline to interfere to change the quality of the property, as *the testator or intestate has left it, unless there [*461] is some clear act or intention, by which he has unequivocally fixed upon it throughout a definite character, either as money, or as land. For, (it has been said,) there is not a spark of Equity between the next of kin and the heir, as to the right of property, in such cases;

After quoting, what he called the cant expression, that in Equity, what is to be done, is considered as done, he added; "Either that idea should have been carried fully out, or it should have been abandoned. I think it should have been the latter. See Com. Dig. Chancery, 4 W. 10, 4 W. 15, 16.

and, therefore, the general principle adopted is, that the heir shall take all the property, which has attached to it the quality of real estate, if there is not some other definite and specific purpose, to which it is entirely devoted.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1215. In the next place, we may enter upon the consideration of that class of implied trusts, arising from, what are properly called, equitable liens; by which we are to understand such liens, as exist in Equity, and of which Courts of Equity alone take cognizance. A lien, (as has been already said,<sup>2</sup>) is not, strictly speaking, either a jus in re, or a jus ad rem; that is, it is not a property in the thing itself, nor does it constitute a right of action for the thing. It more properly constitutes a charge upon the thing.

§ 1216. At law, a lien is usually deemed to be a right to possess and retain a thing, until some charge upon it is paid or removed.<sup>3</sup> There are few liens, which at law exist in relation to real estate. The most striking of this sort undoubtedly is the lien of a judgment creditor upon the lands of his debtor. But this is not a specific lien on any particular land, but is a general lien over all the real estate of the debtor, to be enforced by an elegit or other legal process upon such part of the real estate of the debtor, as the creditor may elect.<sup>4</sup> The lien itself is treated as a consequence of the right to take out an elegit; and it is applied not only to present real estate in possession, but also to reversionary interests in real estate.<sup>1</sup> In respect to personal property, a lien is generally, (perhaps in all cases, with the exception only of certain maritime liens, such as seamen's wages and bottomry bonds,) recognised at law to exist only, when it is connected with the *possession, or [*462] the right to possess the thing itself. Where the possession is once voluntarily parted with, the lien is ordinarily at law gone.<sup>2</sup> Thus, for example, the lien on goods for freight, the lien for the repairs of domestic ships, and the lien on goods for a balance of accounts, are all extinguished by a voluntary surrender of the thing, to which they are attached.<sup>3</sup> Liens at law generally arise, either by the express agreement of the parties, or by the usage of trade, which amounts to an implied agreement, or by mere operation of law.<sup>4</sup>

some special cases Courts of Equity will give aid to the enforcement and satisfaction of liens in a manner utterly unknown at law. Thus, for example, at law a creditor is only entitled to have a moiety of the lands of the judgment debtor extended upon an elegit, and must wait, until he can be reimbursed for the amount of his judgment out of the rents and profits. But where the payment of the judgment cannot be attained at all by a mere application of the rents and profits, (as if the interest upon the judgment exceeds the annual rents and profits) or where the payment cannot be obtained out of the rents and profits within a reasonable time, Courts of Equity will accelerate the payment by decreeing a sale of the moiety of the lands; for it would be gross injustice to the judgment creditor to compel him to wait for satisfaction of his debt out of the assets of his debtor for an unreasonable length of time, when he had a clear lien on the property for the full amount.<sup>1</sup> For the same reason Courts of Equity will accelerate payment by directing a sale, where the real estate, bound by the judgment, is a mere dry reversion; for in such a case there must, or at least, there may unavoidably be a long delay, before the party can be paid out of the rents and profits.<sup>2</sup>

interest in the freehold estate of his debtor, treating the judgment as in the nature of a lien upon such equitable interest. But, in all cases of this sort, the judgment creditor must have pursued the same steps, as he would have been obliged to do, to perfect his lien, if the estate had been legal. Thus, for example, it is necessary for the judgment creditor to sue out an elegit, at law, before his lien will be treated as complete. If, therefore, he seeks relief in equity against the equitable freehold estate of his debtor, it is equally indispensable for him first to sue out an elegit; for until that time he has not made a final election. And not only must the suing out of an elegit be proved; but it must also be averred in the Bill, otherwise the latter will be demurrable.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Neate v. Duke of Marlborough, 3 Mylne & Craig, 407, 415. On this occasion Lord Cottenham said: "In the first place, I find Lord Redesdale, not only laying it down, that it is necessary, that the judgment creditor suing in this Court should have issued an elegit, but expressly saying, that if that is not done, it is a ground of demurrer. And there was great force in the argument at the bar, that, though his Lordship's attention had been distinctly called to the point, yet when a subsequent edition of his Treatise on Pleading was published, and, as I have always understood, under his superintendence, the same passage was preserved. I also find Lord Lyndhurst stating it as a general rule, though that was not the point, on which the decision of the appeal before him was to turn, that an elegit is necessary. For myself, I never entertained the least doubt of it; and certainly, though I have not had particular occasion to look into the question, if I had been asked, what the rule of the Court was, I should at once have answered that, when a party comes here as a judgment creditor for the purpose of having the benefit of his judgment, he must have sued out execution upon the judgment. And in all the authorities referred to, though in some of them the distinction appears to be so far taken, that, in the case of a feri facias, the creditor must go the whole length of having a return, there is no case, except the solitary one in Dickens, which decides, that the suing out of the elegit is not necessary as a preliminary step. With respect to authority, therefore, there can be no doubt; for there is not only the authority of Lord Redesdale, and that of Lord Lyndhurst, in the House of Lords; but there is also, what is stated,

at the bar to be the uniform understanding and practice of the profession. The conclusion, at which I arrive, however, as to what on principle ought to be the rule, is derived from a consideration of the nature of the jurisdiction, which the Court exercises in such cases. That jurisdiction is not for the purpose of giving effect to a lien, which is supposed to be created by the judgment. It is true, that, for certain purposes, the Court recognises a title by the judgment; as for the purpose of redeeming, or, after the death of the debtor, of having his assets administered. But the jurisdiction there is grounded simply upon this, that inasmuch as the Court finds the Creditor in a condition to acquire a power over the estate by suing out the writ, it does, what it does in all similar cases; it gives to the party the right to come in and redeem other incumbrancers upon the property. So, again, after the debtor is dead, if, under any circumstances, the estate is to be sold, the Court pays off the judgment creditor, because it cannot otherwise make a title to the estate; and the Court never sells the interest of a debtor subject to an elegit creditor. That was very much discussed in the case of Tunstall v. Trappes. But there was there a necessity for a sale; and the question was not as to the right of the judgment creditor against his debtor, he being willing; but where, from other circumstances, a sale having become indispensable, it was necessary to clear the estate from the claims of parties, who had charges upon it. It is, therefore, not correct to say, that, according to the usual acceptation of the term, the creditor obtains a lien by virtue of his judgment. If he had an equitable lien, he would have a right to come here to have the estate sold; but he has no such right. What gives a judgment creditor a right against the estate is only the act of parliament; for independently of that, he has none? The act of parliament gives him, if he pleases, an option by the writ of elegit—the very name implying, that it is an option—which, if he exercises, he is entitled to have a writ directed to the sheriff to put him in possession of a moiety of the lands. The effect of the proceeding under the writ is to give to the creditor a legal title, which, if no impediment prevent him, he may enforce at law by ejectment. If there be a legal impediment, he then comes into this Court, not to obtain a greater benefit than the law, that is, the act of parliament, has given him, but to have the same benefit, by the process of this Court, which he would have had at law, if no legal impediment had intervened. How then can there be a better right; or how can the judgment, which, per se, gives the creditor no title against the land, be considered as giving him a title here? Suppose he never sues out the writ, and never, therefore, exercises his option, is this Court to give him the benefit of a lien, to which he has never chosen to assert his right? The reasoning would seem very strong, that as this Court is lending its aid to debtor dies, whereby a lien attaches upon all the lands descended in the hands of his heirs, Courts of Equity will interfere in aid of the creditor, and in proper cases accelerate the payment of the debt. At law the creditor can only take out execution against the whole lands, and hold them, as he would under an elegit, until the debt is fully paid.<sup>1</sup> But in Equity the creditor will also be entitled to an account of the rents and profits received by the heir since the descent cast. And Courts of Equity will go further and decree a sale of the inheritance in order to accelerate the payment of the debt, if it cannot otherwise be satisfied within a reasonable period.<sup>2</sup> The same doctrine is applied to reversions after an estate for life, and even after an estate tail; for they will be decreed to be sold to satisfy a bond debt of the ancestor, which binds the heir, in order to accelerate the payment of the debt.<sup>3</sup> And, indeed, Courts of Equity have in the case of advowsons gone further; and have decreed an advowson in gross to be sold to satisfy a bond creditor; holding such an advowson to be assets at law, even if not extendible on an elegit.<sup>4</sup>

the legal right (and Lord Redesdale expressly puts it under that head, namely, the right to recover in ejectment), the party must have previously armed himself with that, which constitutes his legal right; and that which constitutes the legal right is the writ. This Court, in fact, is doing neither more nor less than giving him what the act of parliament and an ejectment would, under other circumstances, have given him at law."

law, and in respect to which Courts of Equity exercise a very large and salutary jurisdiction.<sup>1</sup> In regard to these liens, it may be generally stated, that they arise from constructive trusts. They are, therefore, wholly independent of the possession of the thing, to which they are attached, as a charge or incumbrance ; and they can be enforced only in Courts of equity.<sup>2</sup> The usual course of enforcing a lien in Equity, if not discharged, is by a sale of the property, to which it is attached.<sup>3</sup> Of this we have a strong illustration in the well known doctrine of Courts of Equity, that the vendor of land [*463] has a lien on the *land for the amount of the purchase-money, not only against the vendee himself, and his heirs, and other privies in estate, but also against all subsequent purchasers, having notice, that the purchase-money remains unpaid.<sup>4</sup> To the extent

204, 206. There have been doubts, whether an advowson in gross was assets at law ; but the weight of authority certainly is, that it is. See Lord Hardwicke's opinion in *Westfaling v. His words were, " It would seem, therefore, that the circumstance of its not being applicable to the payment of debts by a court of law, does not decide, what is to be done here ; as in the case of an advowson, which yields no present profit, and is not assets at law, and yet is decreed to be sold in Equity."

and 10 Peters, 625, 640. Sir Thomas Clarke (the Master of the Rolls) in Burgess v. Wheate, 1 W. Black. R. 150; S. C. 1 Eden, R. 211, said; "Where a conveyance is made prematurely, before money paid, the money is considered as a lien on that estate in the hands of the vendee. So, where money was [is] paid prematurely, the money would be considered as a lien on the estate of the vendor for the personal representatives of the purchaser; which would leave things in statu quo. Mr. Sugden seems to have doubted whether this lien exists in favor of the vendee, who has paid the purchase-money. For alluding, as it should seem, to such a case, he says, "Where a lien is raised for purchase-money under the usual equity in favor of a vendor, it is for a debt really due to him, and equity merely provides a security for it. But in the case under consideration, Equity must not simply give a security for an existing debt; it must first raise a debt against the express agreement of the parties. The purchase-money was a debt due to the vendor, which upon principle it would be difficult to make him repay. What power has a Court of Equity to rescind a contract like this? The question might perhaps arise, if the vendor was seeking relief in Equity. But in this case he must be a defendant. If it should be admitted, that the money cannot be recovered, then of course he must retain the estate also, until some person appears, who is by law entitled to require a conveyance of it." Sugden on Vendors, ch. 5, p. 258, 7th edit. Id. vol. 1, p. 284, 9th edit. Lord Eldon cited the same position of Sir Thomas Clarke, in his very words, without objection or observation, in Mackreth v. Symmons, 15 Ves. 345. And afterwards, in the same case, p. 353, he used language importing an approval of it. "This," said he, "comes very near the doctrine of Sir Thomas Clarke, which is very sensible, that where the conveyance or the payment, has been made by surprise, (meaning, it is supposed, "prematurely," in the sense of Sir T. Clarke,) there shall be a lien." The ground, asserted by Mr. Sugden for his doubt, does not seem sufficient to sustain it. He assumes, that there is no debt between the parties, which is the very matter in controversy; for, in the view of a Court of Equity, the payment of the purchase-money may well be deemed a loan upon the security of the land, until it has been conveyed to the vendee. At least, there is quite as much reason to presume it, as there is to presume the land, when conveyed, to be still a security for the purchase-money due to the vendor. In the latter case, though there is a debt due by the vendee, it does not follow, that it is a debt due by the land. In the former, if the estate cannot be conveyed and is not conveyed, the money is really a debt due to the vendee. At all events in Equity it is not very clear, what principle is impugned, by deeming the money a

sumption is, that it is intended as an advancement, unless the contrary is established in evidence.<sup>1</sup> And the like presumption exists in the case of a purchase of a husband in the name of his wife, and of securities taken in her name. Indeed, the presumption is stronger in the case of a wife than of a child; for she cannot at law be the trustee of her husband. The same rule applies to the case of a joint purchase by the husband, in the name of himself, his wife, and his daughters; and it will be presumed an advancement and provision for the wife and his daughter; and the husband and wife will be held to take one moiety by entireties, and the daughter to take the other moiety.<sup>2</sup>

[*449] *§ 1205. Hence, also, it is, that where a purchase is made by a father in the joint names of himself and of a child, unprovided for, (whatever may be the case, as to a child otherwise provided for,) if the father dies, the child will hold the estate, and have the benefit thereof by survivorship against the heir at law of the father, and against all volunteers claiming under the father, and also against purchasers from him with notice.<sup>3</sup> So, where a father transferred stock from his own name into the joint names of his son, and of a person, whom the father and son employed as their banker to receive dividends, and the father told the banker to carry the dividends, as they were received, to the son's account; and they were accordingly received and enjoyed by the son during his father's lifetime; it was held, that the transfer created an executed trust for the son, and that he was absolutely entitled to the stock.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1206. In the cases of joint purchases, made by two persons, who advance and pay the purchase-money in equal proportions, and take a conveyance to them and their heirs, it constitutes a jointtenancy, that is, a purchase by them jointly of the chance of survivorship; and of course the survivor will take the whole estate. This is the rule at law; and it prevails also in Equity under the same circumstances, for, unless there are controlling circumstances, Equity follows the law.<sup>2</sup> But wherever such circumstances occur, Courts of Equity will lay hold of them to prevent a survivorship, and create a trust; for jointtenancy is not favored in Equity.<sup>3</sup> Thus, if a joint purchase is made in the name of one of the purchasers, and the other pays, or secures his share of the purchase-money, he will be entitled to his share, as a

chase, as in the nature of partners, and to intend to hold the estate in proportion to the sums, which each has advanced.<sup>1</sup>

advancing the smaller proportion, it is fair to presume, that no such intention existed. The inequality of proportion can scarcely be attributed to the relative value of the lives; because neither of the parties can be supposed not to know, that the other may, immediately after the purchase, compel a legal partition of the estate, or may sever the jointtenancy by a clandestine act." Sugden on Vendors, ch. 15, § 1, p. 607, note (I.), 7th edit., S. P. and note; 2 Sugden on Vendors, ch. 15, § 1, p. 127, 128, note I, 9th edit. There is much force in these observations of the latter learned author. But the real ground of the distinction probably is, that jointtenancy is not favored in Equity; that where there is nothing, demonstrating an apparent intent to vary the rule of law, it must prevail; so that in cases of equal advances, no such intent is apparent. But that where the advances are unequal, there is nothing in the transaction necessarily leading to the conclusion, that the parties mean to follow the rule of law; and then a Court of Equity is not bound to presume any intention to follow it; since it may work an inequality in point of right and justice. In other words, a Court of Equity will not adopt a rule of law, which has no foundation in general justice or convenience, unless it is compelled to do so by the absence of all circumstances, which will enable it to control it. See Ante, § 1201.

and the conveyance is taken ; whether in the name of one partner, or of all the partners ; whether in the name of a stranger alone, or of a stranger jointly with one partner. In all these cases, let the legal title be vested in whom it may, it is in Equity deemed partnership property, not subject to survivorship ; and the partners are deemed the cestuis que trust thereof.<sup>1</sup> A Court of Law, may, nay, must, in general, view it only according to the state of the legal title. And if the legal title is vested in one partner, or in a stranger, a bonâ fide purchaser of real estate from him, having no notice, either express or constructive, of its being partnership property, will be entitled to hold it free from any claim of the partnership.<sup>2</sup> But if he has such notice, then in Equity he is clearly bound by the trust ; and he takes it cum onere, exactly like every other purchaser of a trust estate.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1207. a. But although, generally speaking, whatever is purchased with partnership property, to be used for partnership purposes, is thus treated as a trust for the partnership, in whosever name the purchase may be made ; yet there may be cases, in which, from the nature of the thing purchased, the partner, in whose name it is purchased, may, upon a dissolution of the partnership, be entitled to hold it as his own; so that it will be trust property sub modo only. Thus, for example, an office may be purchased or a license be obtained in the name of a partner out of the partnership funds, (as for example, a stockbroker's license, or the office of a clerk in court) to be used during the continuance of the partnership for partnership purposes by the person obtaining the same. But it will not follow, that, upon the dissolution of the partnership, such partner is to hold the same, and act as a stockbroker or clerk in court, performing all the duties alone, for the benefit of the other partners.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1208. Another illustration of the doctrine of implied and resulting trusts arises from the appointment of an executor of a last will and testament. *In [*453] cases of such an appointment the executor is entitled, both at law and in Equity, (for in this respect Equity follows the law,) to the whole surplus of the personal estate, after payment of all debts and charges, for his own benefit, unless it is otherwise disposed of by the testator.<sup>2</sup> The inclination of Courts of Equity has been strongly evinced to lay hold of any circumstances, which may rebut the presumption of such a gift to the executor; and some very nice and curious distinctions have been taken in England, in order to escape from the operation of the general rule. In America the surplus is by law universally distributable among the next of kin in the absence of all contrary expressions of intention by the testator ; and, therefore, it is scarcely necessary to present these distinctions at large. In general it may be stated, that at law the appointment of an executor vests in him all the personal estate of the testator ; and the surplus, after the payment of all debts, will belong to him. But in Equity, if it can be collected from any circumstance or expression in the will, that the testator intended his executor to have only the office, and not the beneficial interest, such intention will receive effect ; and the executor will be deemed a trustee for those, on whom the law would have cast the surplus, in cases of a complete intestacy.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> 2 Fonbl. Eq. B. 2, ch. 5, § 3, note (k) ; ante, § 1065 ; 2 Madd. Ch. Pr. 83, 84.—Mr. Fonblanque has collected most of the distinctions on this subject in his learned note (k) above referred to. The following extract is made from that note, as every way useful to students. "The cases," says he, "upon the subject are numerous, and not easily reconcilable. I will, however, endeavor to extract the several rules, which have governed their decision. 1. As the exclusion of the executor from the residue is to be referred to the presumed intention of the testator, that he should not take it beneficially, an express declaration, that he should take as trustee, will of course, exclude him ; Pring v. Pring, 2 Vern. 99 ; Graydon v. Hicks, 2 Atk. 18 ; Wheeler v. Sheers, Moseley, 288, 301 ; Dean v. Dalton, 2 Bro. Ch. R. 634 ; Bennet v. Bachelor, 3 Bro. Ch. 28 ; 1 Ves. jr. 63 ; and the exclusion of one executor as a trustee will consequently exclude his co-executor ; White v. Evans, 4 Ves. 21 ; unless there be evidence of a contrary intention ; Williams v. Jones, 10 Ves. 77 ; Pratt v. Sladden, 14 Ves. 193 ; Dawson v. Clark, 15 Ves. 416 ; and see Dalton v. Dean, to show, that a direction to reimburse the executors their expenses is sufficient to exclude them ; 2 Bro. R. 634. 2. Where the testator appears to have intended by his will to make an express disposition of the residue, but by some accident or omission such disposition is not perfected at the time of his death, as where the will contains a residuary clause, but the name of the residuary legatee is not inserted, the executor shall be excluded from the residue. Bp. of Cloyne v. Young, 2 Ves. 91 ; Lord North v. Purdon, 2 Ves. 495 ; Hornsby v. Finch, 2 Ves. jr. 78 ; Oldham v. Carleton, 2 Cox, R. 400. 3. Where the testator has by his will disposed of the residue of his property, but by the death of the residuary legatee, in the lifetime of the testator, it is undisposed of at the time of the testator's death. Nichols v. Crisp, Amb. 769; Bennet v. Bachelor, 3 Bro. Ch. R. 28. 4. The next class of cases, in which an executor shall be excluded from the residue, is, where the testator has given him a legacy expressly for his care and trouble; which, as observed by Lord Hardwicke in Bp. of Cloyne v. Young, 2 Ves. 97, is a very strong case for a resulting trust; not on the foot of giving all and some; but that it was evidence, that the testator meant him, as a trustee, for some other, for whom the care and trouble should be, as it could not be for himself; Foster v. Munt, 1 Vern. 473; Rachfield v. Careless, 2 P. Will. 157; Cordel v. Noden, 2 Vern. 148; Newstead v. Johnstone, 2 Atk. 46. 5. Though the objection to the executor's taking part and all has been thought a very weak and insufficient ground for excluding him from the residue, as the testator might intend the particular legacy to him in case of the personal estate falling short; yet it has been allowed to prevail; and it is now a settled rule in Equity, that if a sole executor has a legacy generally and absolutely given to him, (for, if given under certain limitation, which will be hereafter considered, it will not exclude,) he shall be excluded from the residue; Cook v. Walker, cited 2 Vern. 676; Joslin v. Brewit, Bunb. 112; Davers v. Dewes, 3 P. Will. 40; Farrington v. Knightly, 1 P. Will. 544; Vachell v. Jefferies, Prec. Ch. 170; Petit v. Smith, 1 P. Will. 7. Nor will the circumstance of the legacy being specific be sufficient to entitle him; Randall v. Bookey, 2 Vern. 425; Southcot v. Watson, 3 Atk. 226; Martin v. Rebow, 1 Bro. Ch. R. 154; Nesbit v. Murry, 5 Ves. 149. Nor will the testator's having bequeathed legacies to his next of kin vary the rule; Bayley v. Powell, 2 Vern. 361; Wheeler v. Sheers, Moseley, 288; Andrew v. Clark, 2 Ves. 162; Kennedy v. Stainsby, E. 1755, stated in a note, 1 Ves. jr. 66; for the rule is founded rather on a presumption of intent to exclude the executor, than to create a trust for his next of kin; and, therefore, if there be no next of kin, a trust shall result for the crown; Middleton v. Spicer, 1 Bro. Ch. R. 201. 6. Where the testator appears to have intended to dispose of any part of his personal estate; Urquhart v. King, 7 Ves. 225. 7. Where the residue is given to the executors, as tenants in common, and one of the executors dies, whereby his share lapses, the next of kin, and not the surviving executors, shall have the lapsed share; Page v. Page, 2 P. Will. 489; 1 Ves. jr. 66, 542. With respect to co-executors, they are clearly within the three first stated grounds, on which a sole executor shall be excluded from the residue. And as to the fourth ground of exclusion, it seems to be now settled, that a legacy, given to one executor, expressly for his care

guishes his debt, and it cannot be revived; although a debt due by an administrator would only be suspended. [*456] The reason of the difference is, that the one is the act of the law, and the other is the act

and trouble, will, though no legacy be given to his co-executor, exclude. White v. Evans, 4 Ves. 21. As to the fifth ground of exclusion of a sole executor, several points of distinction are material in its application to co-executors. A sole executor is excluded from the residue by the bequest of a legacy; because it shall not be supposed, that he was intended to take part and all. But if there be two or more executors, a legacy to one is not within such objection; for the testator might intend a preference to him pro tanto; Colesworth v. Brangwin, Prec. Ch. 323; Johnson v. Twist, cited 2 Ves. 166; Buffar v. Bradford, 2 Atk. 220. So where several executors have unequal legacies, whether pecuniary or specific, they shall not be thereby excluded from the residue; Brasbridge v. Woodroffe, 2 Atk. 69; Bowker v. Hunter, 1 Bro. Ch. R. 328; Blinkhorn v. Feast, 2 Ves. 27. But where equal pecuniary legacies are given to two or more executors, a trust shall result for those, on whom, in case of an intestacy, the law would have cast it. Petit v. Smith, 1 P. Will. 7; Carey v. Goodinge, 3 Bro. Ch. R. 110; Muckleston v. Brown, 6 Ves. 64. But see Heron v. Newton, 9 Mod. 11. Qu. whether distinct specific legacies, of equal value to several executors, will exclude them? It now remains to consider, in what cases an executor shall not be excluded from the residue. Upon which it may be stated as an universal rule, that a Court of Equity will not interfere to the prejudice of the executor's legal right, if such legal right can be reconciled with the intention of the testator, expressed by, or to be collected from, his will. And, therefore, even the bequest of a legacy to the executor shall not exclude, if such legacy be consistent with the intent, that the executor shall take the residue; as where a gift to the executor is an exception out of another legacy. Griffith v. Rogers, Prec. Ch. 231; Newstead v. Johnstone, 2 Atk. 45; Southcot v. Watson, 3 Atk. 229. Or where the executorship is limited to a particular period, or determinable on a contingency, and the thing bequeathed to the executor, upon such contingency taking place, is bequeathed over. Hoskins v. Hoskins, Prec. Ch. 263. Or where the gift is only a limited interest, as for the life of the executor. Lady Granville v. Duchess of Beaufort, 1 P. Will. 114; Jones v. Westcombe, Prec. Ch. 316; Nourse v. Finch, 1 Ves. jr. 356. Or where the wife is executrix, and the bequest is of her paraphernalia. Lawson v. Lawson, 7 Bro. P. C. 521; Ball v. Smith, 2 Vern. 675; 3 Woodes. of the party.<sup>1</sup> But in Equity a debt due by an executor is not extinguished; and it will go to the same party, who would be entitled to the surplus estate, if the debt were due from a third person.<sup>2</sup>

clear, that the land has been paid for out of the trust money; and if this appears, a trust will be implied, not only when the party may be presumed to act in execution of the trust; but even when the investment is in violation of the trust. For, in every such case, where the trust money can be distinctly traced, a Court of Equity will fasten a trust upon the land in favor of the persons beneficially entitled to the money.<sup>1</sup>

[*458] * § 1211. Upon grounds of an analogous nature, the general doctrine proceeds, that whatever acts are done by trustees in regard to the trust property, shall be deemed to be done for the benefit of the cestui que trust, and not for the benefit of the trustee.<sup>2</sup> If, therefore, the trustee makes any contract, or does any act in regard to the trust estate for his own benefit,

In the case of a purchase of land by a trustee in his own name, in pursuance of the trust, the cestui que trust is entitled to the estate. But, where it is purchased with trust money, in violation of the trust, Mr. Atherley is of opinion, that the cestui que trust has a lien only on the estate, and not a right to the estate. There is much sound sense in the distinction; but he admits, that Bennett v. Mayhew is apparently against it. Atherley on Marr. Sett. ch. 28, p. 443, 444. It is of course to be understood, that the cestui que trust is not in any case, where the trust money is invested in lands or other things in fraud or breach of the trust, bound to take the land, or to insist on his lien. He has an election to do so, or not. Ibid.

he will, nevertheless, be held responsible therefor to the cestui que trust, as upon an implied trust. Thus, for example, if a trustee should purchase a lien or mortgage on the trust estate at a discount, he would not be allowed to avail himself of the difference; but the purchase would be held a trust for the benefit of the cestui que trust.<sup>1</sup> So, if a trustee should renew a lease of the trust estate, he would be held bound to account to the cestui que trust for all advantages made thereby.<sup>2</sup>

→ § 1211. a. The same principle will apply to persons standing in other fiduciary relations to each other. Thus, for example, if an agent, who is employed to purchase for another, purchases in his own name, or for his own account, he will be held to be a trustee of the principal at the option of another.<sup>3</sup> So, if he is employed to purchase up a debt of his principal, and he does so at an undervalue or discount, the principal will be entitled to the benefit thereof, in the nature of a trust.<sup>4</sup> In this predicament sureties are also held to be, who purchase up the securities of the principal, on which they are sureties; and the principal will be entitled to the benefit of every such purchase at the price given for them.<sup>5</sup>

doctrine of implied trusts, is that, which embraces, what is commonly called, the equitable conversion of property. By this is meant an implied or equitable change of property from real to personal, or from personal to real, so that each is considered transferable, transmissible, and descendible, according to its new character, as it arises out of the contracts, or other acts and intentions of the parties. This change is a mere consequence of the common doctrine of Courts of Equity, that where things are agreed to be done, they are to be treated for many purposes, as if they were actually done.<sup>1</sup> Thus, (as we have already had occasion to consider,) where a contract is made for the sale of lands, the vendor is, in Equity, immediately deemed a trustee for the vendee of the real estate; and the vendee is deemed a trustee for the vendor of the purchase-money. Under such circumstances, the vendee is treated as the owner of the land, and it is devisable and descendible, as his real estate. On the other hand, the money is treated as the personal estate of the vendor, and is subject to the like modes of disposition by him, as other personalty, and is distributable in the same manner on his death.<sup>2</sup> So, land, articulated to be sold and turned into money, is reputed [*460] money; and money, articulated or bequeathed to be invested in land, is ordinarily deemed to be land.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1213. So, if money is devised to be laid out in the purchase of land, which is to be settled on one and his heirs, the person, for whose benefit the purchase is to be made, may come into a Court of Equity, and have the money paid to him without any purchase of the land; for he has a complete title to the same as owner.<sup>1</sup> But if he should die before any such purchase is made, or the money is paid, so that the question comes between his heir or devisee, and executors or administrators, which of them shall have the money; in such a case Courts of Equity will decree it to the heir or devisee, precisely as if the land had been purchased in his lifetime, upon the ground above stated.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1214. In general, Courts of Equity do not incline to interfere to change the quality of the property, as *the testator or intestate has left it, unless there [*461] is some clear act or intention, by which he has unequivocally fixed upon it throughout a definite character, either as money, or as land. For, (it has been said,) there is not a spark of Equity between the next of kin and the heir, as to the right of property, in such cases;

After quoting, what he called the cant expression, that in Equity, what is to be done, is considered as done, he added; "Either that idea should have been carried fully out, or it should have been abandoned. I think it should have been the latter. See Com. Dig. Chancery, 4 W. 10, 4 W. 15, 16.

and, therefore, the general principle adopted is, that the heir shall take all the property, which has attached to it the quality of real estate, if there is not some other definite and specific purpose, to which it is entirely devoted.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1215. In the next place, we may enter upon the consideration of that class of implied trusts, arising from, what are properly called, equitable liens; by which we are to understand such liens, as exist in Equity, and of which Courts of Equity alone take cognizance. A lien, (as has been already said,<sup>2</sup>) is not, strictly speaking, either a jus in re, or a jus ad rem; that is, it is not a property in the thing itself, nor does it constitute a right of action for the thing. It more properly constitutes a charge upon the thing.

§ 1216. At law, a lien is usually deemed to be a right to possess and retain a thing, until some charge upon it is paid or removed.<sup>3</sup> There are few liens, which at law exist in relation to real estate. The most striking of this sort undoubtedly is the lien of a judgment creditor upon the lands of his debtor. But this is not a specific lien on any particular land, but is a general lien over all the real estate of the debtor, to be enforced by an elegit or other legal process upon such part of the real estate of the debtor, as the creditor may elect.<sup>4</sup> The lien itself is treated as a consequence of the right to take out an elegit; and

it is applied not only to present real estate in possession, but also to reversionary interests in real estate.<sup>1</sup> In respect to personal property, a lien is generally, (perhaps in all cases, with the exception only of certain maritime liens, such as seamen's wages and bottomry bonds,) recognised at law to exist only, when it is connected with the *possession, or [*462] the right to possess the thing itself. Where the possession is once voluntarily parted with, the lien is ordinarily at law gone.<sup>2</sup> Thus, for example, the lien on goods for freight, the lien for the repairs of domestic ships, and the lien on goods for a balance of accounts, are all extinguished by a voluntary surrender of the thing, to which they are attached.<sup>3</sup> Liens at law generally arise, either by the express agreement of the parties, or by the usage of trade, which amounts to an implied agreement, or by mere operation of law.<sup>4</sup>

some special cases Courts of Equity will give aid to the enforcement and satisfaction of liens in a manner utterly unknown at law. Thus, for example, at law a creditor is only entitled to have a moiety of the lands of the judgment debtor extended upon an elegit, and must wait, until he can be reimbursed for the amount of his judgment out of the rents and profits. But where the payment of the judgment cannot be attained at all by a mere application of the rents and profits, (as if the interest upon the judgment exceeds the annual rents and profits) or where the payment cannot be obtained out of the rents and profits within a reasonable time, Courts of Equity will accelerate the payment by decreeing a sale of the moiety of the lands; for it would be gross injustice to the judgment creditor to compel him to wait for satisfaction of his debt out of the assets of his debtor for an unreasonable length of time, when he had a clear lien on the property for the full amount.<sup>1</sup> For the same reason Courts of Equity will accelerate payment by directing a sale, where the real estate, bound by the judgment, is a mere dry reversion; for in such a case there must, or at least, there may unavoidably be a long delay, before the party can be paid out of the rents and profits.<sup>2</sup>

interest in the freehold estate of his debtor, treating the judgment as in the nature of a lien upon such equitable interest. But, in all cases of this sort, the judgment creditor must have pursued the same steps, as he would have been obliged to do, to perfect his lien, if the estate had been legal. Thus, for example, it is necessary for the judgment creditor to sue out an elegit, at law, before his lien will be treated as complete. If, therefore, he seeks relief in equity against the equitable freehold estate of his debtor, it is equally indispensable for him first to sue out an elegit; for until that time he has not made a final election. And not only must the suing out of an elegit be proved; but it must also be averred in the Bill, otherwise the latter will be demurrable.<sup>1</sup>

at the bar to be the uniform understanding and practice of the profession. The conclusion, at which I arrive, however, as to what on principle ought to be the rule, is derived from a consideration of the nature of the jurisdiction, which the Court exercises in such cases. That jurisdiction is not for the purpose of giving effect to a lien, which is supposed to be created by the judgment. It is true, that, for certain purposes, the Court recognises a title by the judgment; as for the purpose of redeeming, or, after the death of the debtor, of having his assets administered. But the jurisdiction there is grounded simply upon this, that inasmuch as the Court finds the Creditor in a condition to acquire a power over the estate by suing out the writ, it does, what it does in all similar cases; it gives to the party the right to come in and redeem other incumbrancers upon the property. So, again, after the debtor is dead, if, under any circumstances, the estate is to be sold, the Court pays off the judgment creditor, because it cannot otherwise make a title to the estate; and the Court never sells the interest of a debtor subject to an elegit creditor. That was very much discussed in the case of Tunstall v. Trappes. But there was there a necessity for a sale; and the question was not as to the right of the judgment creditor against his debtor, he being willing; but where, from other circumstances, a sale having become indispensable, it was necessary to clear the estate from the claims of parties, who had charges upon it. It is, therefore, not correct to say, that, according to the usual acceptance of the term, the creditor obtains a lien by virtue of his judgment. If he had an equitable lien, he would have a right to come here to have the estate sold; but he has no such right. What gives a judgment creditor a right against the estate is only the act of parliament; for independently of that, he has none? The act of parliament gives him, if he pleases, an option by the writ of elegit—the very name implying, that it is an option—which, if he exercises, he is entitled to have a writ directed to the sheriff to put him in possession of a moiety of the lands. The effect of the proceeding under the writ is to give to the creditor a legal title, which, if no impediment prevent him, he may enforce at law by ejectment. If there be a legal impediment, he then comes into this Court, not to obtain a greater benefit than the law, that is, the act of parliament, has given him, but to have the same benefit, by the process of this Court, which he would have had at law, if no legal impediment had intervened. How then can there be a better right; or how can the judgment, which, per se, gives the creditor no title against the land, be considered as giving him a title here? Suppose he never sues out the writ, and never, therefore, exercises his option, is this Court to give him the benefit of a lien, to which he has never chosen to assert his right? The reasoning would seem very strong, that as this Court is lending its aid to debtor dies, whereby a lien attaches upon all the lands descended in the hands of his heirs, Courts of Equity will interfere in aid of the creditor, and in proper cases accelerate the payment of the debt. At law the creditor can only take out execution against the whole lands, and hold them, as he would under an elegit, until the debt is fully paid.<sup>1</sup> But in Equity the creditor will also be entitled to an account of the rents and profits received by the heir since the descent cast. And Courts of Equity will go further and decree a sale of the inheritance in order to accelerate the payment of the debt, if it cannot otherwise be satisfied within a reasonable period.<sup>2</sup> The same doctrine is applied to reversions after an estate for life, and even after an estate tail; for they will be decreed to be sold to satisfy a bond debt of the ancestor, which binds the heir, in order to accelerate the payment of the debt.<sup>3</sup> And, indeed, Courts of Equity have in the case of advowsons gone further; and have decreed an advowson in gross to be sold to satisfy a bond creditor; holding such an advowson to be assets at law, even if not extendible on an elegit.<sup>4</sup>

the legal right (and Lord Redesdale expressly puts it under that head, namely, the right to recover in ejectment), the party must have previously armed himself with that, which constitutes his legal right; and that which constitutes the legal right is the writ. This Court, in fact, is doing neither more nor less than giving him what the act of parliament and an ejectment would, under other circumstances, have given him at law."

and the conveyance is taken ; whether in the name of one partner, or of all the partners ; whether in the name of a stranger alone, or of a stranger jointly with one partner. In all these cases, let the legal title be vested in whom it may, it is in Equity deemed partnership property, not subject to survivorship ; and the partners are deemed the cestuis que trust thereof.<sup>1</sup> A Court of Law, may, nay, must, in general, view it only according to the state of the legal title. And if the legal title is vested in one partner, or in a stranger, a bonâ fide purchaser of real estate from him, having no notice, either express or constructive, of its being partnership property, will be entitled to hold it free from any claim of the partnership.<sup>2</sup> But if he has such notice, then in Equity he is clearly bound by the trust ; and he takes it cum onere, exactly like every other purchaser of a trust estate.<sup>3</sup>

whose name it is purchased, may, upon a dissolution of the partnership, be entitled to hold it as his own; so that it will be trust property sub modo only. Thus, for example, an office may be purchased or a license be obtained in the name of a partner out of the partnership funds, (as for example, a stockbroker's license, or the office of a clerk in court) to be used during the continuance of the partnership for partnership purposes by the person obtaining the same. § 1208. Another illustration of the doctrine of implied and resulting trusts arises from the appointment of an executor of a last will and testament. *In [*453] cases of such an appointment the executor is entitled, both at law and in Equity, (for in this respect Equity follows the law,) to the whole surplus of the personal estate, after payment of all debts and charges, for his own benefit, unless it is otherwise disposed of by the testator.<sup>2</sup> The inclination of Courts of Equity has been strongly evinced to lay hold of any circumstances, which may rebut the presumption of such a gift to the executor; and some very nice and curious distinctions have been taken in England, in order to escape from the operation of the general rule. In America the surplus is by law universally distributable among the next of kin in the absence of all contrary expressions of intention by the testator ; and, therefore, it is scarcely necessary to present these distinctions at large. In general it may be stated, that at law the appointment of an executor vests in him all the personal estate of the testator ; and the surplus, after the payment of all debts, will belong to him. But in Equity, if it can be collected from any circumstance or expression in the will, that the testator intended his executor to have only the office, and not the beneficial interest, such intention will receive effect ; and the executor will be deemed a trustee for those, on whom the law would have cast the surplus, in cases of a complete intestacy.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> 2 Fonbl. Eq. B. 2, ch. 5, § 3, note (k) ; ante, § 1065 ; 2 Madd. Ch. Pr. 83, 84.—Mr. Fonblanque has collected most of the distinctions on this subject in his learned note (k) above referred to. The following extract is made from that note, as every way useful to students. “The cases,” says he, “upon the subject are numerous, and not easily reconcilable. I will, however, endeavor to extract the several rules, which have governed their decision. 1. As the exclusion of the executor from the residue is to be referred to the presumed intention of the testator, that he should not take it beneficially, an express declaration, that he should take as trustee, will of course, exclude him ; Pring v. Pring, 2 Vern. 99 ; Graydon v. Hicks, 2 Atk. 18 ; Wheeler v. Sheers, Moseley, 288, 301 ; Dean v. Dalton, 2 Bro. Ch. R. 634 ; Bennet v. Bachelor, 3 Bro. Ch. 28 ; 1 Ves. jr. 63 ; and the exclusion of one executor as a trustee will consequently exclude his co-executor ; White v. Evans, 4 Ves. 21 ; unless there be evidence of a contrary intention ; Williams v. Jones, 10 Ves. 77 ; Pratt v. Sladden, 14 Ves. 193 ; Dawson v. Clark, 15 Ves. 416 ; and see Dalton v. Dean, to show, that a direction to reimburse the executors their expenses is sufficient to exclude them ; 2 Bro. R. 634. 2. Where the testator appears to have intended by his will to make an express disposition of the residue, but by some accident or omission such disposition is not perfected at the time of his death, as where the will contains a residuary clause, but the name of the residuary legatee is not inserted, the executor shall be excluded from the residue. Bp. of Cloyne v. Young, 2 Ves. 91 ; Lord North v. Purdon, 2 Ves. 495 ; Hornaby v. Finch, 2 Ves. jr. 78 ; Oldham v. Carleton, 2 Cox, R. 400. 3. Where the testator has by his will disposed of the residue of his property, but by the death of the residuary legatee, in the lifetime of the testator, it is undisposed of at the time of the testator's death. Nichols v. Crisp, Amb. 769; Bennet v. Bachelor, 3 Bro. Ch. R. 28. 4. The next class of cases, in which an executor shall be excluded from the residue, is, where the testator has given him a legacy expressly for his care and trouble; which, as observed by Lord Hardwicke in Bp. of Cloyne v. Young, 2 Ves. 97, is a very strong case for a resulting trust; not on the foot of giving all and some; but that it was evidence, that the testator meant him, as a trustee, for some other, for whom the care and trouble should be, as it could not be for himself; Foster v. Munt, 1 Vern. 473; Rachfield v. Careless, 2 P. Will. 157; Cordel v. Noden, 2 Vern. 148; Newstead v. Johnstone, 2 Atk. 46. 5. Though the objection to the executor's taking part and all has been thought a very weak and insufficient ground for excluding him from the residue, as the testator might intend the particular legacy to him in case of the personal estate falling short; yet it has been allowed to prevail; and it is now a settled rule in Equity, that if a sole executor has a legacy generally and absolutely given to him, (for, if given under certain limitation, which will be hereafter considered, it will not exclude,) he shall be excluded from the residue; Cook v. Walker, cited 2 Vern. 676; Joslin v. Brewit, Bunb. 112; Davers v. Dewes, 3 P. Will. 40; Farrington v. Knightly, 1 P. Will. 544; Vachell v. Jefferies, Prec. Ch. 170; Petit v. Smith, 1 P. Will. 7. Nor will the circumstance of the legacy being specific be sufficient to entitle him; Randall v. Bookey, 2 Vern. 425; Southcot v. Watson, 3 Atk. 226; Martin v. Rebow, 1 Bro. Ch. R. 154; Nesbit v. Murry, 5 Ves. 149. Nor will the testator's having bequeathed legacies to his next of kin vary the rule; Bayley v. Powell, 2 Vern. 361; Wheeler v. Sheers, Moseley, 288; Andrew v. Clark, 2 Ves. 162; Kennedy v. Stainsby, E. 1755, stated in a note, 1 Ves. jr. 66; for the rule is founded rather on a presumption of intent to exclude the executor, than to create a trust for his next of kin; and, therefore, if there be no next of kin, a trust shall result for the crown; Middleton v. Spicer, 1 Bro. Ch. R. 201. 6. Where the testator appears to have intended to dispose of any part of his personal estate; Urquhart v. King, 7 Ves. 225. 7. Where the residue is given to the executors, as tenants in common, and one of the executors dies, whereby his share lapses, the next of kin, and not the surviving executors, shall have the lapsed share; Page v. Page, 2 P. Will. 489; 1 Ves. jr. 66, 542. With respect to co-executors, they are clearly within the three first stated grounds, on which a sole executor shall be excluded from the residue. And as to the fourth ground of exclusion, it seems to be now settled, that a legacy, given to one executor, expressly for his care

guishes his debt, and it cannot be revived; although a debt due by an administrator would only be suspended. *The reason of the difference is, that the one is the act of the law, and the other is the act

and trouble, will, though no legacy be given to his co-executor, exclude. White v. Evans, 4 Ves. 21. As to the fifth ground of exclusion of a sole executor, several points of distinction are material in its application to co-executors. A sole executor is excluded from the residue by the bequest of a legacy; because it shall not be supposed, that he was intended to take part and all. But if there be two or more executors, a legacy to one is not within such objection; for the testator might intend a preference to him pro tanto; Colesworth v. Brangwin, Prec. Ch. 323; Johnson v. Twist, cited 2 Ves. 166; Buffar v. Bradford, 2 Atk. 220. So where several executors have unequal legacies, whether pecuniary or specific, they shall not be thereby excluded from the residue; Brasbridge v. Woodroffe, 2 Atk. 69; Bowker v. Hunter, 1 Bro. Ch. R. 328; Blinkhorn v. Feast, 2 Ves. 27. But where equal pecuniary legacies are given to two or more executors, a trust shall result for those, on whom, in case of an intestacy, the law would have cast it. Petit v. Smith, 1 P. Will. 7; Carey v. Goodinge, 3 Bro. Ch. R. 110; Muckleston v. Brown, 6 Ves. 64. But see Heron v. Newton, 9 Mod. 11. Qu. whether distinct specific legacies, of equal value to several executors, will exclude them? It now remains to consider, in what cases an executor shall not be excluded from the residue. Upon which it may be stated as an universal rule, that a Court of Equity will not interfere to the prejudice of the executor's legal right, if such legal right can be reconciled with the intention of the testator, expressed by, or to be collected from, his will. And, therefore, even the bequest of a legacy to the executor shall not exclude, if such legacy be consistent with the intent, that the executor shall take the residue; as where a gift to the executor is an exception out of another legacy. Griffith v. Rogers, Prec. Ch. 231; Newstead v. Johnstone, 2 Atk. 45; Southcot v. Watson, 3 Atk. 229. Or where the executorship is limited to a particular period, or determinable on a contingency, and the thing bequeathed to the executor, upon such contingency taking place, is bequeathed over. Hoskins v. Hoskins, Prec. Ch. 263. Or where the gift is only a limited interest, as for the life of the executor. Lady Granville v. Duchess of Beaufort, 1 P. Will. 114; Jones v. Westcombe, Prec. Ch. 316; Nourse v. Finch, 1 Ves. jr. 356. Or where the wife is executrix, and the bequest is of her paraphernalia. Lawson v. Lawson, 7 Bro. P. C. 521; Ball v. Smith, 2 Vern. 675; 3 Woodes. of the party.<sup>1</sup> But in Equity a debt due by an executor is not extinguished; and it will go to the same party, who would be entitled to the surplus estate, if the debt were due from a third person.<sup>2</sup>

clear, that the land has been paid for out of the trust money; and if this appears, a trust will be implied, not only when the party may be presumed to act in execution of the trust; but even when the investment is in violation of the trust. For, in every such case, where the trust money can be distinctly traced, a Court of Equity will fasten a trust upon the land in favor of the persons beneficially entitled to the money.<sup>1</sup>

[*458] * § 1211. Upon grounds of an analogous nature, the general doctrine proceeds, that whatever acts are done by trustees in regard to the trust property, shall be deemed to be done for the benefit of the cestui que trust, and not for the benefit of the trustee.<sup>2</sup> If, therefore, the trustee makes any contract, or does any act in regard to the trust estate for his own benefit,

In the case of a purchase of land by a trustee in his own name, in pursuance of the trust, the cestui que trust is entitled to the estate. But, where it is purchased with trust money, in violation of the trust, Mr. Atherley is of opinion, that the cestui que trust has a lien only on the estate, and not a right to the estate. There is much sound sense in the distinction; but he admits, that Bennett v. Mayhew is apparently against it. Atherley on Marr. Sett. ch. 28, p. 443, 444. It is of course to be understood, that the cestui que trust is not in any case, where the trust money is invested in lands or other things in fraud or breach of the trust, bound to take the land, or to insist on his lien. He has an election to do so, or not. Ibid.

he will, nevertheless, be held responsible therefor to the cestui que trust, as upon an implied trust. Thus, for example, if a trustee should purchase a lien or mortgage on the trust estate at a discount, he would not be allowed to avail himself of the difference; but the purchase would be held a trust for the benefit of the cestui que trust.<sup>1</sup> So, if a trustee should renew a lease of the trust estate, he would be held bound to account to the cestui que trust for all advantages made thereby.<sup>2</sup>

→ § 1211. a. The same principle will apply to persons standing in other fiduciary relations to each other. Thus, for example, if an agent, who is employed to purchase for another, purchases in his own name, or for his own account, he will be held to be a trustee of the principal at the option of another.<sup>3</sup> So, if he is employed to purchase up a debt of his principal, and he does so at an undervalue or discount, the principal will be entitled to the benefit thereof, in the nature of a trust.<sup>4</sup> In this predicament sureties are also held to be, who purchase up the securities of the principal, on which they are sureties; and the principal will be entitled to the benefit of every such purchase at the price given for them.<sup>5</sup>

doctrine of implied trusts, is that, which embraces, what is commonly called, the equitable conversion of property. By this is meant an implied or equitable change of property from real to personal, or from personal to real, so that each is considered transferable, transmissible, and descendible, according to its new character, as it arises out of the contracts, or other acts, and intentions of the parties. This change is a mere consequence of the common doctrine of Courts of Equity, that where things are agreed to be done, they are to be treated for many purposes, as if they were actually done.<sup>1</sup> Thus, (as we have already had occasion to consider,) where a contract is made for the sale of lands, the vendor is, in Equity, immediately deemed a trustee for the vendee of the real estate; and the vendee is deemed a trustee for the vendor of the purchase-money. Under such circumstances, the vendee is treated as the owner of the land, and it is devisable and descendible, as his real estate. On the other hand, the money is treated as the personal estate of the vendor, and is subject to the like modes of disposition by him, as other personalty, and is distributable in the same manner on his death.<sup>2</sup> So, land, articulated to be sold and turned into money, is reputed [*460] money; and money, *articled or bequeathed to be invested in land, is ordinarily deemed to be land.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1213. So, if money is devised to be laid out in the purchase of land, which is to be settled on one and his heirs, the person, for whose benefit the purchase is to be made, may come into a Court of Equity, and have the money paid to him without any purchase of the land; for he has a complete title to the same as owner.<sup>1</sup> But if he should die before any such purchase is made, or the money is paid, so that the question comes between his heir or devisee, and executors or administrators, which of them shall have the money; in such a case Courts of Equity will decree it to the heir or devisee, precisely as if the land had been purchased in his lifetime, upon the ground above stated.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1214. In general, Courts of Equity do not incline to interfere to change the quality of the property, as *the testator or intestate has left it, unless there [*461] is some clear act or intention, by which he has unequivocally fixed upon it throughout a definite character, either as money, or as land. For, (it has been said,) there is not a spark of Equity between the next of kin and the heir, as to the right of property, in such cases;

After quoting, what he called the cant expression, that in Equity, what is to be done, is considered as done, he added; "Either that idea should have been carried fully out, or it should have been abandoned. I think it should have been the latter. See Com. Dig. Chancery, 4 W. 10, 4 W. 15, 16.

and, therefore, the general principle adopted is, that the heir shall take all the property, which has attached to it the quality of real estate, if there is not some other definite and specific purpose, to which it is entirely devoted.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1215. In the next place, we may enter upon the consideration of that class of implied trusts, arising from, what are properly called, equitable liens; by which we are to understand such liens, as exist in Equity, and of which Courts of Equity alone take cognizance. A lien, (as has been already said,<sup>2</sup>) is not, strictly speaking, either a jus in re, or a jus ad rem; that is, it is not a property in the thing itself, nor does it constitute a right of action for the thing. It more properly constitutes a charge upon the thing.

§ 1216. At law, a lien is usually deemed to be a right to possess and retain a thing, until some charge upon it is paid or removed.<sup>3</sup> There are few liens, which at law exist in relation to real estate. The most striking of this sort undoubtedly is the lien of a judgment creditor upon the lands of his debtor. But this is not a specific lien on any particular land, but is a general lien over all the real estate of the debtor, to be enforced by an elegit or other legal process upon such part of the real estate of the debtor, as the creditor may elect.<sup>4</sup> The lien itself is treated as a consequence of the right to take out an elegit; and

it is applied not only to present real estate in possession, but also to reversionary interests in real estate.<sup>1</sup> In respect to personal property, a lien is generally, (perhaps in all cases, with the exception only of certain maritime liens, such as seamen's wages and bottomry bonds,) recognised at law to exist only, when it is connected with the *possession, or [*462] the right to possess the thing itself. Where the possession is once voluntarily parted with, the lien is ordinarily at law gone.<sup>2</sup> Thus, for example, the lien on goods for freight, the lien for the repairs of domestic ships, and the lien on goods for a balance of accounts, are all extinguished by a voluntary surrender of the thing, to which they are attached.<sup>3</sup> Liens at law generally arise, either by the express agreement of the parties, or by the usage of trade, which amounts to an implied agreement, or by mere operation of law.<sup>4</sup>

some special cases Courts of Equity will give aid to the enforcement and satisfaction of liens in a manner utterly unknown at law. Thus, for example, at law a creditor is only entitled to have a moiety of the lands of the judgment debtor extended upon an elegit, and must wait, until he can be reimbursed for the amount of his judgment out of the rents and profits. But where the payment of the judgment cannot be attained at all by a mere application of the rents and profits, (as if the interest upon the judgment exceeds the annual rents and profits) or where the payment cannot be obtained out of the rents and profits within a reasonable time, Courts of Equity will accelerate the payment by decreeing a sale of the moiety of the lands; for it would be gross injustice to the judgment creditor to compel him to wait for satisfaction of his debt out of the assets of his debtor for an unreasonable length of time, when he had a clear lien on the property for the full amount.<sup>1</sup> For the same reason Courts of Equity will accelerate payment by directing a sale, where the real estate, bound by the judgment, is a mere dry reversion; for in such a case there must, or at least, there may unavoidably be a long delay, before the party can be paid out of the rents and profits.<sup>2</sup>

interest in the freehold estate of his debtor, treating the judgment as in the nature of a lien upon such equitable interest. But, in all cases of this sort, the judgment creditor must have pursued the same steps, as he would have been obliged to do, to perfect his lien, if the estate had been legal. Thus, for example, it is necessary for the judgment creditor to sue out an elegit, at law, before his lien will be treated as complete. If, therefore, he seeks relief in equity against the equitable freehold estate of his debtor, it is equally indispensable for him first to sue out an elegit; for until that time he has not made a final election. And not only must the suing out of an elegit be proved; but it must also be averred in the Bill, otherwise the latter will be demurrable.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Neate v. Duke of Marlborough, 3 Mylne & Craig, 407, 415. On this occasion Lord Cottenham said: "In the first place, I find Lord Redesdale, not only laying it down, that it is necessary, that the judgment creditor suing in this Court should have issued an elegit, but expressly saying, that if that is not done, it is a ground of demurrer. And there was great force in the argument at the bar, that, though his Lordship's attention had been distinctly called to the point, yet when a subsequent edition of his Treatise on Pleading was published, and, as I have always understood, under his superintendence, the same passage was preserved. I also find Lord Lyndhurst stating it as a general rule, though that was not the point, on which the decision of the appeal before him was to turn, that an elegit is necessary. For myself, I never entertained the least doubt of it; and certainly, though I have not had particular occasion to look into the question, if I had been asked, what the rule of the Court was, I should at once have answered that, when a party comes here as a judgment creditor for the purpose of having the benefit of his judgment, he must have sued out execution upon the judgment. And in all the authorities referred to, though in some of them the distinction appears to be so far taken, that, in the case of a feri facias, the creditor must go the whole length of having a return, there is no case, except the solitary one in Dickens, which decides, that the suing out of the elegit is not necessary as a preliminary step. With respect to authority, therefore, there can be no doubt; for there is not only the authority of Lord Redesdale, and that of Lord Lyndhurst, in the House of Lords; but there is also, what is stated,

at the bar to be the uniform understanding and practice of the profession. The conclusion, at which I arrive, however, as to what on principle ought to be the rule, is derived from a consideration of the nature of the jurisdiction, which the Court exercises in such cases. That jurisdiction is not for the purpose of giving effect to a lien, which is supposed to be created by the judgment. It is true, that, for certain purposes, the Court recognises a title by the judgment; as for the purpose of redeeming, or, after the death of the debtor, of having his assets administered. But the jurisdiction there is grounded simply upon this, that inasmuch as the Court finds the Creditor in a condition to acquire a power over the estate by suing out the writ, it does, what it does in all similar cases; it gives to the party the right to come in and redeem other incumbrancers upon the property. So, again, after the debtor is dead, if, under any circumstances, the estate is to be sold, the Court pays off the judgment creditor, because it cannot otherwise make a title to the estate; and the Court never sells the interest of a debtor subject to an elegit creditor. That was very much discussed in the case of Tunstall v. Trappes. But there was there a necessity for a sale; and the question was not as to the right of the judgment creditor against his debtor, he being willing; but where, from other circumstances, a sale having become indispensable, it was necessary to clear the estate from the claims of parties, who had charges upon it. It is, therefore, not correct to say, that, according to the usual acceptance of the term, the creditor obtains a lien by virtue of his judgment. If he had an equitable lien, he would have a right to come here to have the estate sold; but he has no such right. What gives a judgment creditor a right against the estate is only the act of parliament; for independently of that, he has none? The act of parliament gives him, if he pleases, an option by the writ of elegit—the very name implying, that it is an option—which, if he exercises, he is entitled to have a writ directed to the sheriff to put him in possession of a moiety of the lands. The effect of the proceeding under the writ is to give to the creditor a legal title, which, if no impediment prevent him, he may enforce at law by ejectment. If there be a legal impediment, he then comes into this Court, not to obtain a greater benefit than the law, that is, the act of parliament, has given him, but to have the same benefit, by the process of this Court, which he would have had at law, if no legal impediment had intervened. How then can there be a better right; or how can the judgment, which, per se, gives the creditor no title against the land, be considered as giving him a title here? Suppose he never sues out the writ, and never, therefore, exercises his option, is this Court to give him the benefit of a lien, to which he has never chosen to assert his right? The reasoning would seem very strong, that as this Court is lending its aid to debtor dies, whereby a lien attaches upon all the lands descended in the hands of his heirs, Courts of Equity will interfere in aid of the creditor, and in proper cases accelerate the payment of the debt. At law the creditor can only take out execution against the whole lands, and hold them, as he would under an elegit, until the debt is fully paid.<sup>1</sup> But in Equity the creditor will also be entitled to an account of the rents and profits received by the heir since the descent cast. And Courts of Equity will go further and decree a sale of the inheritance in order to accelerate the payment of the debt, if it cannot otherwise be satisfied within a reasonable period.<sup>2</sup> The same doctrine is applied to reversions after an estate for life, and even after an estate tail; for they will be decreed to be sold to satisfy a bond debt of the ancestor, which binds the heir, in order to accelerate the payment of the debt.<sup>3</sup> And, indeed, Courts of Equity have in the case of advowsons gone further; and have decreed an advowson in gross to be sold to satisfy a bond creditor; holding such an advowson to be assets at law, even if not extendible on an elegit.<sup>4</sup>

law, and in respect to which Courts of Equity exercise a very large and salutary jurisdiction.<sup>1</sup> In regard to these liens, it may be generally stated, that they arise from constructive trusts. They are, therefore, wholly independent of the possession of the thing, to which they are attached, as a charge or incumbrance; and they can be enforced only in Courts of equity.<sup>2</sup> The usual course of enforcing a lien in Equity, if not discharged, is by a sale of the property, to which it is attached.<sup>3</sup> Of this we have a strong illustration in the well known doctrine of Courts of Equity, that the vendor of land [*463] has a lien on the *land for the amount of the purchase-money, not only against the vendee himself, and his heirs, and other privies in estate, but also against all subsequent purchasers, having notice, that the purchase-money remains unpaid.<sup>4</sup> To the extent

and 10 Peters, 625, 640. Sir Thomas Clarke (the Master of the Rolls) in Burgess v. Wheate, 1 W. Black. R. 150; S. C. 1 Eden, R. 211, said; "Where a conveyance is made prematurely, before money paid, the money is considered as a lien on that estate in the hands of the vendee. So, where money was [is] paid prematurely, the money would be considered as a lien on the estate of the vendor for the personal representatives of the purchaser; which would leave things in statu quo. Mr. Sugden seems to have doubted whether this lien exists in favor of the vendee, who has paid the purchase-money. For alluding, as it should seem, to such a case, he says, "Where a lien is raised for purchase-money under the usual equity in favor of a vendor, it is for a debt really due to him, and equity merely provides a security for it. But in the case under consideration, Equity must not simply give a security for an existing debt; it must first raise a debt against the express agreement of the parties. The purchase-money was a debt due to the vendor, which upon principle it would be difficult to make him repay. What power has a Court of Equity to rescind a contract like this? The question might perhaps arise, if the vendor was seeking relief in Equity. But in this case he must be a defendant. If it should be admitted, that the money cannot be recovered, then of course he must retain the estate also, until some person appears, who is by law entitled to require a conveyance of it." Sugden on Vendors, ch. 5, p. 258, 7th edit. Id. vol. 1, p. 284, 9th edit. Lord Eldon cited the same position of Sir Thomas Clarke, in his very words, without objection or observation, in Mackreth v. Symmons, 15 Ves. 345. And afterwards, in the same case, p. 353, he used language importing an approval of it. "This," said he, "comes very near the doctrine of Sir Thomas Clarke, which is very sensible, that where the conveyance or the payment, has been made by surprise, (meaning, it is supposed, "prematurely," in the sense of Sir T. Clarke,) there shall be a lien." The ground, asserted by Mr. Sugden for his doubt, does not seem sufficient to sustain it. He assumes, that there is no debt between the parties, which is the very matter in controversy; for, in the view of a Court of Equity, the payment of the purchase-money may well be deemed a loan upon the security of the land, until it has been conveyed to the vendee. At least, there is quite as much reason to presume it, as there is to presume the land, when conveyed, to be still a security for the purchase-money due to the vendor. In the latter case, though there is a debt due by the vendee, it does not follow, that it is a debt due by the land. In the former, if the estate cannot be conveyed and is not conveyed, the money is really a debt due to the vendee. At all events in Equity it is not very clear, what principle is impugned, by deeming the money a § 1218. This lien of the vendor of real estate for the purchase money is wholly independent of any possession on his part; and it attaches to the estate, as a trust, equally, whether it be actually conveyed, or only be contracted to be conveyed.<sup>2</sup> It has often been objected, that the creation of such a trust by Courts of Equity is in contravention of the policy of the Statute of Frauds.<sup>3</sup> But whatever may be the original force of such an objection, the doctrine is now too firmly established to be shaken by any mere theoretical doubts.<sup>4</sup> Courts of Equity have proceeded upon the ground, that the trust, being raised by implication, is not within the [*465] purview of that statute; but is excepted from it. It is not, perhaps, so strong a case, as that of a mortgage implied by a deposit of the title deeds of real estate, which seems directly against the policy of the statute, but which, nevertheless, has been unhesitatingly sustained.<sup>5</sup>

of another, ought not, in conscience, as between them, to be allowed to keep it, and not to pay the full consideration money. A third person, having full knowledge, that the estate has been so obtained, ought not to be permitted to keep it without making such payment; for it attaches to him, also, as a matter of conscience and duty. It would otherwise happen, that the vendee might put another person into a predicament, better than his own, with full notice of all the facts.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1220. It has been sometimes suggested, that the origin of this lien of the vendor might be attributed to the tacit consent or implied agreement of the parties. But although in some cases it may be perfectly reasonable to presume such a consent or agreement, the lien is not, strictly speaking, attributable to it, but stands independently of any such supposed agreement.<sup>2</sup> On other occasions the lien has been treated as a natural equity, having its foundation in the earliest principles of Courts of Equity.<sup>3</sup> Thus, *it has [*466] been broadly contended, that, according to the law of all nations, the absolute dominion over property sold is not acquired by the purchaser, until he has paid the price, or has otherwise satisfied it, unless the vendor has agreed to trust to the personal credit of the buyer.<sup>4</sup> For a thing may well be deemed to be unconscionably obtained, when the consideration is not paid.<sup>5</sup>

Upon this ground the Roman law declared the lien to be founded in natural justice. Tamen rectè dicitur, et jure gentium, id est, jure naturali, id effici.<sup>1</sup> And, therefore, when Courts of Equity established the lien, as a matter of doctrine, it had the effect of a contract, and the lien was held to prevail, although perhaps no actual contract had taken place.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1221. The true origin of the doctrine may, with high probability, be ascribed to the Roman law, from which it was imported into the Equity Jurisprudence of England.<sup>3</sup> By the Roman law the vendor of property sold had a privilege, or right of priority of payment, in the nature of a lien on the property, for the price, for which it was sold, not only against the vendee and his representatives, but against his creditors and also against subsequent purchasers from him. For it was a rule of that law, that although the sale passed the title and dominion in the thing sold ; yet it also implied a condition, that the vendee should not be master of the thing so sold, unless he had paid the price, or had otherwise satisfied the vendor in respect thereof, or a personal credit had been given to him in consequence of an expression, which fell from Lord Hardwicke, in Pollexfen v. Moore, (3 Atk. R. 273,) whether this lien of the vendor could exist in favor of a third person ; as for example, if the vendor, having such a lien, should exhaust the personal estate of the deceased purchaser, whether legatees should have a right to stand in his place against the real estate in the hands of the heir, as upon the marshalling of the assets. That doubt is now removed, and the affirmative established in Selby v. Selby, 4 Russell, R. 336. See also Lord Eldon's remarks in Mackreth v. Symmons, 15 Ves. 338, 344 ; and Sir Wm. If there was no such delivery of possession, then the vendor might retain the property, as a pledge, until the price was paid. If there was such a delivery of possession, then the vendor might follow the property into the hands of any person, to whom it had been subsequently *passed, and reclaim it, or the price.<sup>4</sup> Venditor [*468] enim, quasi pignus, retinere potest eam rem, quam vendidit.<sup>5</sup> And a part payment of the price did not exon-

But in regard to movables, when delivered to the vendee, there is no sequel, (as it is phrased in the French law,) by way of privilege or lien against the property, except while it remains in the hands of the purchaser. If he has sold it, the right of privilege or lien for the price is gone. 1 Domat, B. 3, tit. 1, § 5, art. 4, and note.

§ 1222. This close analogy, if not this absolute identity, of the English doctrine of the lien of the vendor with that of the Roman Law of privilege on the same subject, seems to demonstrate a common origin; although in England the lien is ordinarily confined to cases of the sale of immovables; and it does not extend to movables, where there has been a transfer of possession.<sup>2</sup> There are, however, some exceptions from the doctrine in each law, founded upon the same general principle, but admitting of some diversity in respect to its practical application.

§ 1223. We have seen, that the lien by the Roman law ceased, (1.) where the price was actually [*469] *paid; (2.) where any thing was taken in satisfaction of the price, although payment had not been positively made; (3.) where a personal credit was given to the vendee, excluding any notion of a lien; Aut pretium nobis solutum sit, (said the Digest); aut satis ea nomine factum; vel etiam fidem habuerimus emptori sine ullâ satisfactione.<sup>3</sup> Pothier has deduced the conclusion, that, in the Civil Law, the question, whether a personal credit was given to the vendee, or not, was to be judged of by all the circumstances of the case. Whenever it was doubtful, whether such credit was given, or not, there, it was not to be presumed, unless made certain by the vendee.<sup>1</sup> In every other case, either a payment, or a satisfaction of the price, was necessary to discharge the property. The giving of a pledge or security for the *price was [*470] deemed equivalent to payment. Quâlibet ratione, si venditori de pretio satisfactum est, veluti, expromissore aut pignore dato, proinde sit, ac si pretium solutum esset.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1224. Now, the same principle is applied in English Jurisprudence. Generally speaking, the lien of the vendor exists; and the burthen of proof is on the purchaser to establish, that in the particular case it has been intentionally displaced, or waived by the

fidejussorem vel pignora det; solutione verò obligatio tollitur. Vinnius also says, that a personal credit, given to the vendor, without satisfaction, is a waiver of the lien. For, commenting on the words of the Institute, Sed si is, qui vendidit, fidem emptoris sequutus fuerit, he says; Id est, fidem emptori de pretio habuerit sine ulla satisfactione. What will amount to such personal credit, he adds, depends on circumstances; but an agreement for postponement of payment to a future day would be such a personal credit, and would discharge the lien. Quod ex circumstantiis æstimandum; veluti, si dies solutioni dicta sit. And for this he cites the Code. (Cod. Lib. 4, tit. 54, l. 3.) He then proceeds; Aut si, cum emptor pecuniam ad manum non haberet, venditor dixerit; I, licet; nunc non requiro; postea dabis. Vinn. ad Inst. <sup>1</sup> Pothier, Pand. Lib. 41, tit. 1, n. 60.—In this position Vinnius agrees with Pothier, contrary to what is held by some other jurists. In dubio, qui rem emptori tradit, non videtur sequi fidem emptoris, nisi emptor contrarium doceat. Vinn. ad Inst. Lib. 2, tit. 1, § 41. Comm. (3).

consent of the parties.<sup>1</sup> If, under all the circumstances, it remains in doubt, then the lien attaches. The difficulty lies in determining, what circumstances are to be deemed sufficient to repel or displace the lien, or to amount to a waiver of it. And upon the authorities this is left in such a state of embarrassment, that a learned Judge has not hesitated to say, that it would have been better at once to have held, that the lien should exist in no case, and that the vendor should suffer the consequences of his want of caution; or to have laid down the rule the other way so distinctly, that a purchaser might be able to know, without the judgment of a court, in what cases it would, and in what it would not exist.<sup>2</sup> At present, that certainty cannot be generally affirmed.

§ 1225. In the first place, it seems, that if upon the face of the conveyance the consideration is expressed [*471] to be paid, and even if a receipt therefor is *endorsed upon the back of it, and yet, in point of fact, the purchase-money has not been paid, the lien is not gone; but it attaches against the vendee and all persons, claiming as volunteers, or with notice under him.<sup>3</sup>

If, on the other hand, a rule has prevailed, as it seems to me, that it is to depend, not upon the circumstance of taking a security, but upon the nature of the security, as amounting to evidence, (as it is sometimes called) or to declaration plain, or manifest intention, (the expressions used upon other occasions,) of a purpose to rely, not any longer upon the estate, but upon the personal credit of the individual, it is obvious, that a vendor, taking a security, unless by evidence, manifest intention, or declaration plain, he shows his purpose, cannot know the situation, in which he stands, without the judgment of a Court, how far that security does contain the evidence, manifest intention, or declaration plain, upon that point. That observation is justified by a review of the authorities; from which it is clear, that different judges would have determined the case differently. And, if some of the cases, that have been determined, had come before me, I should not have been satisfied, that the conclusion was right." <sup>2</sup> Ibid. ; Saunders v. Leslie, 1 Ball & Beatt. R. 514, 515.—In Nairn v. Prowse, (6 Ves. 752), where the question was, whether the taking of a special security by way of pledge was a waiver of the lien, Sir William Grant (Master of the Rolls) held, that it was. Upon that occasion he said ; “ Upon the question as to the claim set up by Mitchell to a lien, it is now settled, that Equity gives the vendor a lien for the price of the estate sold, without any special agreement. But, supposing he does not trust to that, but carves out a security for himself, it still remains matter of doubt, and has not received any positive decision, whether that does, or does not amount to a waiver of the equitable lien ; so as to preclude the vendor from resorting back to that lien, the security proving insufficient. Without entering into that question, whether every security necessarily amounts to a waiver, it is impossible to contend, that there may not be a security, that will have that effect, that will be a waiver. By conveying the estate without obtaining payment, a degree of credit is necessarily given to the vendee. That credit may be given upon the confidence of the existence of such a lien. The knowledge of that may be the motive for permitting the estate to pass without payment. Then, it may be argued, that taking a note or a bond cannot materially vary the case. A credit is still given to him ; and may be given from the same motive ; not to supersede the lien, but for the purpose of ascertaining the debt, and countervailing the receipt endorsed upon the conveyance. But, if the conveyance be totally distinct and independent, will it not then become a case of substitution for the lien, instead of a credit given because of the lien ? Suppose a mortgage was made upon another estate of the vendee ; will Equity at the same time give him, what is in effect a mortgage upon the estate he sold ; the obvious intention of burthening one estate being, that the other shall remain free and unincumbered ? Though in that case the vendor would be a creditor, if the mortgage proved deficient ; yet he would not be a creditor by lien upon the estate he had conveyed away. The same rule must hold with regard to any other pledge for the purchase-money. In this case the vendor trusts to no personal security of the vendee ; but gets possession of a long annuity of £100 a year; which, according to the rise or fall of stock, might or might not be sufficient for the purchase-money. He has, therefore, an absolute security in his hands, not the personal security of the vendee. Could the vendee have any motive for parting with his stock, but to have the absolute dominion over the land? It is impossible, it could be intended, that he should have this double security, an equitable mortgage, and a pledge which latter, if the stock should rise a little, would be amply sufficient to answer the purchase-money." Lord Eldon, in Mackreth v. Symmons, 15 Ves. 348, in commenting on this case, said; "The Master of the Rolls, in his judgment, admitting the general doctrine, as to the vendor's lien, observes upon the question, whether a security taken will be a waiver, that by conveying the estate without payment, a degree of credit is given to the vendee, which may be given upon the confidence of the existence of such lien. And it may be argued, that taking a note or a bond cannot materially vary the case; a credit is still given to him; and may be given from the same motive; not to supersede the lien; but for the purpose of ascertaining the debt, and countervailing the receipt, endorsed upon the conveyance. There is great difficulty to conceive, how it should have been reasoned almost in any case, that the circumstance of taking a security was evidence, that the lien was given up; as in most cases there is a contract under seal for payment of the money. The Master of the Rolls, having before observed, that there may be a security, which will have the effect of a waiver, proceeds to express his opinion, that, if the security be totally distinct and independent, it will then become a case of substitution for the lien, instead of a credit given on account of the lien; meaning, that, not a security, but the nature of the security, may amount to satisfactory evidence, that a lien was not intended to be reserved. And [he] puts the case of a mortgage of another estate, or any other pledge, as evidence of an intention, that the estate sold shall remain free and unincumbered. It must not, however, be understood, that a mortgage taken is to be considered as a conclusive ground for the inference, that a lien was not intended; as I could put many instances, that a mortgage of another estate for the purchase-money would not be decisive evidence of an intention to give up the lien; though in the ordinary case a man has always greater security for his money upon a mortgage, than value for his money upon a purchase. And the question must be, whether, under the circumstances of that particular case, attending to the worth of that very mortgage, the inference arises. In the instance of a pledge of stock, does it necessarily follow, that the vendor, consulting the convenience of the purchaser by permitting him to have the chance of the benefit, therefore gives up the lien, which he has? Under all the circumstances deemed not to be a waiver of the lien, but to be merely a mode of payment.<sup>1</sup> And it has been laid down, as clear doctrine, that, in general, where a bill, note, or bond is given for the whole or a part of the purchase-money, the vendor does not lose his lien for so much of the purchase-money, as remains unpaid, even though [*475] it is *secured to be paid at a future day, or not until after the death of the purchaser.<sup>2</sup>

of that case, the judgment of the Master of the Rolls was satisfied, that the conclusion did follow. But the doctrine, as to taking a mortgage, or a pledge, would be carried too far, if it is understood, as applicable to all cases, that a man, taking one pledge, therefore necessarily gives up another; which must, I think, be laid down upon the circumstances of each case, rather than universally."

Mills*, 2 Ves. & Beam. 306, 309. Indeed, the whole doctrine, respecting the effect of taking a security, is established in England upon grounds not very satisfactory under any circumstances. See Ex parte Loaring, 2 Rose, Cas. 80. In the case of Gilman v. Brown, 1 Mason, R. 212, the whole doctrine was reviewed at large; and a different conclusion was arrived at from that stated in the text. The following extract may not be wholly unacceptable, as presenting the reasoning opposed to that maintained in some of the late English authorities.—"The doctrine, that a lien exists on the land for the purchase-money, which lies at the foundation of the decision of the commissioners, as well as of the present defence, deserves a very deliberate consideration. It can hardly be doubted, that this doctrine was borrowed from the text of the civil law; and though it may now be considered as settled, as between the vendor and vendee, and all claiming under the latter, with notice of the non-payment of the purchase-money; yet its complete establishment may be referred to a comparatively recent period. Lord Eldon has given us an historical review of all the cases, (Mackreth v. Symmons, 15 Ves. 329,) from which he deduces the following inferences. First, That, generally speaking, there is such a lien. Secondly, that in those general cases, in which there would be a lien, as between vendor and vendee, the vendor will have the lien against a third person, who had notice, that the money was not paid. These two points, he adds, seem to be clearly settled ; and the same conclusion has been adopted by a very learned Chancellor of our own country. Garson v. Green, 1 John. Ch. R. 308. The rule, however, is manifestly founded on a supposed conformity with the intentions of the parties, upon which the law raises an implied contract ; and therefore it is not inflexible, but ceases to act, where the circumstances of the case do not justify such a conclusion. What circumstances shall have such an effect, seems indeed to be a matter of a good deal of delicacy and difficulty. And the difficulty is by no means lessened by the subtle doubts and distinctions of recent authorities. It seems indeed to be established, that prima facie the purchase-money is a lien on the land ; and it lies on the purchaser to show, that the vendor agreed to waive it ; (Hughes v. Kearney, 1 Sch. & Lefr. 132 ; Mackreth v. Symmons, 15 Ves. 329 ; Garson v. Green, 1 John. Ch. Rep. 308 ; ) and a receipt for the purchase-money, endorsed upon the conveyance, is not sufficient to repel this presumption of law. But, how far the taking a distinct security for the purchase-money shall be held to be a waiver of the implied lien, has been a vexed question. There is a pretty strong, if not decisive current of authority, to lead us to the conclusion, that merely taking the bond, note, or covenant of the vendee himself for the purchase-money, will not repel the lien ; for it may be taken to countervail the receipt of the payment usually endorsed on the conveyance. Hughes v. Kearney, 1 Sch. & Lefr. 132 ; Nairn v. Prowse, 6 Ves. 752 ; Mackreth v. Symmons, 15 Ves. 329 ; Blackburn v. Gregson, 1 Bro. Ch. Cas. 420 ; Garson v. Green, 1 John. Ch. R. 308 ; Gibbons v. Raddall, 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 682 ; Coppin v. Coppin, 2 P. Will. 291 ; Cases cited in Sugden on Vendors, ch. 12, p. 541, 7th ed. &c. But where a distinct and independent security is taken, either of other property, or of the responsibility of third persons, it certainly admits of a very different consideration. There, the rule may properly apply, that expressum facit cessare tacitum ; and where the party has carved out his own security, the law will not create another in aid. This was manifestly the opinion of Sir William Grant, in a recent case, where he asks ; ‘ If the security be totally distinct and independent, will it not then become a case of substitution for the lien, instead of a credit given because of the lien ? ’ And he then puts the case of a mortgage on another estate for the purchase-money, which he holds to be a discharge of the lien, and asserts, that the same rule must hold with regard to any other pledge for his personal representatives.<sup>1</sup> It may also be enforced in favor of a third person, notwithstanding the doubts the purchase-money. (Nairn v. Prowse, 6 Ves. 752.) And the same doctrine was asserted in a very early case, where a mortgage was taken for a part only of the purchase-money, and a note for the residue. Bond v. Kent, 2 Vern. 281. Lord Eldon, with his characteristic inclination to doubt, has hesitated upon the extent of this doctrine. He seems to consider, that, whether the taking of a distinct security will have the effect of waiving the implied lien, or not, depends altogether upon the circumstances of each case, and that no rule can be laid down universally; and that, therefore, it is impossible for any purchaser to know, without the judgment of a court, in what cases a lien would, and in what cases it would not, exist. His language is, 'If, on the other hand, a rule has prevailed, (as it seems to me,) that it is to depend, not upon the circumstance of taking a security, but upon the nature of the security, as amounting to evidence, (as it is sometimes called,) or to declaration plain, or manifest intention, (the expression used on other occasions,) of a purpose to rely not any longer upon the estate, but upon the personal credit of the individual; it is obvious, that a purchaser taking a security, unless by evidence, manifest intention, or declaration plain, he shows his purpose, cannot know the situation, in which he stands, without the judgment of a court, how far that security does contain the evidence, manifest intention, or declaration plain upon that point.' Mackreth v. Symmons, 15 Ves. 329, 342; Austin v. Halsey, 6 Ves. jr. 475. If, indeed, this be the state of the law upon this subject, it is reduced to a most distressing uncertainty. But on a careful examination of all the authorities, I do not find a single case, in which it has been held, if the vendor takes a personal collateral security, binding others, as well as the vendee, as for instance, a bond or note with a surety or an endorser, or a collateral security by way of pledge or mortgage, that under such circumstances a lien exists on the land itself. The only case, that looks that way, is Elliot v. Edwards, 3 Bos. and Pull. 181, where, as Lord Eldon says, the point was not decided. And it was certainly a case depending upon its own peculiar circumstances, where the surety himself might seem to have stipulated for the lien, by requiring a covenant against an assignment of the premises without the joint consent of himself and the vendor. Lord Redesdale, too, has thrown out an intimation, (Hughes v. Kearney, 1 Sch. & Lefr. 132,) that it must appear, that the vendor relied on it as security; and he puts the case; 'Suppose bills given, as part of the purchase-money, and suppose them drawn on an insolvent house, shall the acceptance of such bills discharge the vendor's lien? They are taken, not as a security, but as a mode of payment.' In formerly expressed by Lord Hardwicke.<sup>1</sup> As for example, it may be enforced by marshalling assets in my humble judgment, this is begging the whole question. If, upon the contract of purchase, the money is to be paid in cash, and bills of exchange are afterwards taken in payment, which turn out unproductive, there the receipt of the bills may be considered as a mere mode of payment. But if the original contract is, that the purchase-money shall be paid at a future day, and acceptances of third persons are to be taken for it, payable at such future day, or a bond with surety payable at such future day, I do not perceive, how it is possible to assert, that the acceptances or bond are not relied on as security. It is sufficient, however, that the case was not then before his Lordship; and that he admits, that taking a distinct security would be a waiver of the lien. On the other hand, there are several cases, in which it is laid down, that if other security be taken, the implied lien on the land is gone. To this effect, certainly, the case of Fawell v. Heelis, Ambler. 724; S. C. 2 Dick. R. 485, is an authority, however it may, on its own circumstances, have been shaken. And the doctrine, is explicitly asserted and acted upon in Nairn v. Prowse, 6 Ves. jr. 752. See also Bond v. Kent, 2 Vern. 281. In our own country, a very venerable judge of Equity has recognised the same doctrine. He says; 'The doctrine, that the vendor of land not taking a security, nor making a conveyance, retains a lien upon the property, is so well settled, as to be received as a maxim. Even if he hath made a conveyance, yet he may pursue the land in the possession of the vendee, or of a purchaser with notice. But if he hath taken a security, or the vendee hath sold to a third person without notice, the lien is lost.' Cole v. Scott, 2 Wash. R. 141. Looking to the principle, upon which the original doctrine of lien is established, I have no hesitation to declare, that taking the security of a third person for the purchase-money ought to be held a complete waiver of any lien upon the land; and that in a case, standing upon such a fact, it would be very difficult to bring my mind to a different conclusion. At all events, it is prima facie evidence of a waiver; and the onus is on the vendor to prove by the most cogent and irresistible circumstances, that it ought not to have that effect. Such was the result of my judgment upon an examination of the authorities, when a very recent case before the Master of the Rolls first came to my knowledge. I have perused it with great attention, and it has not, in any degree, shaken my opinion. The case there was of acceptances of the vendee and of his partner in trade, taken for the payment of the purchase-money. It was admitted, that there was no case of a security given by a third person, in which the lien had been held to exist. But the Master of the Rolls, without deciding what would be the favor of legatees and creditors, and giving them the benefit, by the way of substitution to the vendor, when

effect of a security, properly so denominated, of a third person, held, in conformity to the opinion of Lord Redesdale, that bills of exchange were merely a mode of payment, and not a security. This conclusion he drew from the nature of such bills, considering them as mere orders on the acceptor to pay money of the drawer to the payee; and that the acceptor was to be considered, not as a surety for the debt of another, but as paying the debt out of the debtor's funds in his hands. Grant v. Mills, 2 Ves. & Beam. R. 306. With this conclusion of the Master of the Rolls, I confess myself not satisfied, and desire to reserve myself for the case, when it shall arise in judgment. It is founded on very artificial reasoning, and not always supported in point of fact by the practice of the commercial world. The distinction, however, on which it proceeds, admits, by a very strong implication, that the security of a third person would repel the lien. If, indeed, the point were new, there would be much reason to contend, that a distinct security of the party himself would extinguish the lien on the land, as it certainly does the lien upon personal chattels. Cowell v. Simpson, 16 Ves. jr. 275. In applying the doctrine to the facts of the present case, I confess, that I have no difficulty in pronouncing against the existence of a lien for the unpaid part of the purchase-money. The property was a large mass of unsettled and uncultivated lands, to which the Indian title was not as yet extinguished. It was in the necessary contemplation of all parties bought on speculation, to be sold out to sub-purchasers, and ultimately to settlers. The great objects of the speculation would be materially impaired and embarrassed by any latent incumbrance, the nature and extent of which it might not always be easy to ascertain, and which might, by a subdivision of the property, be apportioned upon an almost infinite number of purchasers. It is not supposable, that so obvious a consideration should not have been within view of the parties; and, viewing it, it is very difficult to suppose, that they could mean to create such an incumbrance. A distinct and independent security was taken by negotiable notes, payable at a future day. There is no pretence, that the notes were a mere mode of payment, for the endorsers were, by the theory of the law, and in fact, conditional sureties for the payment. And in this respect, the case is distinguishable from that of receiving bills of exchange, where, by the theory of the law, the acceptor is not a surety, but merely pays the money of the drawer in pursuance of his order. Hughes v. Kearney, 1 Sch. & Lefr. 132; Grant v. Mills, 2 Ves. & Beam. R. 306. The securities themselves, were, from their negotiable nature, capable of being turned immediately into cash; and in their transfer from hand to hand, they could never have been supposed to draw after them in favor of the holder, a lien on

he seeks payment out of the personal assets of the vendee.<sup>1</sup> So if a subsequent incumbrancer, or purchaser from the vendee, is compelled to discharge the lien of the vendor, he will in like manner be entitled to stand substituted in his place against other claimants under the vendor on the estate, and to have the assets marshalled in his favor.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1228. We have already had occasion to state, that the lien of the vendor exists against the vendee, and against volunteers, and purchasers under him with notice, or having an equitable title only.<sup>3</sup> But it does not exist against purchasers under a conveyance of the legal estate made bonâ fide for a valuable consideration the land for their payment. But I pass over these and some other peculiar circumstances of this case, and put it upon the broad and general doctrine, that here was the security of a third person, taken as such, and that extinguished any implied lien for the purchase-money." See also Brown v. Gilman, 4 Wheat. R. 290, 291, 292; Fish v. Howland, 1 Paige, R. 20; Stafford v. Van Rensselaer, 9 Cowen, R. 316. Mr. Chancellor Kent, in his Commentaries, (4 Kent. Comm. Lect. 58, p. 151 to 153, 3d edit.) has summed up the general doctrine, as well as the exceptions to it, with great clearness and accuracy. He holds, that the better opinion is, that taking a note, bond, or covenant of the vendee himself is not a waiver of the lien; for such instruments are only the ordinary evidence of a debt. But, that taking a note, bill, or bond with a distinct security, or taking a distinct security exclusively by itself, either in the shape of real or personal property, from the vendee, or taking the responsibility of a third person is evidence, that the vendor does not repose upon the lien, but upon an independent security, and it discharges the lien. This conclusion he deduces from a survey of the American, as well as the English authorities. See also 1 Fonbl. Eq. B. 1, ch. 3, § 3, note (e); Id. B. 1, ch. 5, § 8, note (l).

without notice, if they have paid the purchase-money.<sup>1</sup> The lien will also prevail against assignees claiming [*481] by *a general assignment under the bankrupt and insolvent laws;<sup>2</sup> and against assignees claiming under a general assignment, made by a failing debtor for the benefit of creditors; for in such cases the assignees are deemed to possess the same equities only as the debtor himself would possess.<sup>3</sup> So, it will prevail against a judgment creditor of the vendee before an actual conveyance of the estate has been made to him;<sup>4</sup> and, as it should seem, also against such a judgment creditor after the conveyance; for each party, as a creditor, would have a lien on the estate sold; with an equal equity; and in that case, the maxim applies, Qui prior est in tempore, potior est in jure.<sup>5</sup>

* § 1230. Liens of an analogous nature may [*482] be created by a deposit of title deeds, as a security for advances of money; thus constituting an equitable mortgage on the estate included in the title deeds. But this subject has been already considered in a previous part of these Commentaries.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1231. So, liens may be created on the purchase-money, due on the sale of an estate, in favor of a vendee, if it is agreed, that the money shall be deposited in the hands of a third person, to be applied in discharge of prior incumbrances, to the extent of such incumbrances.<sup>3</sup> Indeed, there is generally no difficulty in Equity in establishing a lien, not only on real estate, but on personal property, or on money in the hands of a third person, wherever that is a matter of agreement, at least against the party himself, and third persons, who are volunteers, and have notice. For it is a general principle in Equity, that, as against the party himself, and any claiming under him voluntarily, or with notice, such an agreement raises a trust.<sup>4</sup> Thus, for example, if a tenant for life of real estate, should, by covenant, agree to set apart, and pay the whole, or a portion of the annual profits of that estate, to trustees for certain objects, it would create a lien, in the nature of a trust, on those profits, against him, and all persons, claiming as volunteers, or with notice under him.<sup>1</sup> So, if a father, on the marriage of his son, should covenant to settle lands of a particular [*483] annual value *on his son, this would create a lien for that amount on his real estate generally, if he should die before he had settled any such lands according to his covenant.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1232. Upon similar principles, where a vendee has sold the estate to a bonâ fide purchaser without notice, if the purchase-money has not been paid, the original vendor may proceed against the estate for his lien, or against the purchase-money in the hands of such purchaser for satisfaction; for in such a case, the latter, not having paid his money, takes the estate cum onere, at least to the extent of the unpaid purchase-money. And this proceeds upon a general ground, that where trust-money can be traced, it shall be applied to the purposes of the trust.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1233. But, although a lien will be created in favor of a vendor for the purchase-money on the sale of an estate; yet, if the consideration of the conveyance is a covenant to pay an annuity to the vendor, and another covenant to pay a part of the money to third persons,

But see Post, § 1249 and note (2) the cases, where such a covenant would be a lien, and where it would not. The distinction in the cases seems generally to be between a covenant to settle particular lands and a covenant to settle lands generally, not specifying any in particular. The former constitutes a lien in the particular lands specified. The latter does not on the lands generally.

it seems, that the latter, not being parties to the conveyance, will not generally have any lien thereon for the payment of such money; for they stand in no privity to establish a lien, at least, unless the original agreement import an intention to create such a lien.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1234. Another species of lien is that, which results to one joint owner of any real estate, or other joint property, from repairs and improvements made *upon such property for the joint benefit, and for [*484] disbursements touching the same. This lien, as we shall presently see, sometimes arises from a contract express or implied between the parties, and sometimes it is created by Courts of Equity upon mere principles of general justice, especially where any relief is sought by the party, who ought to pay his proportion of the money expended in such repairs and improvements; for in such cases the maxim well applies; Nemo debet locupletari ex alterius incommodo.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1235. And, in the first place, in respect to repairs, improvements, and disbursements upon real estate. It seems, that at the Common Law, if there are two tenants in common or jointenants of a house or mill, and it should fall into decay, and the one is willing to repair, and the other is not; he, that is willing to repair, shall have a writ de reparatione faciendâ; for owners are bound pro bono publico to maintain houses and mills, which are for the habitation and use of man.<sup>3</sup> It is not, perhaps, quite certain, from the manner, in which his doctrine is laid down, whether the writ applied merely to repairs on houses and mills, or whether it extended also to repairs on other things, constituting real estate, or appurtenant thereto. But it seems clear, that it did not extend to improvements (not being repairs) made upon real estate generally; nor to any cases, where the repairs were made under an express or implied contract; for in the latter case contribution could be obtained in a common action founded on the contract.

§ 1236. But the doctrine of contribution in Equity is larger than it is at law; and, in many cases, repairs and [*485] improvements will be held to be, not merely *a personal charge, but a lien on the estate itself. Thus, for example, it has been held, that, if two or more persons make a joint purchase, and afterwards one of them lays out a considerable sum of money in repairs or improvements, and dies, this will be a lien on the land, and a trust for the representatives of him, who advanced it.<sup>1</sup>

R. 326,) it was said by Mr. Chief Justice Parker, in delivering the opinion of the court, that no action lies at the common law by one tenant in common, who has expended more than his share in repairing the common property, against the deficient tenants. But this seems not easily reconcilable with what is said in Doane v. Badger, 12 Mass. R. 70, 71. See Registrum Brev. 153, and Fitz. N. Brev. 127. There certainly may be a distinction between a right by action to compel repairs, and a right of contribution in invitum after repairs made.

Mr. Sugden, in his Treatise on Vendors, (ch. 15, § 1, p. 611, 7th edit. Id. vol. 2, ch. 15, § 1, p. 131, 132, 9th edit.) says: "It seems, that, where two or more persons purchase an estate, and one, for instance, pays all the implied agreement, as to the repairs and improvements, between the joint purchasers, and an implied lien following upon such an agreement.<sup>1</sup> But Courts of Equity have not confined the doctrine of compensation or lien for repairs and improvements to cases of agreement, or of joint purchases. They have extended it to other cases, where the party making the repairs and improvements has acted bonâ fide and innocently, and there has been a substantial benefit conferred on the owner ; so that, ex æquo et bono, he ought to pay for such benefit.<sup>2</sup> Thus, where a tenant for life under a will has gone on to finish im-

money, and the estate is conveyed to them both, the one, who paid the money, cannot call upon those, who paid no part of it, to repay him their shares of the purchase-money, or to convey their shares of the estate to him ; for, by payment of all the money, he gains neither a lien, nor a mortgage, because there is no contract for either. Nor can it be construed a resulting trust, as such a trust cannot arise at an after period ; and perhaps the only remedy he has, is to file a bill against them for a contribution. (See Wood v. Birch, and Wood v. Norman, Rolls, 7 and 8 March, 1804 ; the decree in which case does not, however, authorize the observation ; but the author conceives it to follow, from what fell from the Master of the Rolls at the hearing.) Whenever, therefore, two persons agree to purchase an estate, it should be stipulated in the agreement, that if, by the default of either of them, the other shall be compelled to pay the whole, or greater part of the purchase-money, the estate shall be conveyed to him, and he shall hold the entirety against the other and his heirs ; unless he or they shall, within a stated time, repay the sum advanced on their account, with interest in the mean time. But it has been held, that, if one of two jointenants of a lease renew at his own expense, and the other party reap the full benefit of it, the one advancing the money shall have a charge on the other moiety of the estate for a moiety of his advances on account of the fines, although such other moiety of the estate be in strict settlement at the time of the renewal. The case was considered to fall within the principle, upon which mortgagees, who renew leasehold interests, have been decreed entitled to charge the amount upon the lands. (Hamilton v. Denny, 1 Ball & Beat. 199.)"

provements, permanently beneficial to an estate, which were begun by the testator, Courts of Equity have deemed the expenditure a charge, for which the tenant is entitled to a lien.<sup>1</sup> So, where a party, lawfully in possession under a defective title, has made permanent improvements, if relief is asked in Equity by the true owner, he will be compelled to allow for such improvements.<sup>2</sup> So money, bonâ fide laid out in improvements on an estate by one joint owner, will be allowed on a bill by the other, if he ask for a partition.<sup>3</sup> So, if the true owner stands by, and suffers improvements to be made on an estate without notice of his title, he will not be permitted in Equity to enrich himself by the loss of another; but the improvements will constitute a lien on the estate.<sup>4</sup> For it has been [*487] *well said; Jure naturæ æquum est, neminem cum alterius detrimento et injuriâ fieri locupletiores.<sup>5</sup> A fortiori, this doctrine will apply to cases, where the parties stand in a fiduciary relation to each other; as where an agent stands by, and without notice of his title, suffers his principal to spend money in improvements upon the agent's estate.<sup>6</sup>

§ 1238. In all cases of this sort, however, the doctrine proceeds upon the ground, either that there is some fraud, or that the aid of a Court of Equity is required; for if a party can recover the estate at law, a

Court of Equity will not, unless there is some fraud, relieve a purchaser, or bonâ fide possessor, on account of money laid out in repairs and improvements.<sup>1</sup>

1239. The Civil law seems to have proceeded upon a far broader principle of natural justice. For, by that law, any bonâ fide possessor, as for instance a creditor, who had laid out money in preserving, repairing, or substantially improving an estate, was allowed a privilege or lien for such meliorations. Creditor, qui ob restitutionem ædificiorum crediderit, in pecuniam, quam crediderit, privilegium exigendi habebit.<sup>2</sup> Pignus insulæ, creditori datum, qui pecuniam ob restitutionem ædificii exstruendi mutuam dedit, ad eum quoque pertinebit, qui redemptori, domino mandante, nummos ministravit.<sup>3</sup> Indeed, Domat lays it down, as a general doctrine, that those, whose money has been laid out on improvements of an estate, such as making a plantation, or erecting buildings upon it, or augmenting the apartments of a house, or for other like causes, have, by the Civil Law, a privilege upon *those im- [*488]provements, as upon a purchase with their own money.<sup>4</sup>

§ 1240. In the first place, in respect to repairs, improvements, and disbursements upon personal property. Here, the Civil Law gave a privilege or lien upon the thing in favor of all artificers and other persons, who had laid out their money in such meliorations. Thus, it is said ; Quod quis navis fabricandæ,

§ 1241. The like privilege or lien does not exist in English Jurisprudence in respect to domestic ships.<sup>2</sup> But in America it has been held to exist in regard to foreign ships, repaired in home ports, and also in regard to domestic ships repaired in foreign ports, in favor of artificers and material men.<sup>3</sup> And a master of a ship, who has paid for such repairs, is substituted in point of claim to the rights of such artificers and material men. He has also by our law a lien on the freight for his disbursements on the voyage,<sup>4</sup> although the lien has been recently denied in England.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>5</sup> In the case of Hussey v. Christie, (9 East, R. 426,) the Court of King's Bench decided, that the master has no such lien on the freight. Lord Eldon seems to have entertained a different opinion in Hussey v. Christie, 13 Ves. 594; Ex parte Hallet, 3 Ves. & B. 135; S. C. 19 Ves. 474. So did Lord Northington in Ex parte Cheesman, 2 Eden, 181. In the case of Smith v. Plummer, 1 Barn. & Ald. 575, the Court of King's Bench held, that the master had no lien, even on the freight, for his disbursements on the voyage on account of the ship. That doctrine has not been adopted in America, and seems not quite reconcilable with prior decisions. See also Richardson v. Campbell, 5 Barn. & Ald. 203, note (a).

1242. Upon another point, also, some diversity of judgment has been expressed; and that is, how far as between partowners a lien exists on the ship itself for any expenses incurred by one or more of them beyond their shares in building, repairing, or fitting out the ship upon a joint voyage. In respect to the proceeds of the joint adventure on the voyage, no doubt seems to be entertained, that they are liable to the disbursements and charges of the outfit, in the nature of a lien, and therefore, that no partowner can take any portion of the profits, until after such expenditures are paid and deducted. In this respect the partowners are treated as partners in the joint adventure.<sup>1</sup> But the point, whether the ship itself is liable for such expenditures, as constituting a lien on it, turns upon somewhat different considerations. Lord Hardwicke held, that the ship was so liable; and that the partowners of a ship, although tenants in common, and not jointenants, have a right, notwithstanding, to consider the chattel as used in partnership, and liable, as partnership effects, to pay all debts whatever, to which any of them are liable on account of the ship.<sup>2</sup> Lord Eldon has expressed a directly *contrary opinion; [*490] and has held the ship not to be liable for such expenditures.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>3</sup> Ex parte Young, 2 Ves. & B. 242; Ex parte Harrison, 2 Rose, Cas. 76, 78.—Mr. Abbott, in his treatise on Shipping, expressed doubts as to the correctness of Lord Hardwicke's judgment. Lord Eldon, in Ex parte Young, 2 Ves. & Beam. 242, adopted Mr. Abbott's doubts; and the remarks of the latter, having been omitted in the last English edition, I take the liberty to restore them. They are as follows: "It seems to have been considered, that partowners might have a lien on each other's shares of a ship, as partners in trade have on each other's shares of their merchandise. But I do not find this point to have been ever

§ 1243. Another species of tacit or implied trust, or perhaps, strictly speaking, of tacit or implied pledge or lien, is that of each partner in and upon the partnership property, whether it consists of lands, [*491] *or stock, or chattels, or debts, as his indemnity against the joint debts, as well as his security for the ultimate balance due to him for his own share of the partnership effects.<sup>1</sup> We have already had occasion to allude to this sort of lien, in considering joint purchases in the name of one partner; and it is only necessary here to refer to it in this more general form.<sup>2</sup>

decided; and there is a material difference between the two cases. Partners are, at law, jointenants of their merchandise. One may dispose of the whole property. But partowners are tenants in common of a ship. One cannot sell the share of another. And, if this general lien exists, it must prevail against a purchaser, even without notice; which does not seem consistent with the nature of the interest of a tenant in common. It is true, indeed, that as long as the ship continues to be employed by the same persons, no one of them can be entitled to partake of the profits, until all, that is due in respect to the part, he holds in the ship, has been discharged. But as one partowner cannot compel another to sell the ship, there does not appear to be any mode, by which he can enforce against the other's share of the ship in specie the payment of his part of the expenses." In Mumford v. Nicoll, (4 John. Ch. R. 522,) Mr. Chancellor Kent acted upon the authority of the case, Ex parte Young, in opposition to the case of Doddington v. Hallett. But his decree was overturned by the Court of Appeals, in 20 John. R. 611, where the majority of the judges, who delivered their opinions, seemed inclined to support the opinion of Lord Hardwicke. And in the case before them, which was somewhat special in its circumstances, where the parties were partowners, and engaged in a partnership adventure, in which the ship was eventually sold, and one of the partowners got possession of the proceeds, the court held him entitled to retain for outfits, repairs, and expenses incurred by him for the voyage, but not for a general balance due on former voyages and adventures.

§ 1244. Another class of implied liens or trusts arises, where property is conveyed inter vivos, or is bequeathed or devised by last will and testament, subject to a charge for the payment of debts, or to other charges in favor of third persons.<sup>1</sup> In such cases, although the charge is treated, as between the immediate parties to the original instrument, as an express trust in the property which may be enforced by such parties or their proper representatives; yet, as between the trustee and the cestuis que trust, who are to take the benefits of the instrument, it constitutes an implied or constructive trust only; a trust, raised by Courts of Equity in their favor, as an interest in rem, capable of being enforced by them directly by a suit brought in their own names and right. Thus, for example, if a devise is made of real estate, charged with the payment of debts generally, it may be enforced by any one or more creditors against the devisee, although there is no privity of contract between him and them.<sup>2</sup>

*§ 1245. There is also, a distinction between [*492] a devise of an estate in trust to pay debts and other charges, and a devise of an estate charged with, or subject to debts or other charges. In the former case, the devise is construed to be a mere trust to pay the debts or other charges, giving no beneficial interest to the devisee, but holding him, after the debts and charges are paid, a mere trustee for the heir, as to the residue. In the latter case, the devise is construed to convey the whole beneficial interest to the devisee, subject only to the payment of the debts or other charges. The distinction may seem nice; but it is clearly established as a matter of intention.<sup>1</sup>

[*493] *§ 1246. Charges of the nature, which we are now considering, are often created by the express and positive declarations of deeds and wills; but they not infrequently also arise by implication from general forms of expression used in such instruments. Thus, in cases of wills, a testator often devises his estate "after payment of his debts;" or "his debts being first paid;" or he begins by directing "that all his debts shall be paid;" and afterwards he makes a full disposition of his estate. The question in such cases has often arisen, whether his debts are to be treated as a charge upon his real estate; or, in other words, whether he has given all his real estate to the devisees, subject to, and chargeable with, his debts, in aid of his personal estate. The settled doctrine now is, that the debts in all such cases, con-

Denison*, 1 Ves. & Beam. 272, stated this distinction in a very clear manner. "But I will here," said he, "point out the nicety of distinction, as it appears to me, upon which this court has gone. If I give to A. and his heirs all my real estate, charged with my debts, that is a devise to him for a particular purpose, but not for that purpose only. If the devise is upon trust to pay my debts, that is a devise for a particular purpose and nothing more; and the effect of those two modes admits just this difference. The former is a devise of an estate of inheritance for the purpose of giving the devisee the beneficial interest, subject to a particular purpose. The latter is a devise for a particular purpose with no intention to give him any beneficial interest. Where, therefore, the whole legal interest is given for the purpose of satisfying trusts expressed, and those trusts do not in their execution exhaust the whole, so much of the beneficial interest, as is not exhausted, belongs to the heir. But, where the whole legal interest is given for a particular purpose, with an intention to give to the devisee of the legal estate the beneficial interest, if the whole is not exhausted by that particular purpose, the surplus goes to the devisee; as it is intended to be given to him."

stitute, by implication, a charge on the real estate;<sup>1</sup> for whether the direction be in the introduction or in any other part of the will, that all the debts of the testator shall be paid, or the devise be of his real estate after the payment of all his debts, it is deemed equally clear, that he intends, that all his debts shall be paid, which, in case of a deficiency of his personal assets, can be done only by charging his real estate. The testator is thus deemed to intend to perform an act of justice, before he does an act of generosity. This course of decision has undoubtedly been produced by a strong desire, on the part of Courts of Equity, to prevent gross injustice to creditors, and to compel debtors to do that, which is morally right and just ; or, as it has been expressively said, that men may not sin in their graves.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1247. The principal exceptions to this doctrine seem to be reducible to two heads ; first, where the testator, after generally directing his debts to be paid, (without charging any funds expressly,) has provided or

This last case was exceedingly strong. The testator by his will directed all his debts, legacies, and personal charges to be paid as soon as conveniently might be after his death ; afterwards he devoted a particular estate to the payment of his debts, legacies, and personal charges in aid of his personal estate ; and he decreed the residue of his estate in strict settlement. It was held, that the preliminary words charged all his real estate ; and that the subsequent words did not cut down the intent to the particular estate. But that all the real estate was liable, if the specific real estate would not pay all the debts, legacies and personal charges.

pointed out a specific fund for that purpose;<sup>1</sup> secondly, where the debts are directed to be paid by the executors, [*494] and no lands are devised to *them, to which by implication the debts could be attached.<sup>2</sup> Each of these exceptions proceeds upon the same ground of presumed intention in the testator. If the testator assigns a specific fund for the payment of his debts, that (naturally enough) is construed to exclude any intention to appropriate a more general fund for the same purpose; Expressio unius est exclusio alterius.<sup>3</sup> If the testator directs a particular person to pay, he is presumed, in the absence of all other circumstances, to intend him to pay out of the funds, with which he is entrusted, and not out of other funds, over which he has no control. If the executor is pointed out, as the person to pay, that excludes the presumption, that other persons, not named, are required to pay.<sup>4</sup> The distinction seems very nice ; but it is clear in theory, however difficult it may be in its application to particular cases.

[*496] self a *debtor by his covenant. <sup>1</sup> Lechmere v. Charlton, 15 Ves. 197, 198; McLearn v. McClellan, 10 Peters, R. 625; Ante, § 1003; 1 Madd. Ch. Pr. 397; There are many other cases, in which, although the party covenants to pay money, the land is treated as the primary fund, to be applied to discharge the debt. Some of these cases have already been mentioned under the head of marshalling assets in the first volume of this work. Ante, § 574, § 575, § 576. A curious question arose in the case of McLearn v. McClellan, 10 Peters, R. 625. There, A., had purchased a plantation, on which he put slaves, and paid part of the purchase-money in his lifetime, and gave a judgment for the residue. He then died, leaving his son B. his devisee of the land and slaves. B. in order to obtain possession of the land mortgaged, gave his own bond, secured by a mortgage on the land and slaves, for the remaining unpaid part of the judgment. B., afterwards died leaving a part of the debt unsatisfied; and afterwards the mortgage was foreclosed, and the debt paid by a sale of the lands decreed on the foreclosure. The next of kin of A. were aliens, capable of taking his personal estate, but incapable of taking lands; and the latter, therefore descended to other persons, who were citizens. One question was, whether under all the circumstances the unpaid purchase-money ought to be borne out of the personal estate, or out of the real estate of B. The heirs of the real estate insisted, that it ought to be paid out of the personal estate, and so they were entitled to come on the personal estate for the amount, for which the land was sold. The Court held that it ought to be apportioned on both funds. Mr. Justice McLean, in delivering the opinion of the Court, said;—“The important question must now be considered, how this mortgage debt shall be discharged. Shall it be paid out of the real estate, or out of the personal, or out of both? That the land should not be wholly exempt from this incumbrance, is clear by every rule of equity, which applies to cases of this description. In addition to the consideration, that the mortgage binds the land, the fact, that a considerable part of the debt was incurred for its purchase, cannot be wholly disregarded. Nor would it comport with the principles of equity to make the whole debt a charge upon the land, to the exemption of the personal property; as the lien of the mortgage covers the personal as well as the real property, and as at least a part of the debt was contracted on other accounts than the purchase of the land. The rights of the foreign heirs, under the laws of Georgia, are to be regarded equally as those of the domestic heirs. Each have interests in the property of the deceased, which are alike entitled to the consideration and protection of a Court of chancery. Suppose James H. M'Learn had died leaving a will, by which he devised different tracts of land to different persons capable of taking by devise, and the entire real estate was incumbered by a mortgage, or other lien, which, after the will took effect, had been paid by sale of one of the tracts of land. Could a court of chancery hesitate, in such a case, to require a contribution from the devisees, not affected by the sale, so as to make the lien a charge upon all the land? The plainest dictates of justice would require this, whether regard be had to the rights of the devisees, or to the intention of the testator. And is not the case put analogous to the one under consideration? By the act of the elder M'Learn, his property, both real and personal, was incumbered. The heirs, both foreign and domestic, of the younger M'Learn, who take this property, take it charged with the continued incumbrance. That James M'Learn had a right, and was bound to continue this charge upon his property, no one will dispute. He might have left the debt, with the consent of the creditor, if there had been no prior lien, to be discharged out of his estate, as the law authorized; and in such case it would have been payable out of the personal estate. Or he might have made the debt a specific charge on his personal property, or on his real. But he did neither. He charged its payment, in pursuance of the judgment lien, on his property both personal and real. This lien, as between the distributees, fixes the rule, by which their rights must be decided. The domestic heirs cannot claim to receive the land free from the lien of the mortgage, nor can the foreign heirs claim the personal property exempt from it. In equity it would seem, that each description of heirs should contribute to the payment of the mortgage debt, in proportion to the fund received. This rule, while it would do justice to the parties, would give effect to the intention of the ancestor. That intention is clearly shown by the lien created on the property, and by the rules of equity such intention must be regarded. The decision of this case must rest upon familiar and well established principles in equity; and these principles will be shown by a reference to adjudicated cases. In the case of Pollexfen v. Moore, 3 Atk. 272, it appears, Moore, in his lifetime, agreed to purchase an estate from the plaintiff for 1200 pounds, but died before he

had paid the whole purchase-money. Moore, by will, after giving a legacy of 800 pounds to the defendant his sister, devises the estate purchased and all his personal estate to John Kemp, and makes him his executor. The executor commits a devastavit on the personal estate and dies, and the estate descends upon his son and heir at law. Pollexfen brought his bill against the representative of the real and personal estate of Moore and Kemp, to be paid the remainder of the purchase-money. Mrs. Moore, the sister and legatee of Thomas Moore, brings her cross bill, and prays, if the remainder of the purchase-money should be paid to Pollexfen out of the personal estate of Moore and Kemp, that she may stand in his place, and be considered as having a lien upon the purchased estate for her legacy of 800 pounds. And the lord chancellor said, "that the estate, which has descended from John Kemp, the executor of Moore, upon Bayle Kemp, comes to him liable to the same equity as it would have been against the father, who has misapplied the personal estate: and in order to relieve Mrs. Moore, I will direct Pollexfen to take his satisfaction upon the purchased estate, because he has an equitable lien both upon the real and personal estate, and will leave this last fund open, that Mrs. Moore, who can at most be considered only as a simple contract creditor, may have a chance of being paid out of the personal assets." This case shows, that in England the rule, which requires the personal property to be first applied in the payment of debts, is deviated from where the justice of the case and the rights of parties interested require it. Had the debt due to Pollexfen been directed to be paid out of the personal property, it would have left no part of that fund to pay the legacy of Mrs. Moore; and for this reason the debt was decreed to be paid out of the land. Now, if the mortgaged debt, in the present case, shall be directed to be paid out of the personal fund, it would defeat the foreign heirs, whose claim to this property under the law of Georgia, cannot be less strong than a bequest. In 3 Johns. Ch. Rep. 252, it is laid down, as between the representatives of the real and personal estate, that the land is the primary fund to pay off a mortgage. And in 2 Bro. 57, lord Kenyon, as master of the rolls, laid down the same rule: that where an estate descends, or comes to one subject to a mortgage; although the mortgage be afterwards assigned, and the party enter into a covenant to pay the money borrowed; yet that shall not bind his personal estate. There is no doctrine better established than that the purchase of land, subject to a mortgage debt, does not make the debt personal; and on the question being raised, such debt has been uniformly charged on the land. And this principle is not changed where additional security has been given. In the case of Evelyn v. Evelyn, 2 P. Wms. 659; where A mortgaged the land for 1500 pounds, his son B covenanted with the

assignee of the mortgage to pay the money. He succeeded to the premises after the death of his father, and died intestate. The question was, whether his personal estate, under the covenant, should be applied in payment of the mortgage; and it was decided, that the land should be charged, and the covenant was only considered as additional security. In the case of Waring v. Ward, 7 Ves. 334, Lord Eldon says: "the principle, upon which the personal estate is first liable in general cases, is, that the contract primarily is a personal contract, the personal estate receiving the benefit: and, being primarily a personal contract, the land is bound only in aid of the personal obligation to fulfil that personal contract." It has long been settled, therefore, that upon a loan of money, the party meaning to mortgage, in aid of the bond, covenant or simple contract debt, if there is neither bond nor covenant, his personal estate, if he dies, must pay the debt for the benefit of the heir. But suppose a second descent cast; and the question arises, the personal estate of the son, and his real estate having descended to the grandson: then the personal estate of the son shall not pay it, as it never was the personal contract of the son. And this is the well established rule on this subject. If the contract be personal, although a mortgage be given, the mortgage is considered in aid of the personal contract; and, on the decease of the mortgagor, his personal estate will be considered the primary fund, because the contract was personal. But if the estate descend to the grandson of the mortgagor, then the charge would be upon the land, as the debt was not the personal debt of the immediate ancestor. And so, if the contract was in regard to the realty, the debt is a charge on the land. It is in this way, that a court of chancery, by looking at the origin of the debt, is enabled to fix the rule between distributees. In the case under consideration, the mortgage was given by James H. M'Learn, but was not given to secure a debt created by him. The mortgage merely changed the security, but did not affect the extent of the judgment lien. And this judgment was obtained chiefly for the purchase-money of the estate. In effect, the debt, for which the judgment was obtained against Archibald M'Learn, and for which the mortgage was given, constituted an equitable lien on the land; and had the mortgage covered only the land, it must have been considered the primary fund. The debt, for which the mortgage was given, was not the personal contract of James H. M'Learn, but the contract of his ancestor in the purchase of the estate. But if the contract was personal, and might have been a charge on the personal estate devised to James H. M'Learn, yet the character of the debt in this respect is changed in the hands of the present heirs. In the language of Lord Eldon, this debt cannot be a charge on the personalty, because it was not created by the personal contract of James H. M'Learn. This, under the authorities cited, would be the rule for the payment of the mortgage debt, if James H. M'Learn had not executed a mortgage

ner, in which his doctrine is laid down, whether the writ applied merely to repairs on houses and mills, or whether it extended also to repairs on other things, constituting real estate, or appurtenant thereto. But it seems clear, that it did not extend to improvements (not being repairs) made upon real estate generally; nor to any cases, where the repairs were made under an express or implied contract; for in the latter case contribution could be obtained in a common action founded on the contract.

§ 1236. But the doctrine of contribution in Equity is larger than it is at law; and, in many cases, repairs and [*485] improvements will be held to be, not merely *a personal charge, but a lien on the estate itself. Thus, for example, it has been held, that, if two or more persons make a joint purchase, and afterwards one of them lays out a considerable sum of money in repairs or improvements, and dies, this will be a lien on the land, and a trust for the representatives of him, who advanced it.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1237. In many cases of this sort, the doctrine may proceed upon the ground of some express or

R. 326,) it was said by Mr. Chief Justice Parker, in delivering the opinion of the court, that no action lies at the common law by one tenant in common, who has expended more than his share in repairing the common property, against the deficient tenants. But this seems not easily reconcilable with what is said in Doane v. Badger, 12 Mass. R. 70, 71. See Registrum Brev. 153, and Fitz. N. Brev. 127. There certainly may be a distinction between a right by action to compel repairs, and a right of contribution in invitum after repairs made.

Mr. Sugden, in his Treatise on Vendors, (ch. 15, § 1, p. 611, 7th edit. Id. vol. 2, ch. 15, § 1, p. 131, 132, 9th edit.) says; "It seems, that, where two or more persons purchase an estate, and one, for instance, pays all the implied agreement, as to the repairs and improvements, between the joint purchasers, and an implied lien following upon such an agreement.<sup>1</sup> But Courts of Equity have not confined the doctrine of compensation or lien for repairs and improvements to cases of agreement, or of joint purchases. They have extended it to other cases, where the party making the repairs and improvements has acted bonâ fide and innocently, and there has been a substantial benefit conferred on the owner ; so that, ex æquo et bono, he ought to pay for such benefit.<sup>2</sup> Thus, where a tenant for life under a will has gone on to finish im-

money, and the estate is conveyed to them both, the one, who paid the money, cannot call upon those, who paid no part of it, to repay him their shares of the purchase-money, or to convey their shares of the estate to him ; for, by payment of all the money, he gains neither a lien, nor a mortgage, because there is no contract for either. Nor can it be construed a resulting trust, as such a trust cannot arise at an after period ; and perhaps the only remedy he has, is to file a bill against them for a contribution. (See Wood v. Birch, and Wood v. Norman, Rolls, 7 and 8 March, 1804 ; the decree in which case does not, however, authorize the observation ; but the author conceives it to follow, from what fell from the Master of the Rolls at the hearing.) Whenever, therefore, two persons agree to purchase an estate, it should be stipulated in the agreement, that if, by the default of either of them, the other shall be compelled to pay the whole, or greater part of the purchase-money, the estate shall be conveyed to him, and he shall hold the entirety against the other and his heirs ; unless he or they shall, within a stated time, repay the sum advanced on their account, with interest in the mean time. But it has been held, that, if one of two jointenants of a lease renew at his own expense, and the other party reap the full benefit of it, the one advancing the money shall have a charge on the other moiety of the estate for a moiety of his advances on account of the fines, although such other moiety of the estate be in strict settlement at the time of the renewal. The case was considered to fall within the principle, upon which mortgagees, who renew leasehold interests, have been decreed entitled to charge the amount upon the lands. (Hamilton v. Denny, 1 Ball & Beat. 199.)"

provements, permanently beneficial to an estate, which were begun by the testator, Courts of Equity have deemed the expenditure a charge, for which the tenant is entitled to a lien.<sup>1</sup> So, where a party, lawfully in possession under a defective title, has made permanent improvements, if relief is asked in Equity by the true owner, he will be compelled to allow for such improvements.<sup>2</sup> So money, bonâ fide laid out in improvements on an estate by one joint owner, will be allowed on a bill by the other, if he ask for a partition.<sup>3</sup> So, if the true owner stands by, and suffers improvements to be made on an estate without notice of his title, he will not be permitted in Equity to enrich himself by the loss of another; but the improvements will constitute a lien on the estate.<sup>4</sup> For it has been [*487] *well said; Jure naturæ æquum est, neminem cum alterius detrimento et injuriâ fieri locupletiores.<sup>5</sup> A fortiori, this doctrine will apply to cases, where the parties stand in a fiduciary relation to each other; as where an agent stands by, and without notice of his title, suffers his principal to spend money in improvements upon the agent's estate.<sup>6</sup>

§ 1238. In all cases of this sort, however, the doctrine proceeds upon the ground, either that there is some fraud, or that the aid of a Court of Equity is required; for if a party can recover the estate at law, a

Court of Equity will not, unless there is some fraud, relieve a purchaser, or bonâ fide possessor, on account of money laid out in repairs and improvements.<sup>1</sup>

1239. The Civil law seems to have proceeded upon a far broader principle of natural justice. For, by that law, any bonâ fide possessor, as for instance a creditor, who had laid out money in preserving, repairing, or substantially improving an estate, was allowed a privilege or lien for such meliorations. Creditor, qui ob restitutionem ædificiorum crediderit, in pecuniam, quam crediderit, privilegium exigendi habebit.<sup>2</sup> Pignus insulæ, creditori datum, qui pecuniam ob restitutionem ædificii exstruendi mutuam dedit, ad eum quoque pertinebit, qui redemptori, domino mandante, nummos ministravit.<sup>3</sup> Indeed, Domat lays it down, as a general doctrine, that those, whose money has been laid out on improvements of an estate, such as making a plantation, or erecting buildings upon it, or augmenting the apartments of a house, or for other like causes, have, by the Civil Law, a privilege upon *those im- [*488]provements, as upon a purchase with their own money.<sup>4</sup>

The like privilege or lien does not exist in English Jurisprudence in respect to domestic ships.<sup>2</sup> But in America it has been held to exist in regard to foreign ships, repaired in home ports, and also in regard to domestic ships repaired in foreign ports, in favor of artificers and material men.<sup>3</sup> And a master of a ship, who has paid for such repairs, is substituted in point of claim to the rights of such artificers and material men. He has also by our law a lien on the freight for his disbursements on the voyage,<sup>4</sup> although the lien has been recently denied in England.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>5</sup> In the case of Hussey v. Christie, (9 East, R. 426,) the Court of King's Bench decided, that the master has no such lien on the freight. Lord Eldon seems to have entertained a different opinion in Hussey v. Christie, 13 Ves. 594; Ex parte Hallet, 3 Ves. & B. 135; S. C. 19 Ves. 474. So did Lord Northington in Ex parte Cheesman, 2 Eden, 181. In the case of Smith v. Plummer, 1 Barn. & Ald. 575, the Court of King's Bench held, that the master had no lien, even on the freight, for his disbursements on the voyage on account of the ship. That doctrine has not been adopted in America, and seems not quite reconcilable with prior decisions. See also Richardson v. Campbell, 5 Barn. & Ald. 203, note (a).

1242. Upon another point, also, some diversity of judgment has been expressed; and that is, how far as between partowners a lien exists on the ship itself for any expenses incurred by one or more of them beyond their shares in building, repairing, or fitting out the ship upon a joint voyage. In respect to the proceeds of the joint adventure on the voyage, no doubt seems to be entertained, that they are liable to the disbursements and charges of the outfit, in the nature of a lien, and therefore, that no partowner can take any portion of the profits, until after such expenditures are paid and deducted. In this respect the partowners are treated as partners in the joint adventure.<sup>1</sup> But the point, whether the ship itself is liable for such expenditures, as constituting a lien on it, turns upon somewhat different considerations. Lord Hardwicke held, that the ship was so liable; and that the partowners of a ship, although tenants in common, and not jointenants, have a right, notwithstanding, to consider the chattel as used in partnership, and liable, as partnership effects, to pay all debts whatever, to which any of them are liable on account of the ship.<sup>2</sup> Lord Eldon has expressed a directly *contrary opinion; [*490] and has held the ship not to be liable for such expenditures.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>3</sup> Ex parte Young, 2 Ves. & B. 242; Ex parte Harrison, 2 Rose, Cas. 76, 78.—Mr. Abbott, in his treatise on Shipping, expressed doubts as to the correctness of Lord Hardwicke's judgment. Lord Eldon, in Ex parte Young, 2 Ves. & Beam. 242, adopted Mr. Abbott's doubts; and the remarks of the latter, having been omitted in the last English edition, I take the liberty to restore them. They are as follows: "It seems to have been considered, that partowners might have a lien on each other's shares of a ship, as partners in trade have on each other's shares of their merchandise. But I do not find this point to have been ever

§ 1243. Another species of tacit or implied trust, or perhaps, strictly speaking, of tacit or implied pledge or lien, is that of each partner in and upon the partnership property, whether it consists of lands, [*491] *or stock, or chattels, or debts, as his indemnity against the joint debts, as well as his security for the ultimate balance due to him for his own share of the partnership effects.<sup>1</sup> We have already had occasion to allude to this sort of lien, in considering joint purchases in the name of one partner; and it is only necessary here to refer to it in this more general form.<sup>2</sup>

decided; and there is a material difference between the two cases. Partners are, at law, jointenants of their merchandise. One may dispose of the whole property. But partowners are tenants in common of a ship. One cannot sell the share of another. And, if this general lien exists, it must prevail against a purchaser, even without notice; which does not seem consistent with the nature of the interest of a tenant in common. It is true, indeed, that as long as the ship continues to be employed by the same persons, no one of them can be entitled to partake of the profits, until all, that is due in respect to the part, he holds in the ship, has been discharged. But as one partowner cannot compel another to sell the ship, there does not appear to be any mode, by which he can enforce against the other's share of the ship in specie the payment of his part of the expenses." In Mumford v. Nicoll, (4 John. Ch. R. 522,) Mr. Chancellor Kent acted upon the authority of the case, Ex parte Young, in opposition to the case of Doddington v. Hallett. But his decree was overturned by the Court of Appeals, in 20 John. R. 611, where the majority of the judges, who delivered their opinions, seemed inclined to support the opinion of Lord Hardwicke. And in the case before them, which was somewhat special in its circumstances, where the parties were partowners, and engaged in a partnership adventure, in which the ship was eventually sold, and one of the partowners got possession of the proceeds, the court held him entitled to retain for outfits, repairs, and expenses incurred by him for the voyage, but not for a general balance due on former voyages and adventures.

§ 1244. Another class of implied liens or trusts arises, where property is conveyed inter vivos, or is bequeathed or devised by last will and testament, subject to a charge for the payment of debts, or to other charges in favor of third persons.<sup>1</sup> In such cases, although the charge is treated, as between the immediate parties to the original instrument, as an express trust in the property which may be enforced by such parties or their proper representatives; yet, as between the trustee and the cestuis que trust, who are to take the benefits of the instrument, it constitutes an implied or constructive trust only; a trust, raised by Courts of Equity in their favor, as an interest in rem, capable of being enforced by them directly by a suit brought in their own names and right. Thus, for example, if a devise is made of real estate, charged with the payment of debts generally, it may be enforced by any one or more creditors against the devisee, although there is no privity of contract between him and them.<sup>2</sup>

*§ 1245. There is also, a distinction between [*492] a devise of an estate in trust to pay debts and other charges, and a devise of an estate charged with, or subject to debts or other charges. In the former case, the devise is construed to be a mere trust to pay the debts or other charges, giving no beneficial interest to the devisee, but holding him, after the debts and charges are paid, a mere trustee for the heir, as to the residue. In the latter case, the devise is construed to convey the whole beneficial interest to the devisee, subject only to the payment of the debts or other charges. The distinction may seem nice; but it is clearly established as a matter of intention.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> King v. Denison, 1 Ves. & Beam. 273; Hill v. Bishop of London, 1 Atk. R. 620; Craig v. Leslie, 3 Wheat. R. 582, 583; 2 Madd. Ch. Pr. 112.—Lord Eldon, in King v. Denison, 1 Ves. & Beam. 272, stated this distinction in a very clear manner. "But I will here," said he, "point out the nicety of distinction, as it appears to me, upon which this court has gone. If I give to A. and his heirs all my real estate, charged with my debts, that is a devise to him for a particular purpose, but not for that purpose only. If the devise is upon trust to pay my debts, that is a devise for a particular purpose and nothing more; and the effect of those two modes admits just this difference. The former is a devise of an estate of inheritance for the purpose of giving the devisee the beneficial interest, subject to a particular purpose. The latter is a devise for a particular purpose with no intention to give him any beneficial interest. Where, therefore, the whole legal interest is given for the purpose of satisfying trusts expressed, and those trusts do not in their execution exhaust the whole, so much of the beneficial interest, as is not exhausted, belongs to the heir. But, where the whole legal interest is given for a particular purpose, with an intention to give to the devisee of the legal estate the beneficial interest, if the whole is not exhausted by that particular purpose, the surplus goes to the devisee; as it is intended to be given to him."

stitute, by implication, a charge on the real estate;<sup>1</sup> for whether the direction be in the introduction or in any other part of the will, that all the debts of the testator shall be paid, or the devise be of his real estate after the payment of all his debts, it is deemed equally clear, that he intends, that all his debts shall be paid, which, in case of a deficiency of his personal assets, can be done only by charging his real estate. The testator is thus deemed to intend to perform an act of justice, before he does an act of generosity. This course of decision has undoubtedly been produced by a strong desire, on the part of Courts of Equity, to prevent gross injustice to creditors, and to compel debtors to do that, which is morally right and just ; or, as it has been expressively said, that men may not sin in their graves.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1247. The principal exceptions to this doctrine seem to be reducible to two heads ; first, where the testator, after generally directing his debts to be paid, (without charging any funds expressly,) has provided or

This last case was exceedingly strong. The testator by his will directed all his debts, legacies, and personal charges to be paid as soon as conveniently might be after his death ; afterwards he devoted a particular estate to the payment of his debts, legacies, and personal charges in aid of his personal estate ; and he decreed the residue of his estate in strict settlement. It was held, that the preliminary words charged all his real estate ; and that the subsequent words did not cut down the intent to the particular estate. But that all the real estate was liable, if the specific real estate would not pay all the debts, legacies and personal charges.

pointed out a specific fund for that purpose;<sup>1</sup> secondly, where the debts are directed to be paid by the executors, [*494] and no lands are devised to *them, to which by implication the debts could be attached.<sup>2</sup> Each of these exceptions proceeds upon the same ground of presumed intention in the testator. If the testator assigns a specific fund for the payment of his debts, that (naturally enough) is construed to exclude any intention to appropriate a more general fund for the same purpose; Expressio unius est exclusio alterius.<sup>3</sup> If the testator directs a particular person to pay, he is presumed, in the absence of all other circumstances, to intend him to pay out of the funds, with which he is entrusted, and not out of other funds, over which he has no control. If the executor is pointed out, as the person to pay, that excludes the presumption, that other persons, not named, are required to pay.<sup>4</sup> The distinction seems very nice ; but it is clear in theory, however difficult it may be in its application to particular cases.

Here, the settler certainly makes him- [*496] self a *debtor by his covenant. <sup>1</sup> Lechmere v. Charlton, 15 Ves. 197, 198; McLearn v. McClellan, 10 Peters, R. 625; Ante, § 1003; 1 Madd. Ch. Pr. 397; There are many other cases, in which, although the party covenants to pay money, the land is treated as the primary fund, to be applied to discharge the debt. Some of these cases have already been mentioned under the head of marshalling assets in the first volume of this work. Ante, § 574, § 575, § 576. A curious question arose in the case of McLearn v. McClellan, 10 Peters, R. 625. There, A., had purchased a plantation, on which he put slaves, and paid part of the purchase-money in his lifetime, and gave a judgment for the residue. He then died, leaving his son B. his devisee of the land and slaves. B. in order to obtain possession of the land mortgaged, gave his own bond, secured by a mortgage on the land and slaves, for the remaining unpaid part of the judgment. B., afterwards died leaving a part of the debt unsatisfied; and afterwards the mortgage was foreclosed, and the debt paid by a sale of the lands decreed on the foreclosure. The next of kin of A. were aliens, capable of taking his personal estate, but incapable of taking lands; and the latter, therefore descended to other persons, who were citizens. One question was, whether under all the circumstances the unpaid purchase-money ought to be borne out of the personal estate, or out of the real estate of B. The heirs of the real estate insisted, that it ought to be paid out of the personal estate, and so they were entitled to come on the personal estate for the amount, for which the land was sold. The Court held that it ought to be apportioned on both funds. Mr. Justice McLean, in delivering the opinion of the Court, said;—“The important question must now be considered, how this mortgage debt shall be discharged. Shall it be paid out of the real estate, or out of the personal, or out of both? That the land should not be wholly exempt from this incumbrance, is clear by every rule of equity, which applies to cases of this description. In addition to the consideration, that the mortgage binds the land, the fact, that a considerable part of the debt was incurred for its purchase, cannot be wholly disregarded. Nor would it comport with the principles of equity to make the whole debt a charge upon the land, to the exemption of the personal property; as the lien of the mortgage covers the personal as well as the real property, and as at least a part of the debt was contracted on other accounts than the purchase of the land. The rights of the foreign heirs, under the laws of Georgia, are to be regarded equally as those of the domestic heirs. Each have interests in the property of the deceased, which are alike entitled to the consideration and protection of a Court of chancery. Suppose James H. M'Learn had died leaving a will, by which he devised different tracts of land to different persons capable of taking by devise, and the entire real estate was incumbered by a mortgage, or other lien, which, after the will took effect, had been paid by sale of one of the tracts of land. Could a court of chancery hesitate, in such a case, to require a contribution from the devisees, not affected by the sale, so as to make the lien a charge upon all the land? The plainest dictates of justice would require this, whether regard be had to the rights of the devisees, or to the intention of the testator. And is not the case put analogous to the one under consideration? By the act of the elder M'Learn, his property, both real and personal, was incumbered. The heirs, both foreign and domestic, of the younger M'Learn, who take this property, take it charged with the continued incumbrance. That James M'Learn had a right, and was bound to continue this charge upon his property, no one will dispute. He might have left the debt, with the consent of the creditor, if there had been no prior lien, to be discharged out of his estate, as the law authorized; and in such case it would have been payable out of the personal estate. Or he might have made the debt a specific charge on his personal property, or on his real. But he did neither. He charged its payment, in pursuance of the judgment lien, on his property both personal and real. This lien, as between the distributees, fixes the rule, by which their rights must be decided. The domestic heirs cannot claim to receive the land free from the lien of the mortgage, nor can the foreign heirs claim the personal property exempt from it. In equity it would seem, that each description of heirs should contribute to the payment of the mortgage debt, in proportion to the fund received. This rule, while it would do justice to the parties, would give effect to the intention of the ancestor. That intention is clearly shown by the lien created on the property, and by the rules of equity such intention must be regarded. The decision of this case must rest upon familiar and well established principles in equity; and these principles will be shown by a reference to adjudicated cases. In the case of Pollexfen v. Moore, 3 Atk. 272, it appears, Moore, in his lifetime, agreed to purchase an estate from the plaintiff for 1200 pounds, but died before he

had paid the whole purchase-money. Moore, by will, after giving a legacy of 800 pounds to the defendant his sister, devises the estate purchased and all his personal estate to John Kemp, and makes him his executor. The executor commits a devastavit on the personal estate and dies, and the estate descends upon his son and heir at law. Pollexfen brought his bill against the representative of the real and personal estate of Moore and Kemp, to be paid the remainder of the purchase-money. Mrs. Moore, the sister and legatee of Thomas Moore, brings her cross bill, and prays, if the remainder of the purchase-money should be paid to Pollexfen out of the personal estate of Moore and Kemp, that she may stand in his place, and be considered as having a lien upon the purchased estate for her legacy of 800 pounds. And the lord chancellor said, "that the estate, which has descended from John Kemp, the executor of Moore, upon Bayle Kemp, comes to him liable to the same equity as it would have been against the father, who has misapplied the personal estate: and in order to relieve Mrs. Moore, I will direct Pollexfen to take his satisfaction upon the purchased estate, because he has an equitable lien both upon the real and personal estate, and will leave this last fund open, that Mrs. Moore, who can at most be considered only as a simple contract creditor, may have a chance of being paid out of the personal assets." This case shows, that in England the rule, which requires the personal property to be first applied in the payment of debts, is deviated from where the justice of the case and the rights of parties interested require it. Had the debt due to Pollexfen been directed to be paid out of the personal property, it would have left no part of that fund to pay the legacy of Mrs. Moore; and for this reason the debt was decreed to be paid out of the land. Now, if the mortgaged debt, in the present case, shall be directed to be paid out of the personal fund, it would defeat the foreign heirs, whose claim to this property under the law of Georgia, cannot be less strong than a bequest. In 3 Johns. Ch. Rep. 252, it is laid down, as between the representatives of the real and personal estate, that the land is the primary fund to pay off a mortgage. And in 2 Bro. 57, lord Kenyon, as master of the rolls, laid down the same rule: that where an estate descends, or comes to one subject to a mortgage; although the mortgage be afterwards assigned, and the party enter into a covenant to pay the money borrowed; yet that shall not bind his personal estate. There is no doctrine better established than that the purchase of land, subject to a mortgage debt, does not make the debt personal; and on the question being raised, such debt has been uniformly charged on the land. And this principle is not changed where additional security has been given. In the case of Evelyn v. Evelyn, 2 P. Wms. 659; where A mortgaged the land for 1500 pounds, his son B covenanted with the

assignee of the mortgage to pay the money. He succeeded to the premises after the death of his father, and died intestate. The question was, whether his personal estate, under the covenant, should be applied in payment of the mortgage; and it was decided, that the land should be charged, and the covenant was only considered as additional security. In the case of Waring v. Ward, 7 Ves. 334, Lord Eldon says: "the principle, upon which the personal estate is first liable in general cases, is, that the contract primarily is a personal contract, the personal estate receiving the benefit: and, being primarily a personal contract, the land is bound only in aid of the personal obligation to fulfil that personal contract." It has long been settled, therefore, that upon a loan of money, the party meaning to mortgage, in aid of the bond, covenant or simple contract debt, if there is neither bond nor covenant, his personal estate, if he dies, must pay the debt for the benefit of the heir. But suppose a second descent cast; and the question arises, the personal estate of the son, and his real estate having descended to the grandson: then the personal estate of the son shall not pay it, as it never was the personal contract of the son. And this is the well established rule on this subject. If the contract be personal, although a mortgage be given, the mortgage is considered in aid of the personal contract; and, on the decease of the mortgagor, his personal estate will be considered the primary fund, because the contract was personal. But if the estate descend to the grandson of the mortgagor, then the charge would be upon the land, as the debt was not the personal debt of the immediate ancestor. And so, if the contract was in regard to the realty, the debt is a charge on the land. It is in this way, that a court of chancery, by looking at the origin of the debt, is enabled to fix the rule between distributees. In the case under consideration, the mortgage was given by James H. M'Learn, but was not given to secure a debt created by him. The mortgage merely changed the security, but did not affect the extent of the judgment lien. And this judgment was obtained chiefly for the purchase-money of the estate. In effect, the debt, for which the judgment was obtained against Archibald M'Learn, and for which the mortgage was given, constituted an equitable lien on the land; and had the mortgage covered only the land, it must have been considered the primary fund. The debt, for which the mortgage was given, was not the personal contract of James H. M'Learn, but the contract of his ancestor in the purchase of the estate. But if the contract was personal, and might have been a charge on the personal estate devised to James H. M'Learn, yet the character of the debt in this respect is changed in the hands of the present heirs. In the language of Lord Eldon, this debt cannot be a charge on the personalty, because it was not created by the personal contract of James H. M'Learn. This, under the authorities cited, would be the rule for the payment of the mortgage debt, if James H. M'Learn had not executed a mortgage

on the personal as well as the real property, which, as devisee, he received from his father.—This mortgage on the personal property cannot be considered in the light of additional security to the lien, which before existed. If it could be considered in this light, the land would still be the primary fund, and the personal mortgage as surety or auxiliary to the land. But this mortgage can in no respect be considered as additional security. It might have been so considered in reference to the equitable lien of the vendor for the purchase-money, as such lien was limited to the land; but the lien of the judgment obtained against the ancestor of James H. M'Learn, and for which the mortgage was substituted, extended, as before remarked, to the personal as well as real estate of the defendant. The debt then, for which the mortgage was given, did not arise from the personal contract of James H. M'Learn, but by the contract of his ancestor; and the mortgage was given in discharge of the judgment. This created no new lien upon the personal property. It came to James H. M'Learn under the will of his father, subject to the lien of the judgment. The mortgage then did not and was not intended to create any new charge upon the personalty; but to continue, in a different form, that which already existed. In this view the charge on the personal estate can no more be disregarded than the charge upon the real; and in this respect this case differs from the cases referred to. The charge on both funds under the mortgage may be compared to a will devising the funds to the respective heirs now before the court, as the statute provides; and leaving the debts as a charge upon his real and personal property. Can any doubt, that such a bequest would be considered by a court of chancery as a charge upon both funds? Now, although James H. M'Learn has made no will, as in the supposed case, yet he gave a mortgage to continue the charge on the personal property which existed under the judgment; and the law of Georgia fixes the rule of descent. This act of the ancestor, connected with the Georgia law of descent, gives as decided and clear a direction to the property, both real and personal under the mortgage, as if in his last will James H. M'Learn had so devised it. Both funds being charged with the mortgage debt must be applied to its payment, in proportion to their respective amounts. And as the property, both real and personal, has been converted into money, the proportionate part of each can be applied to this payment without difficulty." See also Berrington v. Evans, 3 Younge & Coll. 384, 392.

lished a lien upon real property, by what has been called a very subtle equity, where, perhaps, it would be difficult to maintain it in ordinary cases. Thus, where a man before marriage gave a bond to convey sufficient freehold or copyhold estates to raise £600 per annum for his intended wife in bar of dower; and the intended wife, by a memorandum subscribed to the bond, declared her free acceptance of the jointure in bar and satisfaction of dower; and the marriage took effect, and the husband died without having conveyed any such estates; it was decreed, that she should be deemed a specialty creditor, and entitled to be paid the arrears of her annuity out of his personal estate in the course of administration; and if that was not sufficient, then out of the real estates in the settlement, of which he was tenant in tail, provided such deficiencies did not exceed the amount of the dower, says, (1 Fonbl. Eq. B. 1, ch. 5, § 7, note d), that a covenant to settle or convey particular lands will not create at law a lien upon the land. But in Equity such a covenant, if for a valuable consideration, will be deemed a specific lien on the lands, and decreed against all persons claiming under the covenant, except purchasers for a valuable consideration, and without notice of such covenant. For which he cites Finch v. Earl of Winchelsea, 1 P. Will. 282; Freemoult v. Dedire, 1 P. Will. 429; Jackson v. Jackson, 4 Bro. Ch. R. 462, (which turned on the execution of a power,) and Coventry v. Coventry, 2 P. Will. 222; 1 Str. R. 596; Gilb. Eq. R. 160; S. C. at the end of Francis's Maxims in Equity, edit. 1739. He adds, in the next note, (2 Fonbl. Eq. B. 1, ch. 5, § 7, note e), that a general covenant to settle lands of a certain value, without mentioning any lands in particular, will not create a specific lien on any of the lands of the covenantor; and therefore cannot be specifically decreed in Equity. (Freemoult v. Dedire, 1 P. Will. 429.) But if the covenantor expressly declare the settlement to be in execution of his power over lands, though the particular land to be charged be not specified, Equity will ascertain them. For which he cites Coventry v. Coventry, ubi supra. This apparent exception proceeds upon the ground, that the power, being to be executed out of particular lands, is a specification, when executed, of the particular lands to be charged. But see ante, § 1131, p. 483, and note (1).

which she would have been entitled to thereout, in case she had not accepted the annuity for her life.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1250. Another class of implied trusts, which may be mentioned under this head, is that, which arises under contract, or otherwise, by operation of law from a claim, which may be directly enforced at law against one party, but to the due discharge of which another party is ultimately liable. In such a case a Court of Equity treats it as a trust by the party ultimately liable, which may be directly enforced in favor of the party ultimately entitled to the benefit of it. In other words, a Court of Equity will make the party immediately liable, who is, or may be at law or in Equity made ultimately liable. Thus, for example, if a chose in action, not negotiable at all, or not negotiable by the local law, except to create a legal right of action between the immediate debtor or indorser and his immediate indorsee or assignee, should be passed to a remote assignee or indorsee, the latter would be entitled in Equity directly to sue the party, who was ultimately or circuitously liable for the debt to the antecedent holder or creditor.<sup>2</sup> Upon the same ground, if a trust is created for the benefit of a party, who is to be the ultimate receiver of the money or other thing, which constitutes the subject matter of the trust, he may sustain a suit in Equity to have the money or other thing directly paid or delivered to himself;<sup>3</sup> for in such a case he is entitled to dispose of it as the absolute owner.

§ 1251. Another illustration of implied trusts may be found in the common case of a suit in Equity by a creditor of an estate, to recover his debt from legatees or distributees, who have received payment of their claims from the executor (acting by mistake, but bonâ fide and without fault) before a due discharge of all the debts. In such a case, the executor, who has so distributed the assets, may be sued at law by the creditor. But the legatees and distributees, although there was an original deficiency of assets, are not at law suable by the creditor. Yet he has a clear right in Equity in such a case, to follow the assets of the testator into their hands, as a trust fund for the payment of his debt. The legatees and distributees are in equity treated as trustees for this purpose; for they are not entitled to any thing, except the surplus of the assets, after all the debts are paid. Besides; they, in the case put, being ultimately responsible to pay the debt to the executor out of such assets, if the executor should be compelled to pay it to the creditor by a suit at law, may be made immediately liable to the creditor in Equity.<sup>1</sup> But the other is the more *broad [*499] and general ground, as the creditor may sometimes have a remedy, where the executor, if he has paid over the assets, might not have any against the legatees or distributees.<sup>2</sup> class of cases, where the stock and other property of private corporations is deemed a trust fund for the payment of the debts of the corporation ; so that the creditors have a lien or right of priority of payment on it, in preference to any of the stockholders in the corporation. Therefore, if a corporation is dissolved, the contracts of such corporation are not thereby deemed extinguished ; but they survive the dissolution of the corporation ; and the creditors may enforce their claims against any property belonging to the corporation, which has not passed into the hands of a bonâ fide purchaser ; for such property will be held affected with a trust, primarily for the creditors of the company, and, subject to their right, secondarily for the stockholders in proportion to their interests therein.<sup>1</sup> Upon the like ground the capital stock of an incorporated bank is deemed a trust fund for all the debts of the corporation ; and no stockholder can entitle himself to any dividend or share of such capital stock, until all the debts are paid. And if the capital stock should be divided, leaving any debts unpaid, every stockholder, receiving his share of the capital stock, would in Equity be held liable pro ratâ to contribute to the discharge of such debts out of the fund in his own hands.<sup>2</sup> This, however, is a remedy, which can be obtained in Equity only ; for a Court of Common Law is incapable of administering any just relief ; since it has no power of bringing all the proper parties before the Court, or of ascertaining the full amount of the debts, the mode of contribution, the number

§ 1253. A case of an analogous nature is that of partnership property, on which the joint creditors, in case of insolvency, are deemed in Equity to have a right of priority of payment before the private creditors of any separate partner. The joint property is deemed a trust fund, primarily to be applied to the discharge of the partnership debts against all persons not having a higher Equity.<sup>2</sup> A long series of authorities (as has been truly said) has established this Equity of the joint creditors, to be worked out through the medium of the partners ;<sup>3</sup> that is to say, the partners have a right, inter esse, to have the partnership property first applied to the discharge of the partnership debts, and no partner has any right, except to his own share of the residue ; and the joint creditors are, in case of insolvency, substituted in Equity to the rights of the partners, as being the ultimate cestuis que trust of the fund to the extent of the joint debts. The creditors, indeed, have no lien ; but they have something approaching to a lien ; that is, they have a right to sue at law, and, by judgment and execution, to obtain possession of the property ;<sup>4</sup> and in Equity, they have a right to follow it, as a trust, into the

§ 1254. Having considered some of the more important classes of implied trusts, arising from the presumed intention of the parties, we may next pass to the consideration of those implied trusts, (or, perhaps more properly speaking, those constructive trusts,) which are independent of any such intention, and are forced upon the conscience of the party by the mere operation of law. Some cases of this sort have been already incidentally mentioned under former heads. But a concise review of the general doctrine seems indispensable in this place to a thorough understanding of Equitable Jurisdiction.

§ 1255. One of the most common cases, in which a Court of Equity acts upon the ground of implied trusts in invitum, is, where a party has received money, which he cannot conscientiously withhold from another party.<sup>2</sup> It has been well remarked, that the receiving of money, which consistently with conscience cannot be retained, is, in Equity, sufficient to raise a trust in favor of the party, for whom, or on whose account, it was received.<sup>3</sup> This is the governing principle in all such cases. And, therefore, whenever any interest arises, the true question is, not whether money has been received by a party, of which he could not have compelled the payment; but, whether he can now with a safe conscience, ex æquo et bono, retain it.<sup>4</sup>

Illustrations of this doctrine are familiar in cases of money paid by accident, or mistake, or fraud. And the difference between the payment of money under a mistake of fact, and a payment under a mistake of law, in its operation upon the conscience of the party, presents the equitable qualifications of the doctrine in a striking manner.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1257. Another instance, perhaps more comprehensive in its reach, in which Courts of Equity act by creating trusts in invitum, is, where a party purchases trust property, knowing it to be such, from [*503] the trustee, in violation of the *objects of the trust. In such a case Courts of Equity (as we have before had occasion to state<sup>1</sup>) force the trust upon the conscience of the guilty party, and compel him to perform it, and to hold the property subject to it, in the same manner as the trustee himself held it.<sup>2</sup> It has been truly said by an eminent judge, that the only thing to be inquired of in a Court of Equity in cases of this sort, is, whether the property, bound by the trust, has come into the hands of persons, who were either compellable to execute the trust, or to preserve the property for the persons entitled to it.<sup>3</sup> It is upon this ground, and this alone, that persons, colluding with the executor or administrator in a known misapplication of the assets of the estate, are made responsible for the property in their hands; for they are treated as purchasers with notice, and thus as mere trustees of the parties, who are entitled to the assets, the latter being a trust fund under the administration of the executor or administrator.<sup>4</sup>

§ 1258. Upon similar principles, wherever the property of a party has been wrongfully misapplied, or a

•trust fund has been wrongfully converted into another species of property, if its identity can be traced, it will be held in its new form liable *to the rights of [*504] the original owner, or cestui que trust.<sup>1</sup> The general proposition, which is maintained both at law and in Equity upon this subject, is, that if any property in its original state and form is covered with a trust in favor of the principal, no change of that state and form can divest it of such trust, or give the agent or trustee converting it, or those, who represent him in right, (not being bonâ fide purchasers for a valuable consideration without notice) any more valid claim in respect to it, than they respectively had before such change. An abuse of a trust can confer no rights on the party abusing it, or on those, who claim in privity with him.<sup>2</sup> This principle is fully recognised at law in all cases, where it is susceptible of being brought out, as a ground of action, or of defence, in a suit at law. In Courts of Equity it is adopted with a universality of application.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1259. Thus, for instance, if A. is trusted by B. with money to purchase a horse for him, and A. purchases a carriage with that money in violation of the

<sup>1</sup> A fortiori, if the property has been rightfully sold by an agent or trustee, if the proceeds of the sale can be distinctly and separately traced, the property belongs in Equity, and often in law, to the principal. Thus, for example, if a factor sells goods consigned to him for sale, and takes notes for the purchase money, those notes, if he fails, will belong to his principal, and not to his own assignees or representatives. Ex parte Dumas, 1 Atk. 232, 233; *Scott v. trust; B. is entitled to the carriage, and may, if he chooses so to do, sue for it at law.<sup>1</sup> So, if A. entrusts money with a broker, to buy Bank of England stock for him, and he invests the money in American stocks, A. is entitled to, and may maintain an action at law for those stocks, in whosoever hands he finds them, not being a purchaser for a valuable consideration without notice.<sup>2</sup> It matters not in the slightest degree into whatever other form, different from the original, the change may have been made, whether it be that of promissory notes, or of goods, or of stock; for the product of a substitute for the original thing still follows the nature of the thing itself, so long as it can be ascertained to be such. The right ceases only, when the means of ascertainment fail; which, of course, is the case, when the subject-matter is turned into money, and mixed and confounded in a general mass of property of the same description.<sup>3</sup>

act, but upon the mere ground of a wrongful conversion, creating, in foro conscientiae, a trust in his favor.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1261. Upon similar grounds, where a trustee, or other person, standing in a fiduciary relation, makes a profit out of any transactions within the scope of his agency or authority, that profit will belong to his cestui que trust; for it is a constructive fraud upon the latter to employ that property contrary to the trust, and to retain the profit of such misapplication; and by operation of Equity the profit is immediately converted into a constructive trust in favor of the party entitled to the benefit.<sup>2</sup> For the like reason a trustee, becoming a purchaser of the estate of his cestui que trust, is deemed incapable of holding it to his own use; and it may be set aside by the cestui que trust.<sup>3</sup> Nor is the doctrine confined to trustees, strictly so called. It extends to all other persons standing in a fiduciary relation to the party, whatever that relation may be.<sup>4</sup>

§ 1262. In cases of this sort, the cestui que trust (the beneficiary) is not at all bound by the act of the other party. He has, therefore, an option to insist upon taking the property; or he may disclaim any title thereto, and proceed upon any other remedies, to which he is entitled, either in rem or in personam.<sup>1</sup> [507] The substituted fund is only liable to his *option. But he cannot insist upon opposite and repugnant rights. Thus, for example, if a trustee of land has sold the land in violation of his trust, the beneficiary cannot insist upon having the land, and also the notes given for the purchase-money; for by taking the latter, at least so far as respects the purchaser, he must be deemed to affirm the sale. On the other hand, by following his title in the land, he repudiates the sale.<sup>2</sup>

* § 1264. Wherever a trustee is guilty of a [*508] breach of trust by the sale of the trust property to a bonâ fide purchaser for a valuable consideration without notice, the trust in the property is extinguished.<sup>2</sup> But, if afterwards he should repurchase, or otherwise become entitled to, the same property, the trust would revive, and reattach to it in his hands; for it will not be tolerated in Equity, that a party shall, by his own wrongful act, acquire an absolute title to that, which he is in conscience bound to preserve for another. In Equity, even more strongly than at law, the maxim prevails, that no man shall take advantage of his own wrong.<sup>3</sup> Even at law, if a disseisor aliens the land, and a descent is cast, and afterwards the disseisor reacquires the land by descent or purchase, the disseisee may re-enter, although, otherwise, the mesne descent cast would have barred his entry.<sup>4</sup>

§ 1265. The truth is, that Courts of Equity, in regard to fraud, whether it be constructive or actual, have adopted principles exceedingly broad and comprehensive in the application of their remedial justice; and especially, where there is any fraud, touching property, they will interfere, and administer a wholesome justice, and sometimes even a stern justice in favor of innocent persons, who are sufferers by it without any fault on their own side. This is often done by converting the offending party into a trustee, and making the property itself subservient to the proper [*509] *purposes of recompense by way of equitable trust or lien.<sup>1</sup> Thus, a fraudulent purchaser will be held a mere trustee for the honest but deluded and cheated vendor.<sup>2</sup> A person, who has fraudulently procured a fine to be levied in his favor by an idiot or lunatic, will be held a trustee for the benefit of the persons, who are prejudiced by the fraud.<sup>3</sup> A person, who lies by, and without notice suffers his own estate to be sold or incumbered in favor of an innocent purchaser or lender, will be held a trustee of the estate for the latter.<sup>4</sup> An heir, preventing a charge or devise of an estate to another by a promise to perform the same personally, will be held a trustee for the latter to the amount of the charge or beneficial interest intended.<sup>5</sup> An agent, authorized to purchase an estate for another, who purchases the same for himself, will be held a trustee of his principal.<sup>6</sup> But it is unnecessary to pursue this subject farther, as many illustrations of a like nature have been already given under the heads of Actual Fraud and Constructive Fraud.<sup>7</sup>

the denomination of express or implied trusts, we shall conclude this subject by a short review of some of the doctrines, as to the nature and extent of the responsibility of trustees, and as to the remedies, *which may be resorted to, to enforce a due [*510] performance of trusts.

§ 1267. It is not easy, in a great variety of cases, to say, what the precise duty of a trustee is; and, therefore, it often becomes indispensable for him, before he acts, to seek the aid and direction of a Court of Equity. We have already seen, that his acts done to the prejudice of the cestui que trust, (or beneficiary,) are sometimes such as are binding, and cannot be recalled; and sometimes are such, as a Court of Equity will not punish by treating them as breaches of trust.<sup>1</sup> But the cases, in which such acts will be deemed violations of trust, for which a trustee will be held responsible in Equity, are difficult to be defined. It has been often said, that what he may be compelled to do by a suit, he may voluntarily do without suit. But this (as we have also seen) is a doctrine requiring many qualifications, and by no means to be generally relied on for safety.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1268. In a general sense, a trustee is bound by his implied obligation to perform all those acts, which are necessary and proper for the due execution of the trust, which he has undertaken.<sup>3</sup> But, as he is supposed merely to take upon himself the trust, as a matter of honor, conscience, friendship, or humanity, and as he is not entitled to any compensation for his services, at least, not without some express or implied stipulation for that purpose;<sup>1</sup> he would [*511] *seem, upon the analogous principles applicable to bailments, bound only to good faith and reasonable diligence; and, as in case of a gratuitous bailee, liable only for gross negligence.<sup>1</sup> It would be difficult, however, to affirm, that Courts of Equity do, in fact, always limit the responsibility of trustees, or measure their acts by such a rule.

<sup>1</sup> 2 Foulbl. Eq. B. 2, ch. 7, § 3; Manning v. Manning, 1 John. Ch. R. 527, 532 to 535. The same rule, refusing compensation to trustees, and to others standing in similar relations, is found in the Roman Law, and was probably thence transferred into Equity Jurisprudence. Mr. Chancellor Kent has elaborately defended it in his opinion in the case of Manning v. Manning, 1 John. Ch. R. 534, from which the following extract is made. "Nor does the rule strike me as so very unjust, or singular and extraordinary; for the acceptance of every trust is voluntary and confidential; and a thousand duties are required of individuals in relation to the concerns of others, and particularly in respect to numerous institutions, partly of a private and partly of a public nature, in which a just indemnity is all, that is expected and granted. I should think it could not have a very favorable influence on the prudence and diligence of a trustee, were we to promote, by the hopes of reward, a competition, or even a desire, for the possession of private trusts, that relate to the moneyed concerns of the helpless and infirm. To allow wages or commissions for every alleged service, how could we prevent abuse? The infant or the lunatic cannot watch their own interest. Quis custodiet ipsos custodes? The rule in question has a sanction in the wisdom of the Roman law, which, equally with ours, refused a compensation, and granted an indemnity to the trustee of the minor's estate. The maxim in that law was, that Lucrum facere ex pupilli tutelâ tutor non debet. And the tutor or curator was entitled only to his reasonable and just expenses, incurred in behalf of the estate, such as travelling charges, costs of suit, &c., unless a certain allowance was granted by the person, by whom he was appointed. Sumptuum, qui bonâ fide in tutelam, non qui in ipsos tutores fiunt, ratio haberi solet; nisi ab eo, qui eum dat, certum salarium ei constitutum est. Item, sumptus litis tutor reputabit, et viatica, si ex officio necesse habuit aliquo excurrere vel proficisci. (Dig. 26, tit. 7, l. 33; Idem. 26 tit. 7, l. 58; Idem. 27, tit. 3, l. 1, 9.) It is probable, that this same principle, which we find in some, has been infused into the municipal law of most of the nations of Europe; because most of them have adopted the civil law. (Domat, B. 2, tit. Tutors, tit. 2, § 3, art. 5, 35; Erks. Inst. B. 1, tit. 7, § 31, 31.) The same rule was known in the early age of the Common Law, and applied to the guardian in socage. He was entitled only to his allowance for his reasonable costs and expenses, when called to render an account of the guardianship of the estate of the ward. (Litt. § 123.) And this was the provision in the statute of Marlbridge, (52 H. III. ch.

§ 1269. In respect to the preservation and care of trust property, it has been said, that a trustee is to keep it, as he keeps his own. And, therefore, if he is robbed of money, belonging to his cestui que trust, without his own default or negligence, (or perhaps, strictly speaking, without his own gross default or negligence,<sup>2</sup>) he will not be chargeable.

17,) declaring the duties of the guardian in socage, Salvis ipsis custodibus rationabilibus mris suis." The rule has been also applauded by great Equity Judges in England in modern times. I confess, that I have not been able quite so clearly to see, or so strongly to approve, the policy of the rule. Trusts may be very properly considered as matters of honor and kindness, and of a conscientious desire to fulfil the wishes and objects of friends and relatives. But the duties and responsibilities of the office of a trustee are sufficiently onerous and perplexing in themselves; and mistakes, even of the most innocent nature, are sometimes visited, with severe consequences. Nor can any one reasonably expect any trustee to devote his time or services to a very watchful care of the interests of others, when there is no remuneration for his services, and there must often be a positive loss to himself, in withdrawing from his own concerns some of his own valuable time. To say, that no one is obliged to take upon himself the duty of a trustee, is to evade, and not to answer, the objection. The policy of the law ought to be such as to induce honorable men, without a sacrifice of their private interest, to accept the office; and to take away the temptation to abuse the trust for mere selfish purposes, as the only indemnity for services of an important and anxious nature. The very circumstance, that trustees now often stipulate for a compensation before accepting the office, and that Courts of Equity now sanction such an allowance, is a distinct proof, that the rule does not work well, and is felt to be inconvenient or unreasonable in practice.

He is even allowed in Equity to establish, by his own oath, the amount so lost; for he cannot [*513] *possibly in ordinary cases have any other proof.<sup>1</sup> So, if he should deposit the money with a banker in good credit, to remit it to the proper place by a bill, drawn by a person in due credit, and the banker, or drawer of the bill should become bankrupt, he would not be responsible.<sup>2</sup> The rule, in all cases of this sort, is, that where a trustee acts by other hands, either from necessity, or conformably to the common usage of mankind, he is not to be made answerable for losses.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>3</sup> Ex parte Belchier v. Parsons, Ambler, R. 219. The same rule applies here as in cases of personal representatives of a deceased party, who are treated as trustees. In Clough v. Bond, 3 Mylne & Craig, 490, 496, Lord Cottenham, speaking on this subject, said; "It will be found to be the result of all the best authorities upon the subject, that, although a personal representative, acting strictly within the line of his duty, and exercising reasonable care and diligence, will not be responsible for the failure or depreciation of the fund, in which any part of the estate may be invested, or for the insolvency or misconduct of any person, who may have possessed it; yet, if that line of duty be not strictly pursued, and any part of the property be invested by such personal representative in funds or upon securities not authorized, or be put within the control of persons, who ought not to be intrusted with it, and a loss be thereby eventually sustained, such personal representative will be liable to make it good, however unexpected the result, however little likely to arise from the course adopted, and however free such conduct may have been from any improper motive. Thus, if he omit to sell property, when it ought to be sold, and it be afterwards lost without any fault of his, he is liable; Phillips v. Phillips; (Freem. Ch. Ca. 11) or if he leave money due upon personal security, which, though good at the time, afterwards fails; Powell v. Evans, (5 Ves. 839); Tebbs v. Carpenter, (1 Madd. 290)

§ 1270. In all cases, however, in which a trustee places money in the hands of a banker, he should take care to keep it separate, and not mix it with his own in a common account; for, if he should so mix it, he would be deemed to have treated the whole as his own; and he would be held liable to the cestui que trust for any loss sustained by the banker's insolvency.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1271. In respect to the manner of managing funds, and laying out money on securities, and even in respect to allowing trust money to remain in the hands of debtors, considerable strictness is required by the rules of Courts of Equity. It has been remarked by Lord Hardwicke, that these rules should not be laid down with a strictness to strike terror *into man- [*514] kind, acting for the benefit of others, and not for their own;<sup>2</sup> and that, as a trust is an office necessary in the concerns between man and man, and which, if faithfully discharged, is attended with no small degree of trouble and anxiety, it is an act of great kindness in

And the case is stronger if he be himself the author of the improper investment, as upon personal security, or an unauthorized fund. Thus, he is not liable, upon a proper investment in the 3 per cents., for a loss occasioned by the fluctuations of that fund; Peat v. Crane, (2 Dick. 499, note.) but he is for the fluctuations of any unauthorized fund; Hancom v. Allen, (2 Dick. 498); Howe v. Earl of Dartmouth, (7 Ves. 137; see p. 150.) So, when the loss arises from the dishonesty or failure of any one, to whom the possession of part of the estate has been entrusted. Necessity, which includes the regular course of business in administering the property, will, in equity, exonerate the personal representative. But if, without such necessity, he be instrumental in giving to the person failing possession of any part of the property, he will be liable, although the person possessing it be a co-executor or co-administrator. Longford v. Gascoyne (11 Ves. 333); Lord Shipbrook v. Lord Hinchinbrook, (11 Ves. 252; 16 Ves. 477); Underwood v. Stevens, (1 Mer. 712); and see Hanbury v. Kirkland, 3 Sim. 265.

any one to accept it. To add hazard or risk to that trouble, and to subject a trustee to losses, which he could not foresee, and consequently not prevent, would be a manifest hardship, and would be deterring every one from accepting so necessary an office.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1272. There is manifest good sense in these remarks. But it would be difficult to affirm, that the rules of Courts of Equity have always proceeded upon so broad and liberal a basis. The true result of the considerations, here suggested, would seem to be, that, where a trustee has acted with good faith in the exercise of a fair discretion, and in the same manner, as he would ordinarily do in regard to his own property, he ought not to be held responsible for any losses accruing in the management of the trust property.<sup>2</sup> On the contrary, Courts of Equity have laid down some artificial rules for the exercise of the discretion of trustees, which import (to say the least,) extraordinary diligence, and vigilance in the management of the trust property.

§ 1273. Thus, for example, if a trustee should lay out trust funds in any stock, in which a Court of [*515] *Equity itself is not in the habit of directing funds in its own possession to be laid out, although there should be no mala fides; yet if the stock should fall in value, he would be held responsible for the loss.<sup>3</sup> In other words, a Court of Equity will, in such cases, require, that a trustee should act with all the scrupulous circumspection, caution, and wisdom, with which the court itself, from its long experience and superior means of information, is accustomed to act; a doctrine certainly somewhat perilous to trustees, and startling to uninstructed minds. It is, to adopt the language of Lord Bacon, substituting for the private conscience of the trustee, "the general conscience of the realm, which is Chancery."<sup>1</sup>

§ 1274. So, if a trustee should invest trust money in mere personal securities, however unexceptionable they might seem to be, in case of any loss by the insolvency of the borrower, he would be held responsible; for, in all cases of this sort, Courts of Equity require security to be taken on real estate, or on some other thing of permanent value.<sup>2</sup> Nay, it will be

Steward*, Cooper, Eq. R. 6.—Even a bond of several persons is not distinguished from the bond of one person. "It was never heard of," (said Lord Kenyon, Master of the Rolls,) "that a trustee could lend an infant's money on private security. This is a rule, that should be rung in the ears of every person, who acts in the character of a trustee; for an act may very probably be done with the best and honestest intention; yet no rule in a Court of Equity is so well established, as this." Holmes v. Dring, 2 Cox, R. 1, 2. Lord Northington, in Hardin v. Parsons, (1 Eden, R. 148,) laid down a much more limited doctrine, and held, that a letting of money on personal security was not per se gross negligence and a breach of trust; and that other circumstances must be shown to charge the trustee. He said; "It is agreed, that there is no text writer, that lays down the rule; nor any case, which establishes it. If so, we must resort to the inquiry into the nature of the office and duty of a trustee, as considered in a Court of Equity. No man can require, or with reason expect, a trustee to manage his property with the same care and discretion, that he would his own. Therefore, the touchstone, by which such cases are to be tried, at the peril of the trustee, if trust money comes to his hands, such as a debt due from a third person, to suffer it to remain upon the mere personal credit of the debtor, although the testator, who created the trust, had left it in that very state.<sup>1</sup> The principle is even carried further; and, in cases of personal securities taken by a trustee, he is made responsible for all deficiencies, and is also chargeable for all profits, if any are made. So, that he acquires a double responsibility, although in such cases he may have acted with entire good faith in the exercise of, what he supposed to be, a sound discretion.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1275. In relation to trust property, it is the duty of the trustee, whether it be real estate or be personal [*517] *estate, to defend the title at law, in case of any suit being brought respecting it; to give notice, if it may be useful and practicable, of such suit to his cestui que trust; to prevent any waste, or delay, or injury to the trust property; to keep regular accounts;<sup>3</sup> to afford accurate information to the cestui que trust of the disposition of the trust property; and, if he has not all

is, whether the trustee has been guilty of a breach of trust, or not. If he has been guilty of gross negligence, it is as bad in its consequences, as fraud; and is a breach of trust. The lending of trust money on a note is not a breach of trust, without other circumstances crasse negligentiae.<sup>7</sup> But the later cases have entirely overthrown this doctrine, however reasonable it may seem to be. Ibid., Mr. Eden's note (a). See also Walker v. Symonds, 3 Swanst. 62, 63; Mr. Chancellor Kent, in Smith v. Smith, 4 John. Ch. R. 383, 384, seemed inclined to adopt the doctrine of Lord Northington, and to think the modern English rule, as to lending money on personal security, too strict.

the proper information, to seek for it, and, if practicable, to obtain it.<sup>1</sup> Finally; he is to act in relation to the trust property with reasonable diligence; and, in cases of a joint trust, he must exercise due caution and vigilance in respect to the approval of, and acquiescence in, the acts of his co-trustees; for if he should deliver over the whole management to the others, and betray supine indifference, or gross negligence, in regard to the interests of the cestui que trust, he will be held responsible.<sup>2</sup>

general rule is, that, if a trustee has made interest upon those funds, or ought to have invested them so as to yield interest, he shall in each case be chargeable with the payment of interest.<sup>1</sup> In some cases Courts of Equity will even direct annual or other rests to be made; the effect of which will be to give to the cestui que trust the benefit of compound interest. But such an interposition requires extraordinary circumstances to justify it.<sup>2</sup> Thus, for example, if a trustee, in manifest violation of his trust, has applied the trust funds to his own benefit and profit in trade; or has sold out the trust stock, and applied the proceeds to his own use; or has conducted himself fraudulently in the management of the trust funds; or has wilfully refused to follow the positive directions of the instrument, creating the trust, as to investments; in these, and the like cases, Courts of Equity will apply the rule of annual or semiannual rests, if it will be most for the benefit of the cestui que trust.<sup>3</sup> The true rule in Equity in such cases is, to take care, that all the gain shall go to the cestui que trust.<sup>4</sup>

same situation, as if the trustee had faithfully performed his own proper duty. It has even a larger and more comprehensive aim, founded in public policy, which is, to secure fidelity by removing temptation, and by keeping alive a sense of personal interest and personal responsibility.<sup>1</sup> It seems, however, to have been of a comparatively late introduction into Equity Jurisprudence; and probably was little known in England at an earlier period, than the reign of Charles the Second.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1279. The Roman Law acted with the same protective wisdom and foresight. In that law, if a guardian, or other trustee, was guilty of negligence in suffering the money of his ward to remain idle, he was chargeable at least with the ordinary interest. *Quod, si pecunia mansisset in rationibus pupilli, præstandum, quod bonâ fide percepisset, aut percipere potuisset, sed fœnori dare, cum potuisset, neglexisset; cum id, quod ab alio debitore nomine usurarum cum sorte datur, ei, qui accepit, totum sortis vice fungitur, *vel fungi de-* [*520] bet.<sup>3</sup> But where the guardian, or other trustee, went beyond the point of mere negligence, and was guilty of a gross abuse of his trust, the Roman Law sometimes inflicted upon him a grievous interest, in the nature of a compound interest, but often greatly exceeding it.<sup>4</sup> Quoniam, ubi quis ejus pecuniam, cujus tutelam

§ 1220. In cases where there are several trustees, the point has often arisen, how far they are to be deemed responsible for the acts of each other. The general rule is, that they are responsible only for their own acts, and not for the acts of each other, unless they have made some agreement, by which they have expressly agreed to be bound for each other ; or they have, by their own voluntary coöperation or connivance, enabled one or more to accomplish some known object in violation of the trust.<sup>2</sup> And the mere fact, that trustees, who are authorized to sell lands for money, or to [*521] receive money, jointly execute *a receipt therefor to the party, who is debtor or purchaser, will not ordinarily make either liable, except for so much of the money, as has been received by him ; although, ordinarily, in the case of executors, it would be different. The reasons assigned for the doctrine, and the difference, are as follows. Trustees have all equal power, interest, and authority, and cannot act separately, as executors may ; but must join, both in conveyances and receipts. For one trustee cannot sell without the other ; or make a claim to receive more of the consideration money, or to be more a trustee than the other. It would, therefore, be against natural justice to charge them (seeing they are thus compellable, either not to act at all, or to act together) with each other's receipts, unless there be some default or negligence on their own part, independent of joining in such receipt.<sup>1</sup> But it is otherwise with regard to executors; for they are not compellable to join in receipts; and each is competent, by his own separate receipt, to discharge any debtor to the estate. If, therefore, they join in a receipt, it is their own voluntary act, and equivalent to an admission of their willingness to be jointly accountable for the money.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1281. The propriety of the doctrine, which, in favor of trustees, makes them liable only for their own acts and receipts, has never been questioned; and, indeed, stands upon principles of general justice. It *has [*522] been well said, that it seems to be substantial injustice to decree a man to answer for money, which he did not receive, at the same time, that the charge upon him by his joining in the receipt is but notional.<sup>3</sup> There is a good deal more question, as to the distinction, which is made unfavorably in regard to executors. In truth, upon general reasoning, it seems difficult to maintain its sound policy, or practical convenience, or intrinsic equity. It has on this account been some-

<sup>1</sup> 2 Fonbl. Eq. B. 2, ch. 7, § 5, and note (l); Mr. Cox's note (1) to Fellows v. Mitchell, 1 P. Will. 83, and to Churchill v. Lady Hobson, 1 P. Will. 241, and Mr. Eldon's note to Westley v. Clarke, 1 Eden, R. 360; Murrell v. Cox, 2 Vern. 570.—Lord Harcourt struggled against it in Churchill v. Lady Hobson, 1 P. Will. 241. In Westley v. Clarke, (1 Eden, R. 357,) Lord Northington shook it to its very foundation. His Lordship there said; "This bill is brought by a legatee to charge two executors with assets not actually received by them; but for which they had given a receipt; and by that, as the plaintiffs insist, made themselves liable for the actual receipt of the money by the third. And the claim is founded on this;—That it is a general rule in this court, that, if executors join in a receipt, they make themselves all liable in solido, because it is an unnecessary act, as each executor has an absolute power over the personal assets and rights of the testator. And that the contrary rule holds with respect to trustees; that they are not answerable for joint receipts, each in solido, but only in proportion to what they actually receive. But though there are distinctions in the books concerning the acts of trustees and those of executors, according to the cases cited for that purpose; yet those distinctions seem not to be taken with precision, sufficient to establish a general rule; for a joint receipt will charge trustees in solido each, if there is no other proof of the receipt of the money. As, if a mortgage is devised in trust to three trustees, and the mortgagor, with his witness, meets them to pay it off; the money is laid on the table, and the mortgagor, having obtained a reconveyance and receipt for his money, withdraws, each trustee is answerable in solido. On the contrary, in the case of Churchill v. Hobson, where executors gave a joint receipt, only one was held liable. And this authority, which is not an exception of any particular case, but an exception grounded on circumstances, shows there is no such rule. So that the rule seems to amount to no more, than that a joint receipt given by executors is a stronger proof, that they actually joined in the receipt; because generally they have no occasion to join for conformity. But if it appears plainly, that one executor only received, and discharged the estate indebted, and assigned the security, and the others joined afterwards without any reason, and without being in a capacity to control the act of their co-executor, either before or after that act was done, what grounds has any court in conscience to charge him? Equity arises out of a modification of acts, where a very minute circumstance may make a case equitable or iniquitous. And, though former authorities may and ought to bind the determination of

§ 1282. But, although the general rule in regard to trustees is, that they shall be liable only for their own acts and receipts; yet some nice distinctions have been indulged by Courts of Equity, which require notice in this place. Thus, for example, it has been said, that where they join in a receipt for money, and it is not distinguishable on the face of the receipt, or by other proper proofs, how much has been received

subsequent cases with respect to rights, as in the right of curtesy or dower; yet there can be no rule for the future determination of this Court concerning the acts of men.”—Lord Alvanley admitted the rule with great reluctance, in Hovey v. Blakeman (4 Ves. 607, 608) insisting, that it was not conclusive; and his remarks have great cogency and clearness. But it is now established by, what must be deemed, overruling authority. See Sadler v. Hobbs, 2 Bro. Ch. R. 114; Scurfield v. Howes, 3 Bro. Ch. R. 94, 95; Chambers v. Minchin, 7 Ves. 197, 198, 199, (in which Lord Eldon vindicated the rule against the objections taken to it); Brice v. Stokes, 11 Ves. 324; Doyle v. Blake, 2 Sch. & Lefr. 242; Joy v. Campbell, 1 Sch. & Lefr. 341; Shipbrook v. Lord Hinchbrook, 16 Ves. 477, 479, 480. In the recent case of Moses v. Levi, 3 Younge & Coll. 359, 367, Mr. Baron Alderson affirmed the rule, and held, that one executor, who had paid over money to his co-executor for the purpose of paying the same to residuary legatees, was guilty of negligence, and therefore, liable for the misapplication of the money by the co-executor. He then added; “If the case, stood on this ground alone, it appears to me that it would come within the principle of Lord Shipbrook v. Lord Hinchbrook, (11 Ves. 252,) Underwood v. Stevens, (1 Meriv. R. 712,) and Longford v. Gascoyne, (11 Ves. 333), in which it is laid down generally, that if an executor, permits his co-executor, to obtain possession of money which he had at any time in his own possession, and afterwards the co-executor misapplies the money, both executors are personally responsible. And, that it would not fall within the case of Bacon v. Bacon (5 Ves. 331,) and that class of cases in which it was held, that the executor, shall be allowed the benefit, of what he has handed over to his co-executor, in the due and ordinary course of the administration of the testator’s estate.” Mr. Chancellor Kent, in his reasoning in Monell v. Monell (5 John. Ch. R. 283), so far as it goes, seems to repel the distinction between trustees and executors. See also Manahan v. Gibbons, 19 John. R. 427, 440; Sutherland v. Brush, 7 John. Ch. by one, and how much by the other trustee, it is reasonable to charge each with the whole.<sup>1</sup> The case has been likened to that of a man wilfully mixing his own corn or money with that of another, where he, who has made the difficulty, shall not be permitted to avail himself of it; but, if there is any loss, he shall bear it himself.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1283. Perhaps the truest exposition of the principle, which ought in justice to regulate every case of this sort, whether it be the case of executors, or of guardians, or of trustees, is that, which has been adopted by a learned Equity Judge in our own country. It is, that if two executors, guardians, or trustees, join in a receipt for trust money, it is primâ facie, though not absolutely conclusive, evidence, that the money came to the hands of both. But either of them may show by satisfactory proof, that his joining in the receipt was necessary, or merely formal, and that the money was in fact all received by his companion. And, without such satisfactory proof, he ought to be held jointly liable to account to the cestui que trust for the money, upon the fair implication, resulting from his acts, that he did not intend to exclude a joint responsibility.<sup>3</sup>

tee, the trust money is paid over, and comes into the hands of the other, when it might and should have been otherwise controlled or secured by both; there, each of them will be held chargeable for the whole.<sup>1</sup> So, if one trustee should wrongfully suffer the other to detain the trust money a long time in his own hands, without security; or should lend it to the other

Cooke*, 1 McClelland, R. 168.—It is not easy to reconcile the language used in all the cases, as to what acts, directions, and omissions of one trustee shall make him chargeable. Lord Redesdale, in Joy v. Campbell, (1 Sch. & Lefr. 341,) states the doctrine thus. "The distinction seems to be this with respect to a mere signing; that if a receipt be given for the mere purposes of form, then the signing will not charge the person not receiving. But if it be given under circumstances purporting, that the money, though not actually received by both executors, was under the control of both, such a receipt shall charge. And the true question in all those cases seems to have been, whether the money was under the control of both executors. If it was so considered by the person paying the money, then the joining in the receipt by the executor, who did not actually receive it, amounted to a direction to pay his co-executor; for it could have no other meaning. He became responsible for the application of the money, just as if he had received it. But this does not apply to what is done in the discharge of a necessary duty of the executor; for example, an executor living in London, is to pay debts in Suffolk; and remits money to his co-executor to pay these debts. He is considered to do this of necessity. He could not transact business without trusting some persons; and it would be impossible for him to discharge his duty, if he is made responsible, where he remitted to a person, to whom he would have given credit, and would in his own business have remitted money in the same way. It would be the same, were one executor in India, and another in England, the assets being in India, but to be applied in England. There the co-executor is appointed for the purpose of carrying on such transaction; and the executor is not responsible, for he must remit to somebody; and he cannot be wrong, if he remits to the person, in whom the testator himself reposed confidence."

on his simple note; or should join with the other in lending it to a tradesman upon insufficient security; in all such cases he will be deemed liable for any loss.<sup>1</sup> A fortiori, one trustee will be liable, who has connived at, or been privy to, an embezzlement of the trust money by another; or if it is mutually agreed between them, that one shall have the exclusive management of one part of the trust property, and the other of the other part.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1285. In cases of a breach of trust, the question has arisen, in what light the debt created by such breach of trust is to be viewed; whether it is to be deemed a debt by simple contract, and so binding upon the personal assets only of the trustee, or a debt by specialty. At law, so far as any remedy exists there, the debt is treated as a simple contract debt, even though the trust arises under a deed executed by the trustees, and contains a clause, that no trustee shall be chargeable or accountable for any money arising in execution of the trust, except what he shall actually receive, unless there be some correspondent covenant also on the part of the trustees. For this is a common clause of indemnity in trust deeds; and the true sense of it is, that the trustees shall not be accountable for more than they receive. They are, [*527] *in fact, accountable for what they actually receive; but not accountable as under a covenant.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1287. Courts of Equity will not only hold trustees responsible for any misapplication of trust property, and any gross negligence or wilful departure from their duty in the management of it; but they will go farther, and in cases requiring such a remedy, they will remove the old trustees, and substitute new ones. Indeed, the appointment of new trustees is an ordinary remedy, enforced by Courts of Equity in all cases, where there is a failure of suitable trustees to perform the trust, either from accident, or from the refusal of the old trustees to act, or from their original or supervenient incapacity to act, or from any other cause.<sup>3</sup>

direct or positive proof of his personal default, upon the mere ground, that the other co-trustees would not act with him; for in a case where a trust is to be executed, if the parties have become so hostile to each other, that they will not act together, the very danger to the due execution of the trust and the due disposition of the trust fund require such an interposition to prevent irreparable mischief.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1290. Before concluding the subject of trusts, it may be proper to say a few words, in regard to such trusts, as either attach to trust property, situate in a foreign country, or are properly to be executed in a foreign country. The considerations, belonging to this branch of Equity Jurisprudence, are not indeed limited to cases of trust; and therefore, we shall here [*529] bring them together in one view, *as, for the most part, they are equally applicable to every subject within the reach of Equitable relief.

§ 1291. The jurisdiction of Courts of Equity, in regard to trusts, as well as to other things, is not confined to cases, where the subject-matter is within the absolute reach of the process of the court, called upon to act upon it; so that it can be directly and finally disposed of, or affected by the decree. If the proper parties are within the reach of the process of the court, it will be sufficient to justify the assertion of full jurisdiction over the subject-matter in controversy.<sup>1</sup> The decrees of Courts of Equity do, indeed, primarily and properly act in personam, and at most, collaterally only in rem.<sup>2</sup> Hence, (as we have already seen,) the specific performance of a contract for the sale of lands, lying in a foreign country, will be decreed in Equity, whenever the party is resident within the jurisdiction of the court.<sup>3</sup> So an injunction will, under the like circumstances, be granted to stay proceedings in a suit in a foreign country.<sup>4</sup>

§ 1292. These are not, however, peculiar or privileged cases for the exercise of jurisdiction; for Courts of Equity will in all other cases, where the proper parties are within the territorial sovereignty, or within the reach of the territorial process, administer full relief, although the property in controversy is actually situate in a foreign country, unless, indeed, *the [*530] relief, which is asked, is of a nature, which the court is incapable of administering. Many instances of this sort may readily be adduced, to illustrate this general doctrine and its exceptions. Thus, a party resident in England, who is a jointenant of land situate in Ireland, may be decreed to account for the profits of such land in the Court of Chancery in England.<sup>1</sup> But a bill for a partition of lands, situate in Ireland, will not be entertained in the Court of Chancery in England; because (as has been said) it is in the realty, and the court cannot award a commission into Ireland; and a bill for a partition is in the nature of a writ of partition at the Common Law, which lieth not in England for lands in Ireland.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1293. The same doctrine is applied to cases of trusts attached to land in a foreign country. They may be enforced by a Court of Equity in the country, where the trustee is a resident, and to whose process he may rightfully be subjected.<sup>3</sup> It is also applied to cases of mortgages of lands in foreign countries. And a bill to foreclose or redeem such a mortgage may be brought in any Court of Equity in any other country, where the proper parties are resident.<sup>4</sup> It was aptly said by Lord Kenyon, when Master of the Rolls, in a [*531] case then before him; "It *was not much litigated, that the Courts of Equity here have an equal right to interfere with regard to judgments and mortgages upon the lands in a foreign country, as upon lands here. Bills are often filed upon mortgages in the West Indies. The only distinction is, that this court cannot act upon the land directly; but acts upon the conscience of the person here." And after citing some cases to this effect, he added; "These cases clearly show, that with regard to any contract made in Equity between persons in this country respecting lands in a foreign country, particularly in the British dominions, this court will hold the same jurisdiction, as if they were situate in England."<sup>1</sup>

§ 1294. The same doctrine is applied to cases of frauds, touching contracts or conveyances of real property, situate in a foreign country. Thus, if a rent charge is fraudulently obtained on lands lying in Ireland, a bill to set it aside will be sustained in the Court of Chancery in England, if the defendant is a resident there.<sup>2</sup> Courts of Equity have gone even farther, and have in effect, as between the parties, overhauled the judgments of foreign courts, and even the sales, made under those judgments, where fraud has intervened in those judgments, or a grossly inequitable advantage has been taken. In such cases, they do not indeed disregard such judgments, or directly annul or control them. But they arrive at the equities between the parties, in the same manner, as they would, if the proceedings had *been mere matters in pais, [*532] subject to their general jurisdiction.<sup>3</sup>

to cases, where the lands, though situate abroad, are yet within the general sovereignty of the nation, exerting the equitable jurisdiction; as, for instance, suits in the Chancery of England, in regard to contracts, trusts, frauds, and other matters, touching lands in Ireland, or in the Colonies* of Great Britain. Lord Hardwicke on one occasion said, on this subject; "The different Courts of Equity are held under the same crown, though in different dominions; and, therefore, considering this as a court abroad, the point of jurisdiction is the same, as if in Ireland. And it is certain, where the provision is in England, let the cause of suit arise in Ireland, or the plantations, if the bill be brought in England, as the defendant is here, the courts do agere in personam, and may, by compulsion of the person and process of the court, compel him to do justice."<sup>1</sup> But this language, properly interpreted, was meant to apply only to the case then before the court, which was a suit respecting matters arising in a British Colony, and subjected to judicial decision there. Upon any other interpretation, it would be inconsistent with the principles, upon which Courts of Equity profess to act in matters of jurisdiction.

[*533] * § 1296. Indeed, Lord Hardwicke himself, in another case, where a bill was brought for possession of land in Scotland, and for a discovery of the rents and profits, deeds and writings thereof, and of fraud in obtaining the deeds, asserted the jurisdiction as to the fraud and discovery; and said, that this would have been a good bill, as to fraud and discovery, if the lands had been in France, and the persons were resident here ; for the jurisdiction of the court, as to frauds, is upon the conscience of the party.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1297. The same principle has been asserted by the Supreme Court of the United States in its broadest form ; and it has been held, that, in cases of fraud, of trust, or of contract, the jurisdiction of a Court of Equity is sustainable, wherever the person may be found, although lands, not within the jurisdiction of that court, may be affected by the decree.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1298. Still, it must be borne in mind, that the doctrine is not without limitations and qualifications ; and that to justify the exercise of the jurisdiction in cases touching lands in a foreign country, the relief sought must be of such a nature, as the court is capable of administering in the given case. We have already seen, that a bill for a partition of lands in a foreign country will not be entertained in a Court of Equity, upon the ground, that the relief cannot be given by issuing a commission to such foreign country.<sup>3</sup> Perhaps, a more general reason might be given, founded upon the principles of *international [*534] law ; and that is, that real estate cannot be transferred, or partitioned, or charged, except according to the laws of the country, in which it is situated.

§ 1299. Another case, illustrative of the same qualification, may be put, which has actually passed into judgment. A bill was brought in the English Court of Chancery, for the delivery of the possession of a moiety of land in St. Christopher's, and likewise for an account of the rents and profits thereof. Upon demurrer, it was held, that the court had no jurisdiction to put persons into possession in a place, where they had their own methods on such occasions, to which the party might have recourse ; for lands in the plantations (it was said) are no more under the jurisdiction of the court, than lands in Scotland; for it agit in personam only. But the bill, as to the rents and profits, was retained.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1300. The like decision was made in another case, already alluded to, upon a bill brought in the same court for possession of lands in Scotland, and for a discovery of the rents and profits, deeds and writings thereof, and fraud in obtaining the deed. A plea was put in, insisting that the matter was without the jurisdiction of the court. But it was overruled; and the court said, that it could act upon the person, as to the fraud and discovery.<sup>2</sup> So, where a bequest was made for a charity to be administered in Scotland, the English Court of Chancery declined to take the [*535] administration of it into its *own hands, deeming it proper to be acted on by the courts of Scotland.<sup>3</sup>

CHAPTER XXXIII.

PENALTIES AND FORFEITURES.

§ 1301. HAVING thus gone over some of the principal heads of Trusts, which are cognizable in Equity, we shall now proceed to another important branch of Equity Jurisdiction, to wit, that, which is exercised in cases of PENALTIES AND FORFEITURES for breaches of conditions and covenants. Originally, in all cases of this sort, there was no remedy at law; but the only relief, which could be obtained, was exclusively sought in Courts of Equity. Now, indeed, by the operation of statutes made for the purpose, relief may be obtained at law, both in England and America, in a great variety of cases; although some cases, not within the purview of these statutes, are still cognizable in Equity alone. The original jurisdiction, however, in Equity still remains, notwithstanding the concurrent remedy at law;<sup>1</sup> and, therefore, it properly falls under the present head.

§ 1302. Before entering upon the examination of this subject, it may be well to say a few words in regard to the nature and effect of conditions at the Common Law, as it may help us more distinctly to understand the nature and extent of Equity Jurisdiction in regard to conditions. At law, (and in general the same is equally true in Equity,) if a man undertakes to do a thing, either by way of contract, at the peril of the trustee, if trust money comes to his hands, such as a debt due from a third person, to suffer it to remain upon the mere personal credit of the debtor, although the testator, who created the trust, had left it in that very state.<sup>1</sup> The principle is even carried further; and, in cases of personal securities taken by a trustee, he is made responsible for all deficiencies, and is also chargeable for all profits, if any are made. So, that he acquires a double responsibility, although in such cases he may have acted with entire good faith in the exercise of, what he supposed to be, a sound discretion.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1275. In relation to trust property, it is the duty of the trustee, whether it be real estate or be personal [*517] *estate, to defend the title at law, in case of any suit being brought respecting it; to give notice, if it may be useful and practicable, of such suit to his cestui que trust; to prevent any waste, or delay, or injury to the trust property; to keep regular accounts;<sup>3</sup> to afford accurate information to the cestui que trust of the disposition of the trust property; and, if he has not all

is, whether the trustee has been guilty of a breach of trust, or not. If he has been guilty of gross negligence, it is as bad in its consequences, as fraud; and is a breach of trust. The lending of trust money on a note is not a breach of trust, without other circumstances crassæ negligentiae." But the later cases have entirely overthrown this doctrine, however reasonable it may seem to be. Ibid., Mr. Eden's note (a). See also Walker v. Symonds, 3 Swanst. 62, 63; Mr. Chancellor Kent, in Smith v. Smith, 4 John. Ch. R. 383, 384, seemed inclined to adopt the doctrine of Lord Northington, and to think the modern English rule, as to lending money on personal security, too strict.

the proper information, to seek for it, and, if practicable, to obtain it.<sup>1</sup> Finally; he is to act in relation to the trust property with reasonable diligence; and, in cases of a joint trust, he must exercise due caution and vigilance in respect to the approval of, and acquiescence in, the acts of his co-trustees; for if he should deliver over the whole management to the others, and betray supine indifference, or gross negligence, in regard to the interests of the cestui que trust, he will be held responsible.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>3</sup> The Works of Mr. Hampson and Mr. Willis on the duties and responsibilities of trustees contain an enumeration of many particulars. In all cases of doubt it is best to act under the direction of a Court of Equity; which trustees at all times have a right to ask. See Mitf. Eq. Pl. by Jeremy, 133, 134; Leech v. Leech, 1 Ch. Cas. 249.

general rule is, that, if a trustee has made interest upon those funds, or ought to have invested them so as to yield interest, he shall in each case be chargeable with the payment of interest.<sup>1</sup> In some cases Courts of Equity will even direct annual or other rests to be made; the effect of which will be to give to the cestui que trust the benefit of compound interest. But such an interposition requires extraordinary circumstances to justify it.<sup>2</sup> Thus, for example, if a trustee, in manifest violation of his trust, has applied the trust funds to his own benefit and profit in trade; or has sold out the trust stock, and applied the proceeds to his own use; or has conducted himself fraudulently in the management of the trust funds; or has wilfully refused to follow the positive directions of the instrument, creating the trust, as to investments; in these, and the like cases, Courts of Equity will apply the rule of annual or semiannual rests, if it will be most for the benefit of the cestui que trust.<sup>3</sup> The true rule in Equity in such cases is, to take care, that all the gain shall go to the cestui que trust.<sup>4</sup>

same situation, as if the trustee had faithfully performed his own proper duty. It has even a larger and more comprehensive aim, founded in public policy, which is, to secure fidelity by removing temptation, and by keeping alive a sense of personal interest and personal responsibility.<sup>1</sup> It seems, however, to have been of a comparatively late introduction into Equity Jurisprudence; and probably was little known in England at an earlier period, than the reign of Charles the Second.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1279. The Roman Law acted with the same protective wisdom and foresight. In that law, if a guardian, or other trustee, was guilty of negligence in suffering the money of his ward to remain idle, he was chargeable at least with the ordinary interest. *Quod, si pecunia mansisset in rationibus pupilli, præstandum, quod bonâ fide percepisset, aut percipere potuisset, sed fœnori dare, cum potuisset, neglexisset; cum id, quod ab alio debitore nomine usurarum cum sorte datur, ei, qui accepit, totum sortis vice fungitur, *vel fungi debet.*<sup>3</sup> But where the guardian, or other trustee, went beyond the point of mere negligence, and was guilty of a gross abuse of his trust, the Roman Law sometimes inflicted upon him a grievous interest, in the nature of a compound interest, but often greatly exceeding it.<sup>4</sup> Quoniam, ubi quis ejus pecuniam, cujus tutelam

§ 1220. In cases where there are several trustees, the point has often arisen, how far they are to be deemed responsible for the acts of each other. The general rule is, that they are responsible only for their own acts, and not for the acts of each other, unless they have made some agreement, by which they have expressly agreed to be bound for each other ; or they have, by their own voluntary coöperation or connivance, enabled one or more to accomplish some known object in violation of the trust.<sup>2</sup> And the mere fact, that trustees, who are authorized to sell lands for money, or to [*521] receive money, jointly execute *a receipt therefor to the party, who is debtor or purchaser, will not ordinarily make either liable, except for so much of the money, as has been received by him ; although, ordinarily, in the case of executors, it would be different. The reasons assigned for the doctrine, and the difference, are as follows. Trustees have all equal power, interest, and authority, and cannot act separately, as executors may ; but must join, both in conveyances and receipts. For one trustee cannot sell without the other ; or make a claim to receive more of the consideration money, or to be more a trustee than the other. It would, therefore, be against natural justice to charge them (seeing they are thus compellable, either not to act at all, or to act together) with each other's receipts, unless there be some default or negligence on their own part, independent of joining in such receipt.<sup>1</sup> But it is otherwise with regard to executors; for they are not compellable to join in receipts; and each is competent, by his own separate receipt, to discharge any debtor to the estate. If, therefore, they join in a receipt, it is their own voluntary act, and equivalent to an admission of their willingness to be jointly accountable for the money.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1281. The propriety of the doctrine, which, in favor of trustees, makes them liable only for their own acts and receipts, has never been questioned; and, indeed, stands upon principles of general justice. It *has [*522] been well said, that it seems to be substantial injustice to decree a man to answer for money, which he did not receive, at the same time, that the charge upon him by his joining in the receipt is but notional.<sup>3</sup> There is a good deal more question, as to the distinction, which is made unfavorably in regard to executors. In truth, upon general reasoning, it seems difficult to maintain its sound policy, or practical convenience, or intrinsic equity. It has on this account been some-

<sup>1</sup> 2 Fonbl. Eq. B. 2, ch. 7, § 5, and note (l); Mr. Cox's note (1) to Fellows v. Mitchell, 1 P. Will. 83, and to Churchill v. Lady Hobson, 1 P. Will. 241, and Mr. Eldon's note to Westley v. Clarke, 1 Eden, R. 360; Murrell v. Cox, 2 Vern. 570.—Lord Harcourt struggled against it in Churchill v. Lady Hobson, 1 P. Will. 241. In Westley v. Clarke, (1 Eden, R. 357,) Lord Northington shook it to its very foundation. His Lordship there said; "This bill is brought by a legatee to charge two executors with assets not actually received by them; but for which they had given a receipt; and by that, as the plaintiffs insist, made themselves liable for the actual receipt of the money by the third. And the claim is founded on this;—That it is a general rule in this court, that, if executors join in a receipt, they make themselves all liable in solido, because it is an unnecessary act, as each executor has an absolute power over the personal assets and rights of the testator. And that the contrary rule holds with respect to trustees; that they are not answerable for joint receipts, each in solido, but only in proportion to what they actually receive. But though there are distinctions in the books concerning the acts of trustees and those of executors, according to the cases cited for that purpose; yet those distinctions seem not to be taken with precision, sufficient to establish a general rule; for a joint receipt will charge trustees in solido each, if there is no other proof of the receipt of the money. As, if a mortgage is devised in trust to three trustees, and the mortgagor, with his witness, meets them to pay it off; the money is laid on the table, and the mortgagor, having obtained a reconveyance and receipt for his money, withdraws, each trustee is answerable in solido. On the contrary, in the case of Churchill v. Hobson, where executors gave a joint receipt, only one was held liable. And this authority, which is not an exception of any particular case, but an exception grounded on circumstances, shows there is no such rule. So that the rule seems to amount to no more, than that a joint receipt given by executors is a stronger proof, that they actually joined in the receipt; because generally they have no occasion to join for conformity. But if it appears plainly, that one executor only received, and discharged the estate indebted, and assigned the security, and the others joined afterwards without any reason, and without being in a capacity to control the act of their co-executor, either before or after that act was done, what grounds has any court in conscience to charge him? Equity arises out of a modification of acts, where a very minute circumstance may make a case equitable or iniquitous. And, though former authorities may and ought to bind the determination of

§ 1282. But, although the general rule in regard to trustees is, that they shall be liable only for their own acts and receipts; yet some nice distinctions have been indulged by Courts of Equity, which require notice in this place. Thus, for example, it has been said, that where they join in a receipt for money, and it is not distinguishable on the face of the receipt, or by other proper proofs, how much has been received

subsequent cases with respect to rights, as in the right of curtesy or dower; yet there can be no rule for the future determination of this Court concerning the acts of men."—Lord Alvanley admitted the rule with great reluctance, in Hovey v. Blakeman (4 Ves. 607, 608) insisting, that it was not conclusive; and his remarks have great cogency and clearness. But it is now established by, what must be deemed, overruling authority. See Sadler v. Hobbs, 2 Bro. Ch. R. 114; Scurfield v. Howes, 3 Bro. Ch. R. 94, 95; Chambers v. Minchin, 7 Ves. 197, 198, 199, (in which Lord Eldon vindicated the rule against the objections taken to it); Brice v. Stokes, 11 Ves. 324; Doyle v. Blake, 2 Sch. & Lefr. 242; Joy v. Campbell, 1 Sch. & Lefr. 341; Shipbrook v. Lord Hinchinbrook, 16 Ves. 477, 479, 480. In the recent case of Moses v. Levi, 3 Younge & Coll. 359, 367, Mr. Baron Alderson affirmed the rule, and held, that one executor, who had paid over money to his co-executor for the purpose of paying the same to residuary legatees, was guilty of negligence, and therefore, liable for the misapplication of the money by the co-executor. He then added; "If the case, stood on this ground alone, it appears to me that it would come within the principle of Lord Shipbrook v. Lord Hinchinbrook, (11 Ves. 252,) Underwood v. Stevens, (1 Meriv. R. 712,) and Longford v. Gascoyne, (11 Ves. 333), in which it is laid down generally, that if an executor, permits his co-executor, to obtain possession of money which he had at any time in his own possession, and afterwards the co-executor misapplies the money, both executors are personally responsible. And, that it would not fall within the case of Bacon v. Bacon (5 Ves. 331,) and that class of cases in which it was held, that the executor, shall be allowed the benefit, of what he has handed over to his co-executor, in the due and ordinary course of the administration of the testator's estate." Mr. Chancellor Kent, in his reasoning in Monell v. Monell (5 John. Ch. R. 283), so far as it goes, seems to repel the distinction between trustees and executors. See also Manahan v. Gibbons, 19 John. R. 427, 440; Sutherland v. Brush, 7 John. Ch. R. 22, 23; Crosse v. Smith, 7 East, R. 256, 257.

by one, and how much by the other trustee, it is reasonable to charge each with the whole.<sup>1</sup> The case has been likened to that of a man wilfully mixing his own corn or money with that of another, where he, who has made the difficulty, shall not be permitted to avail himself of it ; but, if there is any loss, he shall bear it himself.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1283. Perhaps the truest exposition of the principle, which ought in justice to regulate every case of this sort, whether it be the case of executors, or of guardians, or of trustees, is that, which has been adopted by a learned Equity Judge in our own country. It is, that if two executors, guardians, or trustees, join in a receipt for trust money, it is primâ facie, though not absolutely conclusive, evidence, that the money came to the hands of both. But either of them may show by satisfactory proof, that his joining in the receipt was necessary, or merely formal, and that the money was in fact all received by his companion. And, without such satisfactory proof, he ought to be held jointly liable to account to the cestui que trust for the money, upon the fair implication, resulting from his acts, that he did not intend to exclude a joint responsibility.<sup>3</sup>

tee, the trust money is paid over, and comes into the hands of the other, when it might and should have been otherwise controlled or secured by both; there, each of them will be held chargeable for the whole.<sup>1</sup> So, if one trustee should wrongfully suffer the other to detain the trust money a long time in his own hands, without security; or should lend it to the other

Cooke*, 1 McClelland, R. 168.—It is not easy to reconcile the language used in all the cases, as to what acts, directions, and omissions of one trustee shall make him chargeable. Lord Redesdale, in Joy v. Campbell, (1 Sch. & Lefr. 341,) states the doctrine thus. "The distinction seems to be this with respect to a mere signing; that if a receipt be given for the mere purposes of form, then the signing will not charge the person not receiving. But if it be given under circumstances purporting, that the money, though not actually received by both executors, was under the control of both, such a receipt shall charge. And the true question in all those cases seems to have been, whether the money was under the control of both executors. If it was so considered by the person paying the money, then the joining in the receipt by the executor, who did not actually receive it, amounted to a direction to pay his co-executor; for it could have no other meaning. He became responsible for the application of the money, just as if he had received it. But this does not apply to what is done in the discharge of a necessary duty of the executor; for example, an executor living in London, is to pay debts in Suffolk; and remits money to his co-executor to pay these debts. He is considered to do this of necessity. He could not transact business without trusting some persons; and it would be impossible for him to discharge his duty, if he is made responsible, where he remitted to a person, to whom he would have given credit, and would in his own business have remitted money in the same way. It would be the same, were one executor in India, and another in England, the assets being in India, but to be applied in England. There the co-executor is appointed for the purpose of carrying on such transaction; and the executor is not responsible, for he must remit to somebody; and he cannot be wrong, if he remits to the person, in whom the testator himself reposed confidence."

on his simple note ; or should join with the other in lending it to a tradesman upon insufficient security ; in all such cases he will be deemed liable for any loss.<sup>1</sup> A fortiori, one trustee will be liable, who has connived at, or been privy to, an embezzlement of the trust money by another ; or if it is mutually agreed between them, that one shall have the exclusive management of one part of the trust property, and the other of the other part.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1285. In cases of a breach of trust, the question has arisen, in what light the debt created by such breach of trust is to be viewed ; whether it is to be deemed a debt by simple contract, and so binding upon the personal assets only of the trustee, or a debt by specialty. At law, so far as any remedy exists there, the debt is treated as a simple contract debt, even though the trust arises under a deed executed by the trustees, and contains a clause, that no trustee shall be chargeable or accountable for any money arising in execution of the trust, except what he shall actually receive, unless there be some correspondent covenant also on the part of the trustees. For this is a common clause of indemnity in trust deeds ; and the true sense of it is, that the trustees shall not be accountable for more than they receive. They are, [*527] *in fact, accountable for what they actually receive ; but not accountable as under a covenant.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1286. The rule in Courts of Equity is the same. The debt, created by a breach of trust, is there considered but as a simple contract debt, even although circumstances of fraud appear;<sup>1</sup> unless, indeed, there be some acknowledgment of the debt by the trustee under seal. But in cases of this sort, if the specialty creditors exhaust the personal assets, Courts of Equity will let a simple contract creditor of this sort, equally with other simple contract creditors, stand in the place of the specialty creditors, in order to obtain satisfaction out of the real estate of the testator.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1287. Courts of Equity will not only hold trustees responsible for any misapplication of trust property, and any gross negligence or wilful departure from their duty in the management of it; but they will go farther, and in cases requiring such a remedy, they will remove the old trustees, and substitute new ones. Indeed, the appointment of new trustees is an ordinary remedy, enforced by Courts of Equity in all cases, where there is a failure of suitable trustees to perform the trust, either from accident, or from the refusal of the old trustees to act, or from their original or supervenient incapacity to act, or from any other cause.<sup>3</sup>

direct or positive proof of his personal default, upon the mere ground, that the other co-trustees would not act with him; for in a case where a trust is to be executed, if the parties have become so hostile to each other, that they will not act together, the very danger to the due execution of the trust and the due disposition of the trust fund require such an interposition to prevent irreparable mischief.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1290. Before concluding the subject of trusts, it may be proper to say a few words, in regard to such trusts, as either attach to trust property, situate in a foreign country, or are properly to be executed in a foreign country. The considerations, belonging to this branch of Equity Jurisprudence, are not indeed limited to cases of trust; and therefore, we shall here [*529] bring them together in one view, *as, for the most part, they are equally applicable to every subject within the reach of Equitable relief.

§ 1291. The jurisdiction of Courts of Equity, in regard to trusts, as well as to other things, is not confined to cases, where the subject-matter is within the absolute reach of the process of the court, called upon to act upon it; so that it can be directly and finally disposed of, or affected by the decree. If the proper parties are within the reach of the process of the court, it will be sufficient to justify the assertion of full jurisdiction over the subject-matter in controversy.<sup>1</sup> The decrees of Courts of Equity do, indeed, primarily and properly act in personam, and at most, collaterally only in rem.<sup>2</sup> Hence, (as we have already seen,) the specific performance of a contract for the sale of lands, lying in a foreign country, will be decreed in Equity, whenever the party is resident within the jurisdiction of the court.<sup>3</sup> So an injunction will, under the like circumstances, be granted to stay proceedings in a suit in a foreign country.<sup>4</sup>

§ 1292. These are not, however, peculiar or privileged cases for the exercise of jurisdiction; for Courts of Equity will in all other cases, where the proper parties are within the territorial sovereignty, or within the reach of the territorial process, administer full relief, although the property in controversy is actually situate in a foreign country, unless, indeed, *the [*530] relief, which is asked, is of a nature, which the court is incapable of administering. Many instances of this sort may readily be adduced, to illustrate this general

doctrine and its exceptions. Thus, a party resident in England, who is a jointenant of land situate in Ireland, may be decreed to account for the profits of such land in the Court of Chancery in England.<sup>1</sup> But a bill for a partition of lands, situate in Ireland, will not be entertained in the Court of Chancery in England; because (as has been said) it is in the realty, and the court cannot award a commission into Ireland; and a bill for a partition is in the nature of a writ of partition at the Common Law, which lieth not in England for lands in Ireland.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1293. The same doctrine is applied to cases of trusts attached to land in a foreign country. They may be enforced by a Court of Equity in the country, where the trustee is a resident, and to whose process he may rightfully be subjected.<sup>3</sup> It is also applied to cases of mortgages of lands in foreign countries. And a bill to foreclose or redeem such a mortgage may be brought in any Court of Equity in any other country, where the proper parties are resident.<sup>4</sup> It was aptly said by Lord Kenyon, when Master of the Rolls, in a [*531] case then before him; "It *was not much litigated, that the Courts of Equity here have an equal right to interfere with regard to judgments and mortgages upon the lands in a foreign country, as upon lands here. the West Indies. The only distinction is, that this court cannot act upon the land directly; but acts upon the conscience of the person here." And after citing some cases to this effect, he added; "These cases clearly show, that with regard to any contract made in Equity between persons in this country respecting lands in a foreign country, particularly in the British dominions, this court will hold the same jurisdiction, as if they were situate in England."<sup>1</sup>

§ 1294. The same doctrine is applied to cases of frauds, touching contracts or conveyances of real property, situate in a foreign country. Thus, if a rent charge is fraudulently obtained on lands lying in Ireland, a bill to set it aside will be sustained in the Court of Chancery in England, if the defendant is a resident there.<sup>2</sup> Courts of Equity have gone even farther, and have in effect, as between the parties, overhauled the judgments of foreign courts, and even the sales, made under those judgments, where fraud has intervened in those judgments, or a grossly inequitable advantage has been taken. In such cases, they do not indeed disregard such judgments, or directly annul or control them. But they arrive at the equities between the parties, in the same manner, as they would, if the proceedings had *been mere matters in pais, [*532] subject to their general jurisdiction.<sup>3</sup>

to cases, where the lands, though situate abroad, are yet within the general sovereignty of the nation, exerting the equitable jurisdiction; as, for instance, suits in the Chancery of England, in regard to contracts, trusts, frauds, and other matters, touching lands in Ireland, or in the Colonies* of Great Britain. Lord Hardwicke on one occasion said, on this subject; "The different Courts of Equity are held under the same crown, though in different dominions; and, therefore, considering this as a court abroad, the point of jurisdiction is the same, as if in Ireland. And it is certain, where the provision is in England, let the cause of suit arise in Ireland, or the plantations, if the bill be brought in England, as the defendant is here, the courts do agere in personam, and may, by compulsion of the person and process of the court, compel him to do justice."<sup>1</sup> But this language, properly interpreted, was meant to apply only to the case then before the court, which was a suit respecting matters arising in a British Colony, and subjected to judicial decision there. Upon any other interpretation, it would be inconsistent with the principles, upon which Courts of Equity profess to act in matters of jurisdiction.

[*533] * § 1296. Indeed, Lord Hardwicke himself, in another case, where a bill was brought for possession of land in Scotland, and for a discovery of the rents and profits, deeds and writings thereof, and of fraud in obtaining the deeds, asserted the jurisdiction as to the fraud and discovery; and said, that this would have been a good bill, as to fraud and discovery, if the lands had been in France, and the persons were resident here ; for the jurisdiction of the court, as to frauds, is upon the conscience of the party.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1297. The same principle has been asserted by the Supreme Court of the United States in its broadest form ; and it has been held, that, in cases of fraud, of trust, or of contract, the jurisdiction of a Court of Equity is sustainable, wherever the person may be found, although lands, not within the jurisdiction of that court, may be affected by the decree.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1298. Still, it must be borne in mind, that the doctrine is not without limitations and qualifications ; and that to justify the exercise of the jurisdiction in cases touching lands in a foreign country, the relief sought must be of such a nature, as the court is capable of administering in the given case. We have already seen, that a bill for a partition of lands in a foreign country will not be entertained in a Court of Equity, upon the ground, that the relief cannot be given by issuing a commission to such foreign country.<sup>3</sup> Perhaps, a more general reason might be given, founded upon the principles of *international [*534] law ; and that is, that real estate cannot be transferred, or partitioned, or charged, except according to the laws of the country, in which it is situated.

§ 1299. Another case, illustrative of the same qualification, may be put, which has actually passed into judgment. A bill was brought in the English Court of Chancery, for the delivery of the possession of a moiety of land in St. Christopher's, and likewise for an account of the rents and profits thereof. Upon

demurrer, it was held, that the court had no jurisdiction to put persons into possession in a place, where they had their own methods on such occasions, to which the party might have recourse ; for lands in the plantations (it was said) are no more under the jurisdiction of the court, than lands in Scotland ; for it agit in personam only. But the bill, as to the rents and profits, was retained.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1300. The like decision was made in another case, already alluded to, upon a bill brought in the same court for possession of lands in Scotland, and for a discovery of the rents and profits, deeds and writings thereof, and fraud in obtaining the deed. A plea was put in, insisting that the matter was without the jurisdiction of the court. But it was overruled ; and the court said, that it could act upon the person, as to the fraud and discovery.<sup>2</sup> So, where a bequest was made for a charity to be administered in Scotland, the English Court of Chancery declined to take the [*535] administration of it into its *own hands, deeming it proper to be acted on by the courts of Scotland.<sup>3</sup>

CHAPTER XXXIII.

PENALTIES AND FORFEITURES.

§ 1301. HAVING thus gone over some of the principal heads of Trusts, which are cognizable in Equity, we shall now proceed to another important branch of Equity Jurisdiction, to wit, that, which is exercised in cases of PENALTIES AND FORFEITURES for breaches of conditions and covenants. Originally, in all cases of this sort, there was no remedy at law; but the only relief, which could be obtained, was exclusively sought in Courts of Equity. Now, indeed, by the operation of statutes made for the purpose, relief may be obtained at law, both in England and America, in a great variety of cases; although some cases, not within the purview of these statutes, are still cognizable in Equity alone. The original jurisdiction, however, in Equity still remains, notwithstanding the concurrent remedy at law;<sup>1</sup> and, therefore, it properly falls under the present head.

§ 1302. Before entering upon the examination of this subject, it may be well to say a few words in regard to the nature and effect of conditions at the Common Law, as it may help us more distinctly to understand the nature and extent of Equity Jurisdiction in regard to conditions. At law, (and in general the same is equally true in Equity,) if a man undertakes to do a thing, either by way of contract, or by way of condition, and it is practicable to do the thing, he is bound to perform it, or he must suffer the ordinary consequences; that is to say, if it be a matter of contract, he will be liable at law for damages for the non-performance; if it be a condition, then his rights, dependent upon the performance of the condition, will be gone by the non-performance. The difficulty, which arises, is to ascertain, what shall be the effect in cases, where the contract or condition is impossible to be performed; or where it is against law; or where it is repugnant in itself, or to the policy of the law.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1303. In regard to contracts, if they stipulate to do any thing against law, or against the policy of the law, or if they contain repugnant and incompatible provisions, they are treated at the Common Law, as void; for, in the first case, the law will not tolerate any contracts, which defeat its own purposes; and, in the last case, the repugnancy renders it impossible to ascertain the intention of the parties; and until ascertained, it would be absurd to undertake to enforce it. On the other hand, if the parties stipulate for a thing impossible to be done, and known on both sides to be so, it is treated as a void act, and as not intended by the parties to be of any validity.<sup>2</sup> But, if one party only knows it to be impossible, and the other does not, and is imposed upon, the latter may compel the former [*538] to pay him *damages for the imposition.<sup>3</sup> So, if the thing is physically possible, but not physically possible for the party, still it will be binding upon him, if fairly made; for he should have weighed his own ability and strength to do it.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1304. In regard to conditions, they may be divided into four classes; (1.) Those, which are possible at the time of their creation, but afterwards become impossible, either by the act of God, or by the act of the party; (2.) Those, which are impossible at the time of their creation; (3.) Those, which are against law, or public policy, or are mala in se, or mala prohibita; (4.) Those, which are repugnant to the grant or gift, by which they are created, or to which they are annexed.<sup>2</sup> The general rule of the common law in regard to conditions is, that, if they are impossible at the time of their creation, or afterwards become impossible by the act of God, or of the law, or of the party, who is entitled to the benefit of them, (as for example, the feoffor of an estate, or the obligee of a bond;) or if they are contrary to law, or if they are repugnant to the nature of the estate or grant, they are void. But if they are possible at the time, and become subsequently impossible by the act of the party, who is to perform them, then he is treated as in delicto, and the condition is valid and obligatory upon him. But the operation of this rule will, or may, as we shall presently see, under different circumstances of its application, produce directly opposite results.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1305. In the view of the Common Law, a condition is considered as impossible only, when it cannot [*539] *by any human means take effect; as for example, that the obligee shall go from the church of St. Peter, at Westminster, to the church of St. Peter, at Rome, within three hours. But if it be only in a high

able, and part of them are therefore here extracted. He begins by remarking, that there are divers diversities, which are worthy of observation; and then he adds, "First, between a condition annexed to a state in lands or tenements upon a feoffment, gift in tail, &c. and a condition of an obligation, recognizance or such like. For if a condition annexed to lands be possible at the making of the condition, and become impossible by the act of God, yet the state of the feoffee, &c. shall not be avoided. As if a man maketh a feoffment in fee upon condition, that the feoffor shall, within one year, go to the city of Paris, about the affairs of the feoffee, and presently after the feoffor dieth, so as it is impossible by the act of God, that the condition should be performed, yet the estate of the feoffee is become absolute; for though the condition be subsequent to the state, yet there is a precedency before the re-enty, viz. the performance of the condition. And if the land should, by construction of law, be taken from the feoffee, this should work a damage to the feoffee, for that the condition is not performed, which was made for his benefit. And it appeareth by Littleton, that it must not be to the damage of the feoffee; and so it is if the feoffor shall appear in such a court the next term, and before the day the feoffor dieth, the estate of the feoffee is absolute. But if a man be bound by recognizance, or bound with condition, that he shall appear the next term in such a court, and before the day the conusee or obligor dieth, the recognizance or obligation is saved; and the reason of the diversity is, because the state of the land is executed and settled in the feoffee, and cannot be redeemed back again but by matter subsequent, viz. the performance of the condition. But the bond or recognizance is a thing in action, and executory, whereof no advantage can be taken, until there be a default in the obligor; and therefore in all cases, where a condition of a bond, recognizance, &c. is possible at the time of the making of the condition, and before the same can be performed, the condition becomes impossible by the act of God, or of the law, or of the obligee, &c. there the obligation, &c. is saved. But if the condition of a bond, &c. be impossible at the time of the making of the condition, the obligation, &c. is single. And so it is in case of a feoffment in fee with a condition subsequent, that is impossible, the state of the feoffee is absolute; but if the condition precedent be impossible, no state or interest shall grow thereupon." See also Butler's note to Co. Litt. 206 (b) 207 (a). Post, § 1307.

degree improbable, and such as it is beyond the power of the obligee to effect, it is then not deemed impossible.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1306. Conditions of all these various kinds will have a very different operation, where they are conditions precedent, from what they will have, where they are conditions subsequent. Thus, for example, if an estate is granted upon a condition subsequent, that is to say, to be performed after the estate is vested, and the condition is void for any of the causes above stated, there, the estate becomes absolute.<sup>2</sup> But, if the condition is precedent, or to be performed before the estate vests, there, the condition being void, the estate, which depends thereon, is void also, and the grantee shall take nothing by the grant; for he hath no estate, until the condition is performed.<sup>3</sup> Thus, if a feoffment is made to a man in fee simple, on condition, that unless he goes from England to Rome in twenty-four hours, or unless he marries A. before such a day and she dies before that day, or marries the feoffor, or unless he kills another, or in case he aliens in fee, and then, and in every such case, the estate shall be void and determine; in all these cases, the condition is void, or impossible, and being a condition subsequent, the estate is absolute in the feoffee.<sup>4</sup> But if, on the other hand, a grant *be made to a man, that, if [*540] he kills another, or if he goes from England to Rome within twenty-four hours, or if he marries A. before such a day, and before that day she dies, or if he does not alien an estate before such a day, and he has already aliened it, then, and in that event, he shall have an estate in fee ; in all these cases, the condition being void, or impossible, and being a condition precedent, no estate ever vests in the grantee.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1307. On the other hand, if a bond or other obligation be upon a condition, which is impossible, illegal, or repugnant at the time, when it is made, the bond is single, and the obligor is bound to pay it. But if the condition be possible at the time, when it is made, and afterwards becomes impossible by the act of God, or of the law, or of the obligee, there, the bond is saved, and the obligor is not bound to pay it.<sup>2</sup> So, if the condition is in the disjunctive, and gives liberty to do one thing, or another, at the election of the obligor; and both are possible at the time, but one part afterwards, by the act of God, or of the obligee, becomes impossible, the obligation is saved.<sup>1</sup> But, if one part only was possible at the time, then the other part, if possible ought to be performed.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1308. The Roman Law, if it does not entirely coincide with the Common Law on the subject of conditions, is, in many respects, founded on similar considerations. If an impossible condition was annexed to a stipulation, the stipulation was by that law void. *Si impossibilis conditio obligationibus *adjiciatur, [*541] nihil valet stipulatio.*<sup>3</sup> Item; quod leges fieri prohibent, si perpetuam causam (prohibitionis) servaturum est, cessat obligatio.<sup>4</sup> That rule, of course, applied to the case, where the condition constituted a part of the stipulation. Impossibilium nulla obligatio est.<sup>5</sup> Pothier states the doctrine of the Civil Law in the following manner. The condition of a thing impossible, unlawful, or contrary to good morals, under which one promises any thing, renders the act absolutely void, when it lies in fessance (in faciendo), and no obligation springs from it.<sup>6</sup> As if I have promised you a sum of money upon condition, that you make a triangle without angles, or that you shall go naked through the streets.<sup>7</sup>

§ 1309. In another place a distinction is taken in the Roman Law, approaching nearer to that in the Common Law. Impossibilis conditio, cum in faciendum concipitur, stipulationibus obstat; aliter atque, si talis conditio inseratur stipulationi, si in cælum non ascenderit; nam utilis et præsens est, et pecuniam creditam continet.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1310. A condition was accounted impossible in the Roman Law, when it consisted of a thing, of which nature forbids the existence. Impossibilis autem conditio habetur, cui natura impedimento est, quominus existat.<sup>2</sup> But a stipulation, which was not possible to be complied with by the party stipulating, but was possible to another person, was held obligatory. *Si ab eo [*542] stipulatus sim, qui efficere non possit, quum alii possibile sit; jure factam obligationem, Sabinus scribit.*<sup>3</sup> The same principles were still more emphatically expounded in other places in the Digest. Non solum stipulationes impossibili conditione adplicatæ, nullius momenti sunt; sed etiam cæteri quoque contractus, (veluti emptiones, locationes,) impossibili conditione interpositâ, æque nullius momenti sunt. Quia in eâ re, quæ ex duorum pluriumve consensu agitur, omnium voluntas spectetur; quorum, procul dubio, in hujusmodi actu talis cogitatio est, ut nihil agi existiment, apposita eâ conditione, quam sciant esse impossibilem.<sup>4</sup>

§ 1311. From what has been already said, it is obvious, that, if a condition or covenant was possible to be performed, there was an obligation on the party, at the Common Law, to perform it punctiliously. If he failed so to do, it was wholly immaterial, whether the failure was by accident, or mistake, or fraud, or negligence. In either case, his responsibility, dependent upon it, became absolute, and his rights, dependent upon it, became forfeited or extinguished. Thus, for example, if a bond was made with a penalty of £1000, upon condition, that, if £100 were paid to the obligee on or before a certain day, it should be void, if it was not paid at the day from any cause whatsoever, except the fault of the obligee, the obligation became single; and the obligor was compellable at law to pay the whole penalty. So, if an estate was conveyed upon condition, that, if a certain sum of money was paid to the grantee on or before a certain day, it should be void, (which constituted what we now call a mortgage), if *the money was not paid at the day, [*543]. the estate became (as we have seen) at law, absolute.<sup>1</sup> So, (as has been already stated,) if a sale was made of an estate, to be paid for at a particular day, if the money was not paid at the day, the right of the vendee to enforce a performance of the contract at law was extinguished. On the other hand, if the vendor was unable, or neglected at the day appointed to make a conveyance of the estate, the sale, as to him, became utterly incapable of being enforced at law.<sup>2</sup>

doctrines of the common law, as to the effect of conditions and conditional contracts ; and sometimes granting relief upon doctrines wholly at variance with those held at the common law. It may be necessary, therefore, to consider each distinct class of cases separately ; so that the principles, which govern in each, may be more clearly developed.

§ 1313. In the first place, as to relief in cases of penalties annexed to bonds and other instruments, the design of which is to secure the due fulfilment of the principal obligation.<sup>1</sup> The origin of Equity Jurisdiction in cases of this sort is certainly obscure, and not easily traced to any very exact source. It is highly [*544] probable, that relief was first granted upon *the ground of accident, or mistake, or fraud, and was limited to cases, where the breach of the condition was by the non-payment of money at the specified day. In such cases, Courts of Equity seem to have acted upon the ground, that, by compelling the obligor to pay interest during the time of his default, the obligee would be placed in the same situation, as if the principal had been paid at the proper day.<sup>2</sup> They wholly overlooked (as has been said) the consideration, that the failure of payment at that day might be attended with mischievous consequences to the obligee, which (in a rational sense,) never could be cured, by any subsequent payment thereof with the addition of interest.<sup>3</sup> Upon this account doubts have sometimes been ex-

§ 1314. But whatever may be the origin of the doctrine, it has been for a great length of time established and is now expanded, so as to embrace a variety of cases, not only where money is to be paid, but where other things are to be done, and other objects are contracted for. In short, the general principle now adopted is, that, wherever a penalty is inserted merely to secure the performance or enjoyment of a collateral object, the latter is considered as the principal intent of the instrument, and the penalty is deemed only as accessory; and, therefore, as intended only to secure the due performance thereof or the damage really incurred by the non-performance.<sup>2</sup> In every such case, the true *test (generally, if not universally<sup>3</sup>) by [*545] which to ascertain, whether relief can or cannot be had in equity is to consider, whether compensation can be made, or not. If it cannot be made, then Courts of Equity will not interfere. If it can be made, then, if the penalty is to secure the mere payment of money, Courts of Equity will relieve the party upon paying the principal and interest.<sup>4</sup> If it is to secure the performance of some collateral act or undertaking, then Courts of Equity will retain the bill, and will direct an issue of Quantum damnificatus; and when the amount of damages is ascertained by a jury upon the trial of such an

§ 1315. The same doctrine, has been applied by Courts of Equity to cases of leases, where a forfeiture of the estate and an entry for the forfeiture is stipulated for in the lease in case of the non-payment of the rent at the regular days of payment; for the right of entry is deemed to be intended to be a mere security for the payment of the rent.<sup>2</sup> It has also been applied to cases, where a specific performance of contracts is sought to be enforced, and yet the party has not punctually performed the contract on his own part, but has been in default.<sup>3</sup> And in cases of this sort, [*546] *admitting of compensation, there is rarely any distinction allowed in Courts of Equity between conditions precedent, and conditions subsequent; for it has been truly said, that, although the distinction between conditions precedent and conditions subsequent is known and often mentioned in Courts of Equity, yet the prevailing, though not the universal, distinction as to conditions there is between cases, where compen-

It proceeds upon the intelligible principle, that the right of reëntry is intended as a mere security. If it is so intended, there is the same ground for relief, as in case of a forfeiture by non-payment of the money, due upon a mortgage at the day appointed. Nobody doubts the justice and conscientiousness of interfering in the latter case. Why is it not equally proper in the former?

Cas. 89.—There is some diversity in the cases upon the subject of conditions precedent, and conditions subsequent, as acted upon in Chancery. Thus, for example, it was said in Popham v. Bamfield, (1 Vern. 83), that there was a difference between conditions precedent and conditions subsequent; "For precedent conditions must be literally performed; and this court (a Court of Equity) will never vest an estate, where, by reason of a condition precedent, it will not vest at law. But of conditions subsequent, which are to divest an estate, it is otherwise. Yet, of conditions subsequent, there is this difference to be observed; for against all conditions subsequent, this Court (of Equity) cannot, nor ought, to relieve. When the court can in any case compensate the party in damages, for the non-precise performance of the condition, there it is just and equitable to relieve." In the case of Hayard v. Angell, (1 Vern. R. 223,) the Lord Keeper said; "In all cases, where the matter lies in compensation, be the condition precedent or subsequent, he thought there ought to be relief." In Cary v. Bertie, 2 Vern. R. 339, Lord Holt, assisting the Lord Chancellor, said; "In cases of conditions subsequent, that are to defeat an estate, these are not favored in law; and, if the condition becomes impossible by the act of God, the estate shall not be defeated or forfeited. And a Court of Equity may relieve to prevent the divesting of an estate; but cannot relieve to give an estate, that never vested." The Lord Chancellor, in the same case, said; "As the condition was the performance of a collateral act, and did not lie in compensation, he did not see any thing, that could be a just ground for relief, in a Court of Equity." Id. p. 344; S. C. 1 Salk. 231. We shall presently see that in some cases of forfeiture for breach of covenant Courts of Equity will not grant relief upon the principle, that compensation can be made. In Wallis v. Crimes, (1 Ch. Cas. 90,) the Lord Keeper decided, that, wherever a condition precedent was in the nature of a penalty, Equity ought to relieve. See also Bland v. Middleton, 2 Ch. Cas. 1.

money, or his damages, he gets all, that he expected, and all, that in justice he is entitled to.<sup>1</sup> And, notwithstanding the objections, which have been sometimes urged against it, this seems a sufficient foundation for the jurisdiction. In reason, in conscience, in natural equity, there is no ground to say, because a man has stipulated for a penalty in case of his omission to do a particular act, (the real object of the parties being the performance of the act,) that, if he omits to do the act, he shall suffer an enormous loss, wholly disproportionate to the injury to the other party. If it be said, that it is his own folly to have made such a stipulation; it may equally well be said, that the folly of one man cannot authorize gross oppression on the other side. And law, as a science, would be unworthy of the name, if it did not, to some extent, provide the means of preventing the mischiefs of improvidence, rashness, blind confidence, and credulity on one side; and of skill, avarice, cunning, and a gross violation of the principles of morals and conscience, on the other. There are many cases, in which Courts of [*548] *Equity interfere upon mixed grounds of this sort. There is no more intrinsic sanctity in stipulations by contract, than in other solemn acts of parties, which are constantly interfered with by Courts of Equity upon the broad ground of public policy, or the pure principles of natural justice. Where a penalty or forfeiture is designed merely as a security to enforce the principal obligation, it is as much against conscience to allow any party to pervert it to a different and oppressive purpose, as it would be to allow him to substitute another for the principal obligation. The whole system of Equity Jurisprudence proceeds upon the ground, that a party, having a legal right, shall not be permitted to avail himself of it for the purposes of injustice, or fraud, or oppression, or harsh and vindictive injury.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See Newland on Contracts, ch. 17, p. 307 to 311.—Lord Eldon has taken uncommon pains to express his dissatisfaction with the principle of allowing relief in Equity against penalties and forfeitures, and also of the dispensation with a punctilious performance of contracts by Courts of Equity. In Hill v. Barclay, 18 Ves. 59, 60, he used the following language. "The original cases upon this subject are of different sorts. The court has very long held in a great variety of classes of cases, that in the instance of a covenant to pay a sum of money the Court so clearly sees, or rather fancies, the amount of damage, arising from non-payment at the time stipulated, that it takes upon itself to act, as if it was certain, that giving the money five years afterwards with interest, it gives a complete compensation. That doctrine has been recognised, without any doubt, upon leases, with reference to non-payment of rent; upon conditions precedent, as to acts to be done; payment of money in cases of specific performance; and various other instances. But the court has certainly affected to justify that right, which it has assumed, to set aside the legal contracts of men, dispensing with the actual specific performance, upon the notion, that it places them, as near as can be, in the same situation, as if the contract had been with the utmost precision specifically performed. Yet the result of experience is, that, where a man, having contracted to sell his estate, is placed in this situation, that he cannot know, whether he is to receive the price, when it ought to be paid, the very circumstance, that the condition is not performed at the time stipulated, may prove his ruin, notwithstanding all the court can offer as compensation."—See also S. C. 16 Ves. 403, 405. The whole argument of Lord Eldon is, that Courts of Equity decree, what they presume is a compensation, but what in a given case may be no just compensation. Now, in the first place, this is no objection to an interference in all cases, where a complete and adequate compensation can be given; but only to an interference where the facts establish, that there cannot be such a complete and adequate compensation. And this is the very exception, which, theoretically at least, Courts of Equity adopt. In the next place, it is supposed by Lord Eldon (Reynolds v. Pitt, 19 Ves. 140,) that interest for the delay of payment of money is not, or may not, be an adequate compensation for the omission to pay at the time appointed. That objection equally applies to the allowance of interest at demurrer, it was held, that the court had no jurisdiction to put persons into possession in a place, where they had their own methods on such occasions, to which the party might have recourse; for lands in the plantations (it was said) are no more under the jurisdiction of the court, than lands in Scotland; for it agit in personam only. But the bill, as to the rents and profits, was retained.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1300. The like decision was made in another case, already alluded to, upon a bill brought in the same court for possession of lands in Scotland, and for a discovery of the rents and profits, deeds and writings thereof, and fraud in obtaining the deed. A plea was put in, insisting that the matter was without the jurisdiction of the court. But it was overruled; and the court said, that it could act upon the person, as to the fraud and discovery.<sup>2</sup> So, where a bequest was made for a charity to be administered in Scotland, the English Court of Chancery declined to take the [*535] administration of it into its *own hands, deeming it proper to be acted on by the courts of Scotland.<sup>3</sup>

CHAPTER XXXIII.

PENALTIES AND FORFEITURES.

§ 1301. HAVING thus gone over some of the principal heads of Trusts, which are cognizable in Equity, we shall now proceed to another important branch of Equity Jurisdiction, to wit, that, which is exercised in cases of PENALTIES AND FORFEITURES for breaches of conditions and covenants. Originally, in all cases of this sort, there was no remedy at law; but the only relief, which could be obtained, was exclusively sought in Courts of Equity. Now, indeed, by the operation of statutes made for the purpose, relief may be obtained at law, both in England and America, in a great variety of cases; although some cases, not within the purview of these statutes, are still cognizable in Equity alone. The original jurisdiction, however, in Equity still remains, notwithstanding the concurrent remedy at law;<sup>1</sup> and, therefore, it properly falls under the present head.

§ 1302. Before entering upon the examination of this subject, it may be well to say a few words in regard to the nature and effect of conditions at the Common Law, as it may help us more distinctly to understand the nature and extent of Equity Jurisdiction in regard to conditions. At law, (and in general the same is equally true in Equity,) if a man undertakes to do a thing, either by way of contract, or by way of condition, and it is practicable to do the thing, he is bound to perform it, or he must suffer the ordinary consequences; that is to say, if it be a matter of contract, he will be liable at law for damages for the non-performance; if it be a condition, then his rights, dependent upon the performance of the condition, will be gone by the non-performance. The difficulty, which arises, is to ascertain, what shall be the effect in cases, where the contract or condition is impossible to be performed; or where it is against law; or where it is repugnant in itself, or to the policy of the law.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1303. In regard to contracts, if they stipulate to do any thing against law, or against the policy of the law, or if they contain repugnant and incompatible provisions, they are treated at the Common Law, as void; for, in the first case, the law will not tolerate any contracts, which defeat its own purposes; and, in the last case, the repugnancy renders it impossible to ascertain the intention of the parties; and until ascertained, it would be absurd to undertake to enforce it. On the other hand, if the parties stipulate for a thing impossible to be done, and known on both sides to be so, it is treated as a void act, and as not intended by the parties to be of any validity.<sup>2</sup> But, if one party only knows it to be impossible, and the other does not, and is imposed upon, the latter may compel the former [*538] to pay him *damages for the imposition.<sup>3</sup> So, if the thing is physically possible, but not physically possible for the party, still it will be binding upon

him, if fairly made; for he should have weighed his own ability and strength to do it.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1304. In regard to conditions, they may be divided into four classes; (1.) Those, which are possible at the time of their creation, but afterwards become impossible, either by the act of God, or by the act of the party; (2.) Those, which are impossible at the time of their creation; (3.) Those, which are against law, or public policy, or are mala in se, or mala prohibita; (4.) Those, which are repugnant to the grant or gift, by which they are created, or to which they are annexed.<sup>2</sup> The general rule of the common law in regard to conditions is, that, if they are impossible at the time of their creation, or afterwards become impossible by the act of God, or of the law, or of the party, who is entitled to the benefit of them, (as for example, the feoffor of an estate, or the obligee of a bond;) or if they are contrary to law, or if they are repugnant to the nature of the estate or grant, they are void. But if they are possible at the time, and become subsequently impossible by the act of the party, who is to perform them, then he is treated as in delicto, and the condition is valid and obligatory upon him. But the operation of this rule will, or may, as we shall presently see, under different circumstances of its application, produce directly opposite results.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1305. In the view of the Common Law, a condition is considered as impossible only, when it cannot [*539] *by any human means take effect; as for example, that the obligee shall go from the church of St. Peter, at Westminster, to the church of St. Peter, at Rome, within three hours. But if it be only in a high

able, and part of them are therefore here extracted. He begins by remarking, that there are divers diversities, which are worthy of observation; and then he adds, "First, between a condition annexed to a state in lands or tenements upon a feoffment, gift in tail, &c. and a condition of an obligation, recognizance or such like. For if a condition annexed to lands be possible at the making of the condition, and become impossible by the act of God, yet the state of the feoffee, &c. shall not be avoided. As if a man maketh a feoffment in fee upon condition, that the feoffor shall, within one year, go to the city of Paris, about the affairs of the feoffee, and presently after the feoffor dieth, so as it is impossible by the act of God, that the condition should be performed, yet the estate of the feoffee is become absolute; for though the condition be subsequent to the state, yet there is a precedency before the re-enty, viz. the performance of the condition. And if the land should, by construction of law, be taken from the feoffee, this should work a damage to the feoffee, for that the condition is not performed, which was made for his benefit. And it appeareth by Littleton, that it must not be to the damage of the feoffee; and so it is if the feoffor shall appear in such a court the next term, and before the day the feoffor dieth, the estate of the feoffee is absolute. But if a man be bound by recognizance, or bound with condition, that he shall appear the next term in such a court, and before the day the conusee or obligor dieth, the recognizance or obligation is saved; and the reason of the diversity is, because the state of the land is executed and settled in the feoffee, and cannot be redeemed back again but by matter subsequent, viz. the performance of the condition. But the bond or recognizance is a thing in action, and executory, whereof no advantage can be taken, until there be a default in the obligor; and therefore in all cases, where a condition of a bond, recognizance, &c. is possible at the time of the making of the condition, and before the same can be performed, the condition becomes impossible by the act of God, or of the law, or of the obligee, &c. there the obligation, &c. is saved. But if the condition of a bond, &c. be impossible at the time of the making of the condition, the obligation, &c. is single. And so it is in case of a feoffment in fee with a condition subsequent, that is impossible, the state of the feoffee is absolute; but if the condition precedent be impossible, no state or interest shall grow thereupon." See also Butler's note to Co. Litt. 206 (b) 207 (a). Post, § 1307.

degree improbable, and such as it is beyond the power of the obligee to effect, it is then not deemed impossible.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1306. Conditions of all these various kinds will have a very different operation, where they are conditions precedent, from what they will have, where they are conditions subsequent. Thus, for example, if an estate is granted upon a condition subsequent, that is to say, to be performed after the estate is vested, and the condition is void for any of the causes above stated, there, the estate becomes absolute.<sup>2</sup> But, if the condition is precedent, or to be performed before the estate vests, there, the condition being void, the estate, which depends thereon, is void also, and the grantee shall take nothing by the grant; for he hath no estate, until the condition is performed.<sup>3</sup> Thus, if a feoffment is made to a man in fee simple, on condition, that unless he goes from England to Rome in twenty-four hours, or unless he marries A. before such a day and she dies before that day, or marries the feoffor, or unless he kills another, or in case he aliens in fee, and then, and in every such case, the estate shall be void and determine; in all these cases, the condition is void, or impossible, and being a condition subsequent, the estate is absolute in the feoffee.<sup>4</sup> But if, on the other hand, a grant *be made to a man, that, if [*540] he kills another, or if he goes from England to Rome within twenty-four hours, or if he marries A. before

such a day, and before that day she dies, or if he does not alien an estate before such a day, and he has already aliened it, then, and in that event, he shall have an estate in fee; in all these cases, the condition being void, or impossible, and being a condition precedent, no estate ever vests in the grantee.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1307. On the other hand, if a bond or other obligation be upon a condition, which is impossible, illegal, or repugnant at the time, when it is made, the bond is single, and the obligor is bound to pay it. But if the condition be possible at the time, when it is made, and afterwards becomes impossible by the act of God, or of the law, or of the obligee, there, the bond is saved, and the obligor is not bound to pay it.<sup>2</sup> So, if the condition is in the disjunctive, and gives liberty to do one thing, or another, at the election of the obligor; and both are possible at the time, but one part afterwards, by the act of God, or of the obligee, becomes impossible, the obligation is saved.<sup>1</sup> But, if one part only was possible at the time, then the other part, if possible ought to be performed.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1308. The Roman Law, if it does not entirely coincide with the Common Law on the subject of conditions, is, in many respects, founded on similar considerations. If an impossible condition was annexed to a stipulation, the stipulation was by that law void. *Si impossibilis conditio obligationibus *adjiciatur, [*541] nihil valet stipulatio.*<sup>3</sup> Item; quod leges fieri prohibent, si perpetuam causam (prohibitionis) servaturum est, cessat obligatio.<sup>4</sup> That rule, of course, applied to the case, where the condition constituted a part of the stipulation. Impossibilium nulla obligatio est.<sup>5</sup> Pothier states the doctrine of the Civil Law in the following manner. The condition of a thing impossible, unlawful, or contrary to good morals, under which one promises any thing, renders the act absolutely void, when it lies in fessance (in faciendo), and no obligation springs from it.<sup>6</sup> As if I have promised you a sum of money upon condition, that you make a triangle without angles, or that you shall go naked through the streets.<sup>7</sup>

§ 1309. In another place a distinction is taken in the Roman Law, approaching nearer to that in the Common Law. Impossibilis conditio, cum in faciendum concipitur, stipulationibus obstat; aliter atque, si talis conditio inseratur stipulationi, si in cælum non ascenderit; nam utilis et præsens est, et pecuniam creditam continet.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1310. A condition was accounted impossible in the Roman Law, when it consisted of a thing, of which nature forbids the existence. Impossibilis autem conditio habetur, cui natura impedimento est, quominus existat.<sup>2</sup> But a stipulation, which was not possible to be complied with by the party stipulating, but was possible to another person, was held obligatory. *Si ab eo [*542] stipulatus sim, qui efficere *non possit, quum alii possibile sit; jure factam obligationem, Sabinus scribit.*<sup>3</sup> The same principles were still more emphatically expounded in other places in the Digest. Non solum stipulationes impossibili conditione adplicatæ, nullius momenti sunt; sed etiam cæteri quoque contractus, (veluti emptiones, locationes,) impossibili conditione interposita, æque nullius momenti sunt. Quia in eâ re, quæ ex duorum pluriumve consensu agitur, omnium voluntas spectetur; quorum, procul dubio, in hujusmodi actu talis cogitatio est, ut nihil agi existiment, apposita eâ conditione, quam sciant esse impossibilem.<sup>4</sup>

at the Common Law, to perform it punctiliously. If he failed so to do, it was wholly immaterial, whether the failure was by accident, or mistake, or fraud, or negligence. In either case, his responsibility, dependent upon it, became absolute, and his rights, dependent upon it, became forfeited or extinguished. Thus, for example, if a bond was made with a penalty of £1000, upon condition, that, if £100 were paid to the obligee on or before a certain day, it should be void, if it was not paid at the day from any cause whatsoever, except the fault of the obligee, the obligation became single; and the obligor was compellable at law to pay the whole penalty. So, if an estate was conveyed upon condition, that, if a certain sum of money was paid to the grantee on or before a certain day, it should be void, (which constituted what we now call a mortgage), if *the money was not paid at the day, [*543] the estate became (as we have seen) at law, absolute.<sup>1</sup> So, (as has been already stated,) if a sale was made of an estate, to be paid for at a particular day, if the money was not paid at the day, the right of the vendee to enforce a performance of the contract at law was extinguished. On the other hand, if the vendor was unable, or neglected at the day appointed to make a conveyance of the estate, the sale, as to him, became utterly incapable of being enforced at law.<sup>2</sup>

doctrines of the common law, as to the effect of conditions and conditional contracts ; and sometimes granting relief upon doctrines wholly at variance with those held at the common law. It may be necessary, therefore, to consider each distinct class of cases separately ; so that the principles, which govern in each, may be more clearly developed.

§ 1313. In the first place, as to relief in cases of penalties annexed to bonds and other instruments, the design of which is to secure the due fulfilment of the principal obligation.<sup>1</sup> The origin of Equity Jurisdiction in cases of this sort is certainly obscure, and not easily traced to any very exact source. It is highly [*544] probable, that relief was first granted upon *the ground of accident, or mistake, or fraud, and was limited to cases, where the breach of the condition was by the non-payment of money at the specified day. In such cases, Courts of Equity seem to have acted upon the ground, that, by compelling the obligor to pay interest during the time of his default, the obligee would be placed in the same situation, as if the principal had been paid at the proper day.<sup>2</sup> They wholly overlooked (as has been said) the consideration, that the failure of payment at that day might be attended with mischievous consequences to the obligee, which (in a rational sense,) never could be cured, by any subsequent payment thereof with the addition of interest.<sup>3</sup> Upon this account doubts have sometimes been expressed, as to the solidity of the foundation, on which the doctrine of affording relief in such cases rests.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1314. But whatever may be the origin of the doctrine, it has been for a great length of time established and is now expanded, so as to embrace a variety of cases, not only where money is to be paid, but where other things are to be done, and other objects are contracted for. In short, the general principle now adopted is, that, wherever a penalty is inserted merely to secure the performance or enjoyment of a collateral object, the latter is considered as the principal intent of the instrument, and the penalty is deemed only as accessory; and, therefore, as intended only to secure the due performance thereof or the damage really incurred by the non-performance.<sup>2</sup> In every such case, the true test (generally, if not universally<sup>3</sup>) by [*545] which to ascertain, whether relief can or cannot be had in equity is to consider, whether compensation can be made, or not. If it cannot be made, then Courts of Equity will not interfere. If it can be made, then, if the penalty is to secure the mere payment of money, Courts of Equity will relieve the party upon paying the principal and interest.<sup>4</sup> If it is to secure the performance of some collateral act or undertaking, then Courts of Equity will retain the bill, and will direct an issue of Quantum damnificatus; and when the amount of damages is ascertained by a jury upon the trial of such an

<sup>2</sup> In Hill v. Barclay, (18 Ves. 58,) Lord Eldon, speaking of the relief given in cases of non-payment of rent, said; It was "upon a principle long acknowledged in this court, but utterly without foundation."—Why, without foundation? It proceeds upon the intelligible principle, that the right of reëntury is intended as a mere security. If it is so intended, there is the same ground for relief, as in case of a forfeiture by non-payment of the money, due upon a mortgage at the day appointed. Nobody doubts the justice and conscientiousness of interfering in the latter case. Why is it not equally proper in the former?

Cas. 89.—There is some diversity in the cases upon the subject of conditions precedent, and conditions subsequent, as acted upon in Chancery. Thus, for example, it was said in Popham v. Bamfield, (1 Vern. 83), that there was a difference between conditions precedent and conditions subsequent; "For precedent conditions must be literally performed; and this court (a Court of Equity) will never vest an estate, where, by reason of a condition precedent, it will not vest at law. But of conditions subsequent, which are to divest an estate, it is otherwise. Yet, of conditions subsequent, there is this difference to be observed; for against all conditions subsequent, this Court (of Equity) cannot, nor ought, to relieve. When the court can in any case compensate the party in damages, for the non-precise performance of the condition, there it is just and equitable to relieve." In the case of Hayard v. Angell, (1 Vern. R. 223,) the Lord Keeper said; "In all cases, where the matter lies in compensation, be the condition precedent or subsequent, he thought there ought to be relief." In Cary v. Bertie, 2 Vern. R. 339, Lord Holt, assisting the Lord Chancellor, said; "In cases of conditions subsequent, that are to defeat an estate, these are not favored in law; and, if the condition becomes impossible by the act of God, the estate shall not be defeated or forfeited. And a Court of Equity may relieve to prevent the divesting of an estate; but cannot relieve to give an estate, that never vested." The Lord Chancellor, in the same case, said; "As the condition was the performance of a collateral act, and did not lie in compensation, he did not see any thing, that could be a just ground for relief, in a Court of Equity." Id. p. 344; S. C. 1 Salk. 231. We shall presently see that in some cases of forfeiture for breach of covenant Courts of Equity will not grant relief upon the principle, that compensation can be made. In Wallis v. Crimes, (1 Ch. Cas. 90,) the Lord Keeper decided, that, wherever a condition precedent was in the nature of a penalty, Equity ought to relieve. See also Bland v. Middleton, 2 Ch. Cas. 1.

money, or his damages, he gets all, that he expected, and all, that in justice he is entitled to.<sup>1</sup> And, notwithstanding the objections, which have been sometimes urged against it, this seems a sufficient foundation for the jurisdiction. In reason, in conscience, in natural equity, there is no ground to say, because a man has stipulated for a penalty in case of his omission to do a particular act, (the real object of the parties being the performance of the act,) that, if he omits to do the act, he shall suffer an enormous loss, wholly disproportionate to the injury to the other party. If it be said, that it is his own folly to have made such a stipulation; it may equally well be said, that the folly of one man cannot authorize gross oppression on the other side. And law, as a science, would be unworthy of the name, if it did not, to some extent, provide the means of preventing the mischiefs of improvidence, rashness, blind confidence, and credulity on one side; and of skill, avarice, cunning, and a gross violation of the principles of morals and conscience, on the other. There are many cases, in which Courts of [*548] *Equity interfere upon mixed grounds of this sort. There is no more intrinsic sanctity in stipulations by contract, than in other solemn acts of parties, which are constantly interfered with by Courts of Equity upon the broad ground of public policy, or the pure principles of natural justice. Where a penalty or forfeiture is designed merely as a security to enforce the principal obligation, it is as much against conscience to allow any party to pervert it to a different and oppressive purpose, as it would be to allow him to substitute another for the principal obligation. The whole system of Equity Jurisprudence proceeds upon the ground, that a party, having a legal right, shall not be permitted to avail himself of it for the purposes of injustice, or fraud, or oppression, or harsh and vindictive injury.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See Newland on Contracts, ch. 17, p. 307 to 311.—Lord Eldon has taken uncommon pains to express his dissatisfaction with the principle of allowing relief in Equity against penalties and forfeitures, and also of the dispensation with a punctilious performance of contracts by Courts of Equity. In Hill v. Barclay, 18 Ves. 59, 60, he used the following language. "The original cases upon this subject are of different sorts. The court has very long held in a great variety of classes of cases, that in the instance of a covenant to pay a sum of money the Court so clearly sees, or rather fancies, the amount of damage, arising from non-payment at the time stipulated, that it takes upon itself to act, as if it was certain, that giving the money five years afterwards with interest, it gives a complete compensation. That doctrine has been recognised, without any doubt, upon leases, with reference to non-payment of rent; upon conditions precedent, as to acts to be done; payment of money in cases of specific performance; and various other instances. But the court has certainly affected to justify that right, which it has assumed, to set aside the legal contracts of men, dispensing with the actual specific performance, upon the notion, that it places them, as near as can be, in the same situation, as if the contract had been with the utmost precision specifically performed. Yet the result of experience is, that, where a man, having contracted to sell his estate, is placed in this situation, that he cannot know, whether he is to receive the price, when it ought to be paid, the very circumstance, that the condition is not performed at the time stipulated, may prove his ruin, notwithstanding all the court can offer as compensation."—See also S. C. 16 Ves. 403, 405. The whole argument of Lord Eldon is, that Courts of Equity decree, what they presume is a compensation, but what in a given case may be no just compensation. Now, in the first place, this is no objection to an interference in all cases, where a complete and adequate compensation can be given; but only to an interference where the facts establish, that there cannot be such a complete and adequate compensation. And this is the very exception, which, theoretically at least, Courts of Equity adopt. In the next place, it is supposed by Lord Eldon (Reynolds v. Pitt, 19 Ves. 140,) that interest for the delay of payment of money is not, or may not, be an adequate compensation for the omission to pay at the time appointed. That objection equally applies to the allowance of interest at law, as a compensation. It may, in a given case, be inadequate to the particular loss sustained by the creditor. Yet it is uniformly acted upon, without hesitation; and the creditor will not be permitted to recover a greater compensation. The reason is, that interest is a certain and general rule adapted to ordinary circumstances. And it would be inconvenient to go into a particular examination of all the circumstances of each case, in order to ascertain the loss or injury. The general rule of interest is adopted, because it meets the ordinary grievance, and compensates for it. All general rules must work occasional mischiefs. Besides; there would be injustice in compelling a debtor to pay losses of a collateral nature, not embraced in, or connected with his own contract, over which he could have no control, and which might be imputable to the rashness, or improvidence, or want of skill, of his creditor. No system of laws could provide for all the remote consequences of the non-performance of any act. Human justice must stop, as it ought, at the direct, and immediate, and necessary consequences of acts and omissions, and not aim beyond a reasonable indemnification for them. At least, the Common Law of England, equally with Equity, has adopted this as the basis of its usual remedial justice.

§ 1316. a. The same principle of general justice is applied in favor of the party entitled to the security of the penalty, wherever the other party has unreasonably deprived him of his right to enforce it, until it is no longer adequate to secure his rights. Hence it is, that Courts of Equity will decree the obligee of a bond interest beyond the penalty of the bond, where, by unfounded and protracted litigation, the obligor has prevented the obligee from prosecuting his claim at law for a length of time, which has deprived the latter of his legal rights, when they might otherwise have been made available at law. In such cases Courts of Equity do no more than supply and administer, within their own jurisdiction, a substitute for the original legal rights of the obligee, of which he has been unjustifiably deprived by the misconduct of the obligor.<sup>1</sup> So,

if a mortgagor has given a bond with a penalty, as well as a mortgage for the security of a debt, although the creditor suing on the bond can recover no more than the penalty, even when the interest due thereon exceeds it; yet if he sues on the mortgage, Courts of Equity will decree him all the interest due upon the debt, although it exceeds the penalty; for the bond is but a collateral security.<sup>1</sup> And, in such a case, it will not make any difference, that the mortgage is given by a surety.<sup>2</sup>

*§ 1317. It is not improbable, that Courts [*549] of Equity adopted this doctrine of relief in cases of penalties and forfeitures from the Roman Law, where it is found regularly unfolded, and sustained upon the clear principles of natural justice. The Roman Law took notice, not only of conditions strictly so called, but also of clauses of nullity, and penal clauses. The *former were those, in which it was agreed, that [*550] a covenant should be null or void in a certain event; the latter were those, where a penalty was added to a contract for nonperformance of that, which was stipulated.<sup>3</sup> The general doctrine of that law was, that clauses of nullity and penal clauses were not to be executed according to the rigor of their terms. And, therefore, covenants were not of course dissolved, nor forfeitures or penalties positively incurred, if there was not a punctilious performance at the very time fixed by the contract. But the matter might be required to be submitted to the discretion of the proper judicial tribunal to decide upon it according to all the circumstances of the case, and the nature and objects of the clauses.<sup>1</sup> Indeed, penalties were in that law treated altogether, as in reason and justice they ought to be, as a mere security for the performance of the principal obligation.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1318. But we are carefully to distinguish between cases of penalties, strictly so called, and cases of liquidated damages. The latter properly occur, when the parties have agreed, that, in case one party shall do a stipulated act, or omit to do it, the other party shall receive a certain sum, as the just, appropriate, and conventional amount of the damages sustained by such act or omission. In cases of this sort, Courts of Equity will not interfere to grant relief; but will deem the parties entitled to fix their own measure of damages;<sup>3</sup> provided always, that the damages do not assume the character of gross extravagance, or of wanton and unreasonable disproportion to the nature or extent of the injury. But, on the other hand, Courts of Equity will not suffer their jurisdiction to be evaded merely by the fact, that the parties have called a sum [*551] damages, *which is in fact and in intent a penalty; or because they have designedly used language and inserted provisions, which are in their nature penal, and yet have endeavored to cover up their objects under other disguises. The principal difficulty in cases of this sort is to ascertain, when the sum stated is in fact designed to be nomine pænæ, and when it is properly designed, as liquidated damages.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1319. In the next place, in regard to cases of forfeitures. It is a universal rule in Equity never to enforce either a penalty or a forfeiture.<sup>2</sup> Therefore, Courts of Equity will never aid in the divesting of an estate for a breach of a covenant on a condition subsequent;<sup>3</sup> although they will often interfere to prevent the divesting of an estate for a breach of a covenant or condition.<sup>4</sup>

§ 1320. But there seems to be a distinction taken in Equity between penalties and forfeitures. In the former, relief is always given, if compensation can be made; for it is deemed a mere security.<sup>5</sup> In the latter, although compensation can be made, relief is not always given. It is true, that the rule has been often laid down, and was formerly so held, that in all cases of penalties and forfeitures (at least upon a condition subsequent) Courts of Equity would relieve against the breach of the condition and the forfeiture, if *compensation could be made, even, although [*552] the act or omission was voluntary.<sup>6</sup> The same doc-

§ 1321. But the doctrine at present maintained seems far more narrow. It is admitted, indeed, that, where the condition or forfeiture is merely a security for the nonpayment of money, (such as a right of re-entry upon nonpayment of rent,) there, it is to be treated as a mere security, and in the nature of a penalty, and is accordingly relievable.<sup>2</sup> But if the forfeiture arises from the breach of other covenants of a collateral nature; as, for example, of a covenant to repair; there, although compensation might be ascertained, and made upon an issue quantum damnificatus; yet it has been held, that Courts of Equity ought not to relieve, but should leave the parties to their remedy at law.<sup>3</sup>

certain and fixed; in the other case, the damages are uncertain and unliquidated. But in the case of a penalty such a distinction is wholly repudiated; because the penalty is treated as a security. The forfeiture is also treated as a security in cases of nonpayment of rent. And in other cases of covenant, if the damages are capable of being ascertained by a jury, and will, in a legal and equitable sense, be an adequate compensation, the reason is not very clear, why, under such circumstances, the forfeiture may not be equally treated as a security for such damages. The most probable ground for the distinction is, what has been judicially hinted at, that it is a dangerous jurisdiction; that very little information upon it can be collected from the ancient cases, and scarcely any from those in modern times; that it was originally adopted in cases of penalties and forfeitures for the breach of pecuniary covenants and conditions upon unsound principles; and, therefore, that it ought not to be extended, as it rarely works real compensation, or places the parties upon an equality and mutuality of rights and remedies.<sup>1</sup> It has been further insisted that the authorities do not *bear out the proposition, that Courts [*554] of Equity will, in cases of forfeiture for the breach of any covenant, give relief upon the principle of compensation.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1323. Indeed, the doctrine seems now to be asserted in England, that in all cases of forfeiture for the breach of any covenant, other than a covenant to pay rent, no relief ought to be granted in Equity, unless upon the ground of accident, mistake, fraud, or surprise, although the breach is capable of a just compensation.<sup>2</sup> Whether this narrow limitation of the doctrine is defensible upon the original principles, which seem to have guided Courts of Equity in interfering in cases of penalties and forfeitures, viz. that they are to be treated as mere securities for the performance of the stipulated acts, and not strictly as conditions to limit and determine rights and estates, ex rigore juris, according to the Common Law, may, perhaps, admit of serious question.<sup>3</sup> But in the present state of the authorities, this restricted doctrine may be affirmed to possess a general, if not a conclusive, weight in the English Courts of Equity.

§ 1324. Be this as it may, it is clearly established, that Courts of Equity will not interfere in cases of

<sup>3</sup> Suppose a mortgage were made upon a condition to perform certain covenants, and, among other things, a covenant to repair; and there should be a breach of the covenant; would a Court of Equity refuse to allow the mortgagor to redeem upon making full compensation? In the case of a bond with condition to repair, would a Court of Equity refuse after a breach to interfere, to prevent the recovery of the penalty, if compensation could be made?

forfeiture for the breach of covenants and conditions, where there cannot be any just compensation decreed for the breach. Thus, for example, in the case of a forfeiture for the breach of a covenant, not to assign a lease without license, or to keep leasehold premises insured, or to renew a lease within a given time, no relief will be given; for they admit of no just compensation or clear estimate of damages.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1325. It is upon grounds somewhat similar, aided also by considerations of public policy, and the necessity of a prompt performance, in order to accomplish public or corporate objects, that Courts of Equity, in cases of the noncompliance by stockholders with the terms of payment of their instalments of stock at the times prescribed, by which a forfeiture of their shares is incurred under the by-laws of the institution, have refused to interfere by granting relief against such forfeiture.<sup>2</sup> The same rule is, for the same reasons, applied to cases of subscription to government loans, where the shares of the stock are agreed to be forfeited by the want of a punctual compliance with the terms of the loan, as to the time and mode and place of payment.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1326. Where any penalty or forfeiture is imposed by statute upon the doing or omission of a certain act, there, Courts of Equity will not interfere to mitigate the penalty or forfeiture, if incurred; for it would be in contravention of the direct expression of the legislative will.<sup>1</sup> The same principle is generally (perhaps not universally) applied to cases of forfeiture founded upon the customs of manors, and the general customs of certain kinds of estates, such as copyholds; for in all these cases, the forfeiture is treated as properly founded upon some positive law, or some customary regulations, which had their origin in sound public policy, and ought to be enforced for the general benefit.<sup>2</sup>

CHAPTER XXXIV.

INFANTS.

§ 1327. WE shall next proceed to the consideration of another portion of the exclusive jurisdiction of Courts of Equity, partly arising from the peculiar relation and personal character of the parties, who are the proper objects of it, and partly arising from a mixture of public and private trusts of a large and interesting nature. The jurisdiction, here alluded to, is that, which is exercised over the persons and property of Infants, Idiots, Lunatics, and Married Women.

§ 1328. And in the first place as to the jurisdiction over the persons and property of INFANTS. The origin of this jurisdiction in Chancery (for to that Court it is practically confined, as the Court of Exchequer, as a Court of Equity, does not seem entitled to exercise it)<sup>1</sup> is very obscure, and has been a matter of much juridical discussion. The common manner of accounting for it has been thought by a learned writer to be quite unsatisfactory.<sup>1</sup> It is, that the king is bound by the law, of common right, to defend his subjects, their goods, chattels, lands, and tenements; and, therefore, in the law, every royal subject is taken into the king's protection. For which reason an idiot or lunatic, who cannot defend or govern himself, or order his lands, tenements, goods, or chattels, the king, of right, as parens patriæ, ought to have in his custody, and rule him and them.<sup>2</sup> And, for the same reason, the king, as parens patriæ, ought to have the care of the persons and property of infants, where they have no other guardian of either.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1329. The objection urged against this reasoning is, that it does not sufficiently account for the existing state of the jurisdiction; for there is a marked distinction between the jurisdiction in cases of infancy, and that in cases of lunacy and idiocy. The former is exercised by the Chancellor in the Court of Chancery, as a part of the general delegation of the authority of the crown, virtute officii, without any special warrant; whereas the latter is exercised by him by a separate commission under the sign manual of the king, and not otherwise.<sup>4</sup> It is not safe or correct, therefore, to reason from one to the other, either as to the nature of the jurisdiction, or as to the practice under it.<sup>5</sup>

§ 1330. An attempt has also been made to assign a different origin to the jurisdiction, and to sustain it, by considering guardianship, as in the nature of a trust; and that, therefore, the jurisdiction has a broad and general foundation, since trusts are the peculiar objects of equity jurisdiction.<sup>1</sup> But this has been thought to be an overstrained refinement; for, although guardianship may properly be denominated a trust in the common acceptance of the term; yet it is not so in the technical sense, in which the term is used by lawyers, or in the Court of Chancery. In the latter, trusts are invariably applied to property, (and especially to real property) and not to persons.<sup>2</sup> It may be added, that guardianship, considered as a trust, would equally be within the jurisdiction of all the Courts of Equity; whereas in England it is limited to the Chancellor, sitting in Chancery.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1331. An attempt has also been made to derive the jurisdiction from the writ of Ravishment of Ward and the writ De Recto de Custodia at the Common Law, but with as little success. For, independently of the consideration, that these writs were returnable into a Court of Common Law, it is not easy to see, how a jurisdiction, to decide between contending competitors for the right of guardianship, can establish a general authority in the Court of Chancery to appoint a guardian in all cases, where one happens to be wanting.<sup>4</sup>

§ 1332. It has been further suggested that the appointment of guardians in cases, where the infants had none, belonged to the Chancellor, in the Court [*560] of Chancery before the erection of the Court of Wards; and that, upon the abolition of that Court, it resulted to the king in his Court of Chancery, as the general protector of all the infants in the kingdom.<sup>1</sup> But this (it has been objected) is rather an assertion, than a proof of the jurisdiction; for it is difficult to trace it back to any such ancient period. The earliest instance, which has been found, of the actual exercise of the jurisdiction by the Chancellor to appoint a guardian, upon petition without bill, is said to be that of Hampden, in the year 1696. Since that period, indeed, it has been constantly exercised without its once being called in question. Mr. Hargrave has not hesitated to say, that, although the jurisdiction is now unquestionable, yet it seems to have been an usurpation, for which the best excuse was, that the case was not otherwise sufficiently provided for.<sup>1</sup> He has added, that although the care of Infants, as well as of Idiots and Lunatics, should be admitted to belong to the crown; yet that something farther is necessary to prove, that the Chancellor is the person constitutionally delegated to act for the King.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Ibid.; 3 Black. Comm. 426, 427; Morgan v. Dillon, 9 Mod. R. 139, 140; 1 Woodes. Lect. 17, p. 463.—Mr. Fonblanque has upon this subject remarked; “From this it might be inferred, that the jurisdiction of the Court of Wards and Liveries was protective of infants in general; whereas, the statute of Henry VIII., by which the Court of Wards was erected, expressly confines the jurisdiction of that court to wards of the crown. And it is scarcely necessary to remark, that, when a new court is erected, it can have no other jurisdiction than that, which is expressly conferred; for a new court cannot prescribe. 4 Inst. 200. But if the statute 32 H. VIII. does not confer a general jurisdiction in the case of infants, but merely a particular jurisdiction as to wards of the court, it should seem to follow, that the general superintendence of the Crown over infants, as pater patriæ, if it existed at Common Law, was not affected by the statute, except in those cases, to which it expressly refers. What those cases were, are particularly enumerated by the statute, and also in the instructions to the court of wards and liveries, prefixed to Ley’s Reports. See also Reeves’s Hist. Eng. Law. v. 4, p. 259.” 2 Fonbl. Eq. B. 2, Pt. 2, ch. 2, § 1, note (a).

§ 1333. Notwithstanding the objections thus urged against the legitimacy of the origin of the jurisdiction, it is highly probable, that it has a just and rightful foundation in the prerogative of the crown, flowing from its general power and duty, as parens patriæ, to protect those, who have no other lawful protector.<sup>3</sup> It has been well said, that it will scarcely be controverted, that in every civilized state such a superintendence and protective power does somewhere

<sup>1</sup> Hargrave's note (70), § 16, Co. Litt. 89, a.; 2 Fonbl. Eq. B. 2, Pt. 2, ch. 2, § 1, note (a).—There is very great reason to question this conclusion of the learned author; nor is it very likely, that at so late a period as 1696, a clear usurpation of an authority of this nature should have been either claimed by the Chancellor, or tolerated by Parliament. In Fitzherbert's Natura Brevium, (p. 27, L.) a very ancient work of great authority, it is said, that "the King by his letters patent may make a general guardian for an infant to answer for him in all actions or suits brought, or to be brought, in all manner of Courts." It is added, "And the infant shall have a writ in the Chancery for to remove his guardian, directed unto the justices, and for to receive another, &c; and the Court, at their discretion, may remove the guardian, and appoint another guardian."

<sup>3</sup> The learned reader is referred to the elaborate note of Mr. Hargrave to Co. Litt. 89, a, note (70), § 16, for the objections to the jurisdiction, which are there fully considered; and also to the equally elaborate note of Mr. Fonblanque (2 Fonbl. Eq. B. 2, Pt. 2, ch. 2, § 1, note (a) for the answers to those objections. The view of the matter taken in the text is almost exclusively derived from the note of Mr. Fonblanque. Lord Eldon, in De Manneville v. De Manneville, (10 Ves. 63, 64,) after referring to the notes of Mr. Hargrave and Mr. Fonblanque, stated that "the latter had stated the principle very correctly." exist. If it is not found to exist elsewhere, it seems to be a just inference from the known prerogatives of the Crown, as parens patriæ, in analogous cases to presume, that it vests in the Crown.<sup>1</sup> It is no slight confirmation of this inference, that it has been constantly referred to such an origin in all the judicial investigations of the matter,<sup>2</sup> as well as in the discussions of very learned elementary writers.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>3</sup> 3 Black. Comm. 427; Fitz. Nat. Brev. 27; 2 Fonbl. Eq. B. 2, Pt. 2, ch. 2, § 1, note (a); 1 Madd. Ch. Pr. 262, 263.—In Butler v. Freeman (Ambler, R. 302), Lord Hardwicke is reported to have said, with reference to this subject; "This court does not act on the footing of guardianship or wardship. The latter is totally taken away by the statute of Car. II. And without claiming the former, and disclaiming the latter, it has a general right delegated by the Crown, as pater patriæ, to interfere in particular cases for the benefit of such, who are incapable to protect themselves. In the case of Hughes v. Science (cited in Ambler, R. 302, Mr. Blunt's note (2), the same learned Judge said; "The law of the country has taken great care of infants, both their persons and estates, and particularly to prevent marriages to their disparagement. For that purpose it had assigned them guardians; and if a stranger married without the guardians' consent, it was considered a ravishment of ward, and the party was deemed punishable by fine and imprisonment: and so it was, if the guardian himself married the infant to another to its disparagement. And the Court has originally exercised a superintendent jurisdiction over guardians in behalf of infants, to prevent abuses, either in their persons or estates, as well as in behalf of the Crown; and inferior lords, who had formerly a great interest in the wardship of infants. Afterwards, indeed, the Court of Wards being created, took the jurisdiction out of Chancery for a time. But as soon as that Court came to be dissolved, the jurisdiction devolved again upon the Court, and infants have ever since been considered as under the immediate care of Chancery. Whenever a suit is commenced here on their behalf, and even without suit, the Court every day appoints guardians on petition; and the marriage of an infant to his guardian or any other, without the consent of the Court, where a

§ 1334. Assuming, then, that the general care and superintendence of infants did originally vest in the Crown, when they had no other guardian, the question, by whom, and in what manner, the prerogative should be exercised, would not seem open to much controversy. Partaking, as it does, more of the nature of a judicial administration of rights and duties in foro conscientiæ, than of a strict executive authority, it would naturally follow, etâ ratione, that it should be exercised in the Court of Chancery, as a branch of the general jurisdiction originally confided to it. Accordingly, the doctrine now commonly maintained is, that the general superintendence and protective jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery over the persons and property of infants is a delegation of the rights and duty of the Crown; that it belonged to that court, and was exercised by it from its first establishment; and that this general jurisdiction was not even suspended by the Statute of Henry VIII. erecting the Court of Wards and Liveries.<sup>1</sup>

Duke of Beaufort* (2 Russ. 20), speaking on the subject of the Jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery over infants, and especially of its interfering between parent and child, said; "I do apprehend, that, notwithstanding all the doubts, that may exist as to the origin of this jurisdiction, it will be found to be absolutely necessary, that such a jurisdiction should exist, subject to correction by appeal, and subject to the most scrupulous and conscientious conviction of the Judge, that he is to look most strictly into the merits of every case of this kind, and with the utmost anxiety to be right. It has been questioned, whether this jurisdiction was given to this Court

upon the destruction of the Court of Wards, (which, however, it is impossible to say could have been the case, when we recollect the nature of the jurisdiction,) or whether it is to be referred to circumstances and principles of a different nature; more especially, whether it belongs to the King, as parens patriæ, having the care of those, who are not able to take care of themselves, and is founded on the obvious necessity, that the law should place somewhere the care of individuals, who cannot take care of themselves, particularly in cases where it is clear, that some care should be thrown round them. With respect to the doctrine, that this authority belongs to the King, as parens patriæ, exercising a jurisdiction by this Court, it has been observed at the Bar, that the Court had not exercised that jurisdiction, unless where there was property belonging to the infant to be taken care of in this Court. Now, whether that be an accurate view of the law or not; whether it is founded on what Lord Hardwicke says in the case of Butler v. Freeman, 'that there must be a suit depending relative to the infant or his estate,' (applying, however, the latter words rather to what the Court is to do with respect to the maintenance of infants;) or whether it arises out of a necessity of another kind, namely, that the Court must have property in order to exercise this jurisdiction:—that is a question, to which, perhaps, sufficient consideration has not been given. If any one will turn his mind attentively to the subject, he must see, that this Court has not the means of acting, except where it has property to act upon." The same case was afterwards carried to the House of Lords upon appeal; and Lord Redesdale, in delivering his opinion in the House of Lords on that occasion, in affirmation of the decree below, said; "We find, that now for a hundred and fifty years, the Court of Chancery has assumed an authority with respect to the care of infants; and it has assumed that authority to the extent, in which it was assumed, for this reason. As long as the feudal tenures remained, generally speaking, infants, who had lost their parents, were under the protection of the law, which then existed, with respect to the treatment and the care of the children. When that was at an end, it was thought fit, by a particular statute, to enable the father to make an appointment of a guardian for his children, giving to him the power, which that statute gave, to select proper persons for that purpose. As I observed before, if he makes an improper selection, if the person, whom he has so selected, misconduct himself, it is perfectly clear, that a power has been assumed to control that conduct. Now, upon what does Lord Somers, upon what does Lord Nottingham, upon what does Lord Hardwicke, upon what ground does every Chancellor, who has been sitting on the bench, in the Court of Chancery, since that time, place the jurisdiction? They all say, that it is a right, which devolves to the Crown, as pa-eral respects. The former is a personal trust in the Lord Chancellor, and specially delegated to him under the sign manual of the King; and from his decree

rens patriæ, and that it is the duty of the Crown to see, that the child is properly taken care of. We all know, that many jurisdictions are given to the Crown, many powers are given to the Crown; but those powers are all to be exercised by responsible ministers. It is not the king, who takes on himself to determine, who is to be a proper guardian of the children. But he is to delegate to different ministers the different kinds of powers, which belong to him, that there may be, according to the language of our law, persons responsible to the king and the people, for their good conduct, in the administration of their trust. I, therefore, have no doubt in the world, that it must be taken to be a jurisdiction rightly assumed, for a hundred and fifty years past unquestionably assumed by the Chancellors sitting in the Court of Chancery. Lord Somers resembled the jurisdiction over infants to the care, which the Court takes with respect to lunatics, and supposed, that the jurisdiction devolved on the Crown in the same way. There is no particular law upon the subject. The law merely declares, that the king has the care of the persons, who are of insane mind, and that he is to take care of their property. If they are absolute idiots, the property devolves to him during their lives, and he is to provide only for their maintenance. If they are not idiots, but persons, who have lucid intervals, then the king is to take care of their property, to take care of their persons, to take care of their maintenance. And whatever property may be accumulated in the mean time, he is a trustee of it for the benefit of those, who may be entitled at their death, or to them, if they should ever recover. With respect to the case of infants, can there be a stronger proof, that it was conceived to be reserved to the Crown than this:—that the City of London claim, as an immemorial right, and a right, which must have been derived to them from the Crown, the care of orphans, and that they have most extraordinary powers for that purpose, extending to enable the Court of Orphans to commit to Newgate a person, who disobeys their order? That has been allowed in a Court of Common Law; and it is founded upon usage, which must have been founded originally upon a grant from the Crown of such powers to the Corporation of London. I think there can be no doubt, therefore, that the law of this country has reserved to the king the prerogative for the protection of infants, to be executed in such a manner as the constitution requires him to execute all his prerogatives.” Wellesley v. Wellesley, 2 Bligh, R. (N. S.) 129 to 132. In pages 134 to 136, the subject is farther examined and illustrated by his Lordship. See also Id., p. 141, 142, Lord Manners’s opinion.

no appeal lies, except to the King in Council.<sup>1</sup> On the other hand, the latter belongs to the Court of Chancery, and it may be exercised, as well by the Master of the Rolls, as by the Lord Chancellor; and, therefore, an appeal does lie from the decision of the Court of Chancery in cases of infants to the House of Lords.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1336. It may be asked, why, if no particular warrant be necessary to enable the Court of Chancery to exercise its protective power and care over infants, a separate commission under the sign manual should be necessary to confer on the Chancellor the jurisdiction over Idiots and Lunatics, since that also has been referred to the protecting prerogative of the Crown, as parens patriæ. The answer which has been given, (and, perhaps, it is the true one), is, that, in point of fact the custody of the persons and property of Idiots and Lunatics, or, at least, of those, who held lands, was not anciently in the Crown, but in the Lord of the fee. The Statute (De Prerogativâ Regis) of the 7th of [*567] Edward II. ch. 9. (or, as Lord *Coke and others suppose, some earlier statute<sup>3</sup>) gave to the King the custody of Idiots, and also vested in him the profits of the Idiot's lands during his life.<sup>4</sup> By this means the

<sup>4</sup> Lord Coke, in 2 Inst. 14, speaking of the provision in Magna Charta, ch. 4, says; "At the making of this statute the king had not any prerogative in the custody of the lands of idiots during the life of the idiots; for if he had, this act would have provided against waste, &c., committed by the committee or assignee of the king, to be done in his possessions, as well as in the possessions of wards. But at this time the guardian-

Crown acquired a beneficial interest in the lands; and, as a special warrant from the Crown is in all cases necessary to any grant of its interest, the separate commission, which gives the Lord Chancellor jurisdiction over the persons and property of Idiots, may be referred to this consideration.<sup>1</sup> With respect to Lunatics, the Statute of 17 Edward II. ch. 10, enacted, that the King should provide, that their lands and tenements should be kept without waste. It conferred merely a power, which could not be considered as included within the general jurisdiction, antecedently conferred on the Court of Chancery; and, therefore, a separate and *special commission [*568] became necessary for the delegation of this new power.<sup>2</sup> ship of idiots, &c., was to the Lords and others according to the course of the Common Law.”—In Beverley’s case (4 Co. Rep. 126) it is expressly declared, that the Statute of 17 Edw. II. ch. 9, is but an affirmance or declaration of the Common Law. So Mr. Justice Blackstone in his Commentaries (1 Black. Com. 303) treats it. Lord Coke thinks, that this prerogative was given to the Crown by some statute not now extant, in the reign of Edw. I., after Bracton wrote his work, and before that of Britton. 2 Inst. 14. <sup>2</sup> Ibid.—Lord Loughborough, in Oxenden v. Lord Compton (2 Ves. jr. 71, 72; S. C. 4 Bro. Ch. R. 231) considered the Statute of 17 Edw. II. ch. 10, as merely in affirmance of the antecedent rights of the Crown. His language on that occasion was; “That leads to the principle, upon which the administration of the estates of lunatics stands; and how it is committed, not to the Court of Chancery, but to a certain great officer of the Crown. The Statute (17 Edw. II. ch. 10) is not introductive of any new right of the Crown. The better opinion inclines that way; and the words of the Statute put it past all doubt. The object was to regulate and define the prerogative, and to restrain the abuse of treating the estates of lunatics as the estates of idiots.” Again; “The course upon the Statute has been, that the Crown has committed to a certain great officer of the Crown, not of necessity the person, who has the custody of the Great Seal, (i. e. the Lord Chancellor or Lord Keeper,) though it usually attends him, by warrant from the Crown, which confers no jurisdiction, but only a power of administration. If that power is abused, if any thing wrong is done, or error committed, the appeal is immediately to the King, and not in the ordinary course attending the established jurisdiction of the kingdom. The orders, that are made by persons charged with the custody of lunatics, are appealable to the King in Council."—Lord Apsley, in Ex parte Grimstone (Ambler, R. 707; S. C. 4 Bro. Ch. R. 235, note) said; "It (the right of the Crown over idiots and lunatics) certainly existed before the Statute De Prerogativa Regis. (17 Edw. II. ch. 9, 10.) The writ does not go of course; but must be sued for. After the return to the commission, the Great Seal, by virtue of the King's sign manual, grants the custody, merely to save the application to the King in person. After the custody is granted, the Great Seal acts in matters relative to the lunatic, not under the sign manual, but by virtue of its general power, as keeper of the King's conscience. It is usual to take bonds from the committees to account and submit to orders; but I do not apprehend it is absolutely necessary. The Court makes many orders, and enforces them by attachments, which orders, and the manner of enforcing them, are not warranted by the sign manual, but by the general powers of the Court." In the Corporation of Burford v. Lenthall, (2 Atk. 553,) Lord Hardwicke said; "Before the Courts of Wardship were erected, the jurisdiction was in this court, both as to lunatics and idiots; therefore all these commissions were taken out in this court, and returned here; and after the Court of Wards was taken away by act of parliament, it reverted back to the Court of Chancery; and the sign manual of the king is a standing warrant to the Lord Chancellor, to grant the custody of the lunatics, and is a beneficial thing in case of idiocy; because the king could not only give the custody of idiots, but the rents and profits of idiots' lands to persons." Again; In Re Heli (3 Atk. 635) he said; One part of the Chancellor's power, in relation to idiots and lunatics, is by virtue of a sign manual of the king, upon his coming to the great seal, and countersigned by the two secretaries of state, empowering him to take care of such persons in the right of the Crown, and to make grants from time to time of the idiots' or lunatics' estates." If one might venture to make a suggestion in a case, where there seems no small diversity of opinion, it would be, that upon general principles, the king, as parens patriæ, has an original prerogative to take care of the persons and property of infants, of idiots, and of lunatics, in all cases where no other guardianship exists. So long as any special guardianship exists by law or custom in other persons, the prerogative of the Crown is inactive, but not suspended. The jurisdiction generally belongs to the Court of Chancery, as delegate of the Crown, except where it is specially or personally delegated, or restricted by Statute. The Statute De Prerog. Regis, ch. 9, 10, has rendered special commissions for certain purposes necessary to be granted under the sign manual; and the jurisdiction being in fact committed to the same person, has, in practice, become mixed. If this view of the subject be admitted to be correct, it will clear away some of the difficulties now encumbering the subject.

<sup>1</sup> In Re Fitzgerald, 2 Sch. & Lefr. 436.—This difference is fully expounded by Lord Redesdale in Re Fitzgerald (2 Sch. & Lefr. 436). "There is a difference," said he, "in the case of an idiot and a lunatic in this respect. In the case of a lunatic, the king is a mere trustee; in the case of an idiot, he has a beneficial interest. In point of form, in the terms of the grant to the committee, the grant of a lunatic's estate is a grant liable to account; and the other is a grant to a certain degree without account; that is, the king is not bound to do more than provide for the maintenance of the idiot; and is entitled by his prerogative to the surplus of his estate. The words of the statutes (which are said in Beverley's case, 4 Co. 126, 127, to be only declaratory of the Common Law) differ as to the provisions for the care of the property of an idiot and a lunatic. In the one case, the king, having an interest, is said 'to have the custody of an idiot, his lands,' &c. &c. But with respect to the other, the words of the statute, and the language of those, who have written on the subject are, that 'the king shall provide, when any happen to fail of his wit, that their lands and tenements shall be safely kept without waste, and that they and their household shall be maintained with the profit, and that the residue shall be kept to their use, to be delivered to them, when they come to right mind.' So that the meaning simply is, that in the one case the king shall have a personal benefit; but that in the other he is only to act, as parens patriæ, as the person to take care of those, who are incompetent to take care of themselves. And the statute with respect to lunatics expressly provides, 'nec rex aliquid de exitibus recipiat ad opus suum.' These are direct negative words, that the king cannot take the profits for his own use; but as to what is not in itself profitable, as the presentation to a church, the king takes. Then the statute proceeds to direct, that if the party shall die in this condition, the residue shall be distributed for the benefit of his soul, according to the superstition of the times, in which the statute was made; which is certainly now to be taken as a direction to preserve the residue for those entitled to the personal estate of the lunatic on his death, independent of that statute." Again, in Lysaght v. Royse, (2 Sch. & Lefr. 153,) the same § 1337. But, whatever may be the true origin of the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery over the persons and property of infants, it is now conceded on all sides to be firmly established, and beyond the reach of controversy. Indeed, it is a settled maxim, that the king is the universal guardian to infants, and ought, in [*571] the Court of Chancery, to take care of *their fortunes.<sup>1</sup> We shall now proceed to the consideration of some of the more important functions, connected with this authority; in the appointment and removal of guardians; in the maintenance of infants; in the management and disposition of the property of infants; and, lastly, in the marriage of infants.

§ 1338. In the first place, in regard to the appointment and removal of guardians. The Court of Chancery will appoint a suitable guardian to an infant, where there is none other, or none other, who will, or can act, at least, where the infant has property; for if the infant has no property, the Court will perhaps not interfere. It is not, however, from any want of learned Chancellor said; "Some doubt occurs to me, as to the validity of the grant of the estate of the idiot. Under warrant of the king's sign manual, countersigned by the Lords of the Treasury, the Chancellor has the ordering and disposition of the persons and estates of idiots and lunatics. This authority is given to him (as stated in the warrant) in consideration of its being his duty, as Chancellor, to issue the commissions, on which the inquiry, as to the fact of idiocy or lunacy, is to be made. The warrant certainly gives to the Chancellor the right of providing for the maintenance of idiots and lunatics, and for the care of their persons and estates. For lunatics the Crown is merely a trustee. But in the case of an idiot the Crown is absolutely entitled to the profits, subject to the maintenance of the idiot. And I doubt, whether the warrant thus given to the Chancellor is a warrant for passing letters patent, granting to any person, for his own benefit, the surplus profits of the estate of the idiot."

jurisdiction, that it will not interfere in such a case, but from the want of means to exercise its jurisdiction with effect; because the Court cannot take upon itself the maintenance of all the children in the kingdom. It can exercise this part of its jurisdiction usefully and practically, only where it has the means of doing so; that is to say, by its having the means of applying property for the use and maintenance of the infant.<sup>1</sup> Guardians, appointed *by the Court, are treated [*572] as officers of the Court, and are held responsible accordingly to it.

§ 1339. In the next place, as to the removal of guardians. The Court of Chancery will not only remove guardians appointed by its own authority, but it will also remove guardians at the Common Law, and even testamentary or statute guardians, whenever sufficient cause can be shown for such a purpose.<sup>2</sup> In all such cases the guardianship is treated as a delegated trust for the benefit of the infant; and if it is abused, or in danger of abuse, the Court of Chancery will interpose, not only by way of remedial justice, but of preventive justice.<sup>1</sup> Where the conduct of the guardian is less reprehensible, and does not require so strong a measure as a removal, the Court will, upon special application, interfere, and regulate, and direct the conduct of the guardian in regard to the custody, and education, and maintenance of the infant; and, if necessary, it will inhibit him from carrying the infant out of the country; and it will even appoint the school, where he shall be educated.<sup>2</sup> In like manner,

<sup>1</sup> Lord Eldon in Wellesley v. Duke of Beaufort, 2 Russ. R. 21.—The Court will appoint a guardian upon petition without a bill being filed; and it is done upon the petition of the infant himself, or of some person in his behalf. See Da Costa or Villa Real v. Mellish, 2 Atk. 14; S. C. 2 Swanst. R. 533, where it is better reported; and in West's Rep. 299; Ex parte Mountfort, 15 Ves. 445; Ex parte Salter, 2 Dick. <sup>2</sup> In Foster v. Denny, 2 Ch. Cas. 238, the Lord Chancellor said; "Where there is a guardianship by the Common Law, this Court will intermeddle and order; but being here a guardian by act of Parliament, I cannot remove him or her." But this doctrine seems to have been denied by Lord Macclesfield, in the Duke of Beaufort v. Berty (1 P. Will. 703), who asserted the jurisdiction of the Court to be the same over statute guardians, as over Common Law guardians. Lord Hardwicke held the same opinion, in Butler v. Freeman, Ambler, R. 302, and Roach v. Garvan, 1 Ves. 160. Lord Eldon, in Wellesley v. Duke of Beaufort, (2 Russ. R. 1, 21, 22,) fully recognised the same doctrine; as did also

Lord Redesdale and Lord Manners, in their opinions in Wellesley v. Wellesley, 2 Bligh, R. (N. S.) 128, 129, 130, 145, 146. In the Duke of Beaufort v. Bertie (1 P. Will. 705), Lord Macclesfield said; "If the guardian chose to make use of methods, that might turn to the prejudice of the infant, the Court will interfere, and order the contrary; and, that this was granted upon the general power and jurisdiction, which it had over all trusts; and a guardianship was most plainly a trust." Mr. Fonblanque, (2 Fonbl. Eq. B. 2, Pt. 2, ch. 2, § 1, note a, and § 2, note h), seems to have thought, that a testamentary guardian cannot be removed; although his conduct may be regulated by the Court; and he may be restricted from doing any acts to the prejudice of the infant. But it appears to me, that he is not warranted in this opinion by the authorities. See Eyre v. Countess of Shaftesbury, 2 P. Will. 107; 1 Woodes. Lect. 17, p. 461; Morgan v. Dillon, 9 Mod. 139, 140, 141; Com. Dig. Chancery, 3 O. 4, 5; Spencer v. Earl of Chesterfield, Ambler, R. 146; Okeefe v. Casey, 1 Sch. and Lefr. 106; Tombes v. Elers, 1 Dick. 88; Smith v. Bate, 2 Dick. 631; Ex parte Crumb, 2 John. Ch. R. 439. But in Ingham v. Bickerdike (6 Madd. 276), the Vice Chancellor seems to have thought, that the Court cannot remove a testamentary guardian, though it might appoint some other person to superintend the maintenance and education of the infant.

The Court of Chancery will not only interfere to remove guardians for improper conduct; but it will also assist guardians in compelling their wards to go to the school selected by the guardian, as well as in obtaining the custody of the persons of their wards, when they are detained from them. This may not only be done by the Chancellor, acting, as any other judge, by a writ of habeas corpus; but* it may [*574] also be done on a petition, without any bill being filed in the Court.<sup>2</sup> general parents are entrusted with the custody of the persons and the education of their children; yet this is done upon the natural presumption, that the children will be properly taken care of, and will be brought up with a due education in literature, and morals, and religion; and that they will be treated with kindness and affection. But whenever this presumption is removed; whenever (for example) it is found, that a father is guilty of gross ill treatment or cruelty towards his infant children; or that he is in constant habits of drunkenness and blasphemy, or low and gross debauchery; or that he professes atheistical, or irreligious principles; or that his domestic associations are such, as tend to the corruption and contamination of his children; or that he otherwise acts in a manner injurious to the morals or interests of his children; in every such case, the Court of Chancery will interfere, and deprive him of the custody of his child-has brought together the general principles and doctrines applicable to guardianship by nature, guardianship by socage, and guardianship by nurture, the first and last of which are often confounded, and used in a loose and indeterminate sense. At the Common Law, guardianship by nature is of the heir apparent only (and not of all the children), and belongs to the father and mother and other ancestor standing in that predicament to the infant. It lasts until twenty-one years of age, and extends no further than the custody of the infant's person. Guardianship by socage arises wholly out of tenure, and exists only when the infant is seised of lands or other hereditaments lying in tenure and in socage. It extends to the person, and all the estates (including the socage estates) of the infant, and lasts until the infant arrives at the age of fourteen. It belongs to such of the infant's next of blood, as cannot have by descent the socage estate, in respect to which the guardianship arises by descent, without any distinction between the whole blood and the half blood. Guardianship by nurture occurs only when the infant is without any other guardian; and none can have it, except the father or mother. It lasts until the age of fourteen years, and extends only over the person. See 1 Black. Comm. 461, 462; 2 Fonbl. Eq. B. 2, Pt. 2, ch. 2, § 2, note(h).

ren, and appoint a suitable person to act as guardian, and to take care of them, and to superintend their education.<sup>1</sup>

*§ 1342. The jurisdiction, thus asserted, to [*576] remove infant children from the custody of their parents, and to superintend their education and maintenance, is admitted to be of extreme delicacy, and of no inconsiderable embarrassment and responsibility. But it is nevertheless a jurisdiction, which seems indispensable to the sound morals, the good order, and the just protection of a civilized society. On a recent occasion, after it had been acted upon in Chancery for one hundred and fifty years, it was attempted to be brought into question, and was resisted, as unfounded in the true principles of English Jurisprudence. It was, however, confirmed by the House of Lords with entire unanimity; and on that occasion was sustained by a weight of authority and reasoning rarely equalled.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1343. It may not be without use to glance at some of the leading considerations suggested on that occasion.<sup>1</sup> The opposition to the jurisdiction was founded upon the right of the father to have the care and custody of his children. That right, in a general sense, is not to be disputed. But the true question is, whether the father, having that right, is to be at liberty to abuse it. Why is the parent by law ordinarily entrusted with the care of his children? Simply, because it is generally supposed, that he will best execute the trust reposed in him; for, that is a trust, and of all trusts the most sacred, no one can well doubt.

[*577] *§ 1344. In the case of ordinary guardians, there is no question as to the authority of the Court. Even in the case of a guardian, appointed under the statute, which enables the father to appoint a guardian to his children, it is clear, that, as a case of delegated trust, a trust, which the law has enabled the father, when he ceases to live, to give to others for the benefit of his children, the authority of the Court to interfere, and to control the conduct of such a guardian in case of any abuse, scarcely admits of dispute. What ground, then, is there to deny the like authority in the case of a parent?

§ 1345. Why is not the conduct of a father to be considered as a trust, as well as the conduct of a person appointed as guardian? It is true, that the law compels the father to maintain his infant children; but it does no more than compel a bare maintenance. He cannot be compelled, whatever his property may be, to allow to his children what might be deemed a liberal allowance for their maintenance and education; but only so much as is a bare maintenance. But if the children have property of their own, there exists a right to apply that property, which belongs to the children, most beneficially for their support and education.

§ 1346. Upon what ground is the Court in any case required to maintain children out of their own property, and not at the expense of their father? It is, because the father either has not the means, or is an improper person to have the care of his children. When it is proposed to take the maintenance and education of children out of his control, he may refuse to supply them with more than a bare maintenance; *and yet [*578] it may be indispensable for their character, their morals, their interest, and their station in society, that they should receive a good education. It is for that reason, that the Court takes upon itself to apply a part of their property for their suitable maintenance and education, instead of accumulating the income of it for their benefit, until they are capable of taking possession of it themselves. This jurisdiction of the Court, as to maintenance, is unquestionable. It is a jurisdiction, with respect to the income of the property of the children, to apply it for their benefit; and it stands upon the same general principles, as other interferences of the Court in cases of property.

§ 1347. It is impossible to say, that the father has any such absolute right to the care and custody of his children, as the objection supposes. What are the grounds, on which the custody of the children is given to the father? First, protection, then care, then education. Is it not clear, if the father does not give that protection, if he does not maintain the children, that the law interferes for the purpose of compelling the maintenance of the children? Is it not clear, if the father cruelly treats the children in any manner, that a Court of Criminal Jurisdiction will interfere for the purpose of preventing that ill treatment? Upon what ground, then, can it be said, that there is no jurisdiction whatsoever in the country, which can control the conduct of the father in the education of his children? If such a defect could exist in our jurisprudence, it would strike all civilized countries with astonishment.

[*579] *§ 1348. It is said, that there is nothing, from which this jurisdiction can be inferred as belonging to the Court of Chancery, except the dicta in the books, and the actual exercise of it in that Court for one hundred and fifty years. The very circumstance of such an actual exercise of the authority for such a period is conclusive in favor of its rightful origin; for in many cases, under the constitution of England, no other ground, except the actual exercise of authority, can be assigned for its legitimacy. The origin cannot be ascertained. How came there to be a House of Lords, and a House of Commons? No one has been able to ascertain the exact origin of either. Much of the jurisdiction of the Court of King's Bench and of the Court of Exchequer is beyond the reach of any man to trace to its source, or to say, when and how it originated.

§ 1349. The truth is, that in the constitution of the Government of England all powers in the administration of justice, which are necessary in themselves, are vested in the Crown; and are so vested to be exercised by those ministers of the Crown, to whom the jurisdiction has usually been delegated. The present jurisdiction must be taken to be delegated to the Court of Chancery, whenever there is a suit respecting property in that Court. If there was a suit respecting property in the Court of Exchequer, as a Court of Equity, to take care of property belonging to an infant, the Court of Exchequer would exercise that jurisdiction as an incident; that is to say, it would take care, that the property, which was to be administered under its direction, should be properly administered.—Such is the general course of reasoning, by which the jurisdiction of the Court *of Chancery has been [*580] maintained and established in the highest appellate Court of England.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1350. It would be a subject of curious inquiry, to ascertain the nature and extent of the parental power in the Roman Law, and also the nature and extent of the powers and duties of guardians in the same law, and the manner of their appointment; but it would lead us too far from the immediate object of these Commentaries. It is highly probable, that the Common Law, as well as the Equity Jurisprudence of England, has borrowed many of its doctrines on this subject from this source. Guardians (who were appointed on the death of the father) were, in the Roman Law, of two sorts; (1.) tutors, who were guardians of males until their age of fourteen years, and of females until their age of twelve years; and (2.) curators, who were then appointed their guardians, and continued such until the minors respectively arrived at the age of twenty-five years, which was the full majority of the Roman Law, Guardians were usually selected from the nearest relations, and might be nominated by the father or mother during their lifetime. But they were required to be appointed and confirmed by the proper judge or magistrate of the place, where the minor resided; and they were removable for personal misconduct, or for ill treatment of the minor, or for bad management of his estate. But, while any one remained guardian, he was bound to take care of the person of the minor; to provide suitable maintenance out of his estate; to superintend his morals and education; and to exercise a prudent [*581] management *over his estate.<sup>1</sup> In many respects, indeed, the Court of Chancery, in the exercise of its authority over infants, implicitly follows the very dictates of the Roman Code.

§ 1351. But this jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery is not confined to cases, where a suit is depending for property in that Court; although it is otherwise as to other Courts of Equity in England.<sup>2</sup> It belongs to the Court of Chancery, as the general delegate of the Crown, acting as parens patriæ, for the protection of the persons and property of those, who are unable to take care of themselves, and yet possess the means of maintenance, and are without any other suitable guardian.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1352. We are next led to the consideration of what constitutes an infant a ward of Chancery, in respect to whom the Court interferes in a great variety of cases, when it would not, if the infant did not stand in that predicament in relation to the Court. Properly speaking, a ward of Chancery is a person, who is under a guardian appointed by the Court of Chancery.<sup>1</sup> But, wherever a suit is instituted in the Court of Chancery, relative to the person or property of an infant, although he is not under any general guardian appointed by the Court, he is *treated as a [*582] ward of the Court, and as being under its special cognizance and protection.<sup>2</sup>

or indirectly assumed authority over the person or property of an infant, as its ward, it acts throughout with all the anxious care and vigilance of a parent; and it allows neither the guardian, nor any other person, to do any act injurious to the rights or interests of the infant.

§ 1354. In the next place, in regard to the maintenance of infants. Whenever the infant is a ward of Chancery, and a suit is depending in the Court, the [*583] *Court will, of course, upon petition direct a suitable maintenance for the infant, having a due regard to the rank, the future expectations, the intended profession or employment, and the property of the latter.<sup>1</sup> But where there is already a guardian in existence, not deriving his authority from the Court of Chancery, and where there is no suit in the Court touching the infant or his property, (thus making the infant quasi a ward of the Court,) there formerly existed much difficulty, on the part of the Court, in interfering upon the petition, either of the guardian or of the infant, to direct a suitable maintenance for the latter. The effect of this doubt was to allow the guardian to exercise his discretion at his own peril; and thus to leave much to his sense of duty; and much more to his habits of bold or of timid action in assuming responsibility. At present, a different course is pursued; and in ordinary cases, at least where the property is small, the Court will, upon petition, without requiring the more formal proceedings by bill, settle a due maintenance upon the infant.<sup>2</sup> Lord Hardwicke, in vindication of this latter course, said; "There may be a great convenience in applications of this kind, because it may be a sort of check upon infants with regard to their behavior; and it may be an inducement to persons of worth to accept of *the guardianship, [*584] when they have the sanction of this Court for any thing they do on account of maintenance; and likewise of use in saving the expense of a suit to an infant's estate."<sup>1</sup> These are considerations, which certainly ought never to be lost sight of in regulating the practice of the Court; for it seems not to be a question as to the jurisdiction of the Court.

1354. a. The Court also is not limited in its authority in regard to maintenance to cases, where the infant is resident within the territorial jurisdiction of the Court, or the maintenance is to be applied there. But in suitable cases and under suitable circumstances, it will order maintenance for an infant out of the jurisdiction, taking care to impose such conditions and restrictions on the party applying for it, as will secure a proper application of the money.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1355. In allowing maintenance, the Court of Chancery will have a liberal regard to the circumstances and state of the family, to which the infant belongs; as, for example, if the infant be an elder son, and the younger children have no provision made for them, an ample allowance will be allowed to the infant, so that the younger children may be maintained.<sup>1</sup> Similar considerations will apply to a father or mother of the infant, who is in distressed or narrow circumstances.<sup>2</sup> On the other hand, in allowing maintenance, the Court usually confines itself within the limits of the income of the property. But where the property is small, and more means are necessary for the due maintenance of the infant, the Court will sometimes allow the capital to be broken in upon.<sup>3</sup> But, without the express sanction [*585] of the Court, a trustee or guardian will not be permitted, of his own accord, to break in upon the capital.<sup>4</sup>

And, here, the Court of Chancery will exercise a vigilant care over guardians in their management of the property of the infant. It will carry its aid and protection in favor of infants so far, as to reach other persons than those, who are guardians strictly appointed. For if a man intrudes upon the estate of an infant, and takes the profits thereof, he will be treated as a guardian, and held responsible therefor to the infant in a suit in Equity.<sup>5</sup>

§ 1357. Guardians will not ordinarily be permitted to change the personal property of the infant into real property, or the real property into personalty ; since it may not only affect the rights of the infant himself, but also of his representatives, if he should die under age.<sup>1</sup> But, guardians may, under particular circumstances, where it is manifestly for the benefit of the infant, change the nature of the estate ; and the Court will support their conduct, if the act be such, as the Court itself would have done, under the like circumstances, by its own order. The act of the guardian, in such a case, must not be wantonly done ; but it must be for the manifest interest and convenience of the infant.<sup>2</sup> It is true, *that it has been said, that [*586] there is no equity in such a case between the representatives of the infant. But, nevertheless, the Court has an obvious regard to the circumstance, that these representatives may be affected thereby ;<sup>3</sup> and it is always inclined to keep a strict hand over guardians, in order to prevent partiality and misconduct.<sup>4</sup> For the purpose of preventing any such acts of the guardian, in cases of the death of the infant before he arrives of age, from changing improperly the rights of the parties, who, as heirs or distributees, would otherwise be entitled to the fund, it is the constant rule of Courts of Equity to hold lands purchased by the guardian with the infant's personal estate, or with the rents and profits of his real estate, to be personally, and distributable as such; and, on the other hand, to treat real property (as for example, timber cut down on a fee simple estate of the infant) turned into money, as still for the same purpose real estate.<sup>1</sup> On these accounts, and also from the man- [*587] fest hazard, which guardians must otherwise run, it is common for them to ask the positive sanction of the Court to any acts of this sort. And when the Court directs any such change of property, it directs the new investment to be in trust for the benefit of those, who would be entitled to it, if it had remained in its original state.<sup>2</sup>

Lord Eldon, in Ex parte Phillips (19 Ves. 122, 123,) explained the difference and the reasons of it, as follows. "In the case of the infant the Lord Chancellor is acting, as the Court of Chancery; not so in lunacy; but under a special, separate commission from the Crown, authorizing him to take care of the property, and for the benefit of the lunatic. In the case of the infant it is settled, that, as a trustee out of Court cannot change the nature of the property, so the Court, which is only a trustee, must act as the trustee out of Court; and finding, that a change will be for the benefit of the infant, must so deal with it, as not to affect the powers of the infant over his property even during his infancy, when he has powers over one species of property, not over the other. It may be for the benefit of an infant in many cases, that money should be laid out in land, if he should live to become adult; but, if not, it is a great prejudice to him; taking away his dominion, by the power of disposition he has over personal property, so long before he has it over real estate. The Court, therefore, with reference to his situation even during infancy, as to his powers over property, works the change, not to all intents and purposes, but with this qualification; that, if he lives, he may take it as real estate; but without prejudice to his right over it during infancy, as personal property. A lunatic stands on quite a different footing. At the instant of a lucid interval, he has precisely the same power of disposition over one species of property, as over the other, in different modes and forms I admit. The Lord Chancellor, acting under a special commission from the Crown, does what is for his benefit; taking the advice and assistance of the presumptive next of kin and heir, as to the management of the property, that may, or may not, be their own. A case has occurred of a lunatic, seised ex parte paternâ of estate A., and ex parte maternâ of estate B.; the latter being subject to a mortgage; and, timber cut upon A. having been applied in discharge of the mortgage upon B.; it was, on a question between the heirs, held, that A. was not to be recouped. Upon these grounds, had the application been to sell a part of the real estate for the payment of debts, the Court, finding, that the maintenance of the lunatic would be better provided for, and his advantage promoted, by disposing of a real estate, inconvenient, ill-conditioned, &c., that it would be for his benefit so to pay the debts, and keep together the personal estate, would have no difficulty in making such an application; and so in cutting down timber upon the estate, augmenting the personal property, it goes as personal property; and the different form of disposition is not regarded, when a lucid interval arrives. Upon these principles, this sort of distinction, whether solid or not, is settled; and I think there is sufficient to maintain it; but, if settled, I have no inclination to disturb it." See also Oxenden v. Lord Compton, 2 Ves. jr. 69, 70 to 78; Ex parte Grimstone, Ambler, R. 707; Ex parte Degge, 2 Ves. jr. 235, note. Jurisd.* B. 1, ch. 5, § 3, p. 232, 233.

cises with great caution in relation to all persons, who are wards of the Court. No person is permitted to marry a ward of the Court without the express sanction of the Court, even with the consent of the guardian. If a man should marry a female ward without the consent and approbation of the Court, he, and all others concerned in aiding and abetting the act, will be treated as guilty of a contempt of the [*589] Court ;<sup>1</sup> and the husband himself, *even though he were ignorant, that she was a ward of the court, will still be deemed guilty of a contempt.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1359. In all cases, where the Court of Chancery appoints a guardian, or committee in the nature of a guardian, to have the care of an infant, it is accustomed to require the party to give a recognisance, that the infant shall not marry without the leave of the Court ; which form is rarely altered, and only upon special circumstances. So, that if an infant should marry, though without the privity, or knowledge, or neglect of the guardian, or committee ; yet the recognisance would in strictness be forfeited, whatever favor the Court might, upon an application, think fit to extend to the party, when he should appear to have been in no fault.<sup>3</sup>

With a view, also, to prevent the improper marriages of its wards, the Court will, where there is reason to suspect an intended and improper marriage without its sanction, by an injunction, not only interdict the marriage, but also interdict communications between the ward and the admirer; and, if the guardian is suspected of any connivance, it will remove the infant from his care and custody, and place the infant under the care and custody of a committee.<sup>1</sup> Lord Hardwicke has justly remarked, *that this juris- [*590] diction is highly important in its exercise under both of these aspects; in the first place, when it is exercised by way of punishment of such, as have done any act to the prejudice of the ward; in the next place, by the still more salutary and useful exercise, by way of prevention, when it restrains persons from doing any act to disparage the ward, before the act has been completed.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1361. In case of an offer of marriage of a ward, the Court will refer it to a master to ascertain and report, whether the match is a suitable one, and also what settlement ought to be made.<sup>3</sup> And where a marriage has been actually celebrated without the sanction of the Court, the Court will not discharge the husband, who has been committed for the contempt, until he has actually made such a settlement upon the female ward, as upon a reference to a master shall, under all the circumstances, be deemed equitable and proper.<sup>4</sup> It will not make any difference in the case,

CHAPTER XXXV.

IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

§ 1362. WITH this brief exposition of the jurisdiction and doctrines of the Court of Chancery in regard to infants we may dismiss the subject, and proceed to the consideration of the jurisdiction in relation to IDIOTS and LUNATICS. The remarks, which have been already made to distinguish the jurisdiction of the Court in this class of cases from that exercised in cases of infants, have in a great measure anticipated and brought under discussion the explanations proper for this place.<sup>1</sup> If the preceding views of this subject are correct, the Court of Chancery may be properly deemed to have had originally, as the general delegate of the authority of the Crown, as parens patriæ, the right, not only to have the custody and protection of infants, but also of idiots and lunatics, when they have no other guardian.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1363. But the Statutes of 17 Edw. II. ch. 9, 10, introduced some new rights, powers, and duties, of the Crown; and since that period the jurisdiction has become somewhat mixed in practice; but it is principally, in modern times, exerted under these statutes.

The jurisdiction, therefore, is now usually treated as a special jurisdiction for many purposes, (certainly not for all) derived from the special authority of the Crown under its sign manual to the Chancellor personally, and not as belonging to him as Chancellor, or as sitting in the Court of Chancery. So that (it has been said) the sign manual does not confer on him any jurisdiction, but only a power of administration.<sup>1</sup> From this circumstance (as we have seen) the practice under the two branches of the jurisdiction is not the same, nor are the doctrines of the Judge the same in all respects.<sup>2</sup> Still, for the most part they agree in substance ; and in a work like the present, there would be little utility in a more minute and comprehensive enumeration of the distinctions and differences between them.

§ 1364. But whatever may be the true origin of the authority of the Crown, as to idiots and lunatics, it is clear, that the Chancellor does not in all cases act under the special warrant by the sign manual. The warrant gives to the Chancellor the right of providing for the maintenance of idiots and lunatics, and for the care of their persons and estates ; and no more.<sup>3</sup> When a person is ascertained to be an idiot or lunatic, the Chancellor proceeds under his special warrant to commit the custody of the person and estate of the idiot or lunatic, sometimes to the same person, and sometimes to different persons, according to circumstances, and to direct for him a suitable maintenance.<sup>4</sup>

After the custody is so granted, and maintenance is assigned, the Chancellor acts in other matters, relative to lunatics at least, 'not under the warrant by the sign manual, but in virtue of his general power, as holding the great seal, and keeper of the king's conscience. It is usual, indeed, to take bond from the committees to account and submit to the orders of the Court of Chancery; but it is not absolutely necessary so to do. The Court of Chancery is in the habit of making many orders, and enforcing them by attachment; which orders, and the manner of enforcing them, are not warranted by the sign manual; but are warranted by the general power of the Court.<sup>2</sup>

Lord Compton*, 2 Ves. jr. 69; S. C. 4 Bro. Ch. R. 231.—Lord Redesdale, in Ex parte Fitzgerald (2 Sch. & Lefr. 438), has gone at large into this subject. The following extract sufficiently illustrates the text. "The issuing of the commission is under the direction of the great seal, and the care and custody of the person and estate is a matter, which, after the abolition of the Court of Wards and Liveries, seems to have fallen back to the Crown, to be provided for upon a special application for the purpose. At the same time, the duty thus thrown on the Crown was often difficult. It was to be performed by the Crown according to the advice, upon which the king might constitutionally act; and it has, therefore, long been the practice, from time to time, to authorize, by the king's sign manual, the person holding the great seal to exercise the discretion of the Crown in providing for the care and custody of the persons and estates of lunatics, which has been usually done by grants to committees. But I apprehend, that though the discretion of the Crown has thus been delegated to the person holding the great seal; yet the superintendence of the conduct of the committee in the management both of the property and the person, originates in the authority of the Court itself, as the Court, from which the commission, inquiring of the lunacy, issues, and into which the inquisition is returned, and which makes the grant founded on the inquisition; for which grant the sign manual (which is countersigned by the lords of the treasury) is a general warrant. The reason, given in the warrant for delegating the power of appointing the committee to the person holding the great seal, is, because the jurisdiction of issuing the commission, and consequently of acting upon it, is, by law, in the great seal. And I conceive, that the warrant itself implies no more; and that nothing is communicated by it, but simply the selection of the person, to whom the grant shall be made. But as the king is bound in conscience to execute the trust reposed in him by the statute, and cannot do it otherwise than by bailiff, the Chancellor, or person holding the great seal, is the proper authority to direct and control the authority of the person so appointed bailiff. It is the duty, therefore, of the person holding the great seal to see, that the committee does not use his office to the prejudice of the lunatic in his lifetime, or of those entitled to his property after his death: that being manifestly the duty of the Crown, imposed by the law, investing it with the care of persons in this situation." There is some obscurity, from the language used in the books, as to the point, whether the Lord Chancellor acts, as administering the general powers of a Court of Equity, technically speaking, as to the orders and decrees, which he makes in cases of lunacy, or only as keeper of the king's conscience, and delegate of the Crown, or virtute officii as Chancellor in cases beyond the special commission. The truth seems to be, that he acts merely as delegate of the Crown, and exercising its personal prerogative, as parens patriæ, in Chancery, and not as a Court of Equity. Hence it is, that from his orders and decrees, in cases of lunacy, an appeal lies to the king in council; whereas, if he acted in such cases as a Court of Equity, an appeal would lie, from said orders and decrees to the House of Lords. See Sheldon v. Fortesque, 3 P. Will. 107, and note; Oxenden v. Lord Compton, 2 Ves. jr. 69; S. C. 4 Bro. Ch. R. 235; Sherwood v. Sanderson, 19 Ves. 285. Yet the language used in Ex parte Grimstone, Ambler, R. 707, and in 2 Sch. & Lefr. 438, above cited, might lead to an opposite result.

§ 1365. In regard to the manner of ascertaining, whether a person is an idiot or a lunatic, or not, a few words will suffice. Upon a proper petition addressed to the Chancellor, not as such, but as the person acting under the special warrant of the Crown,<sup>1</sup> a commission issues out of Chancery, on which the inquiry is to be made, as to the asserted idiocy or

lunacy of the party.<sup>1</sup> The inquisition is always had, and the question tried, by a jury, whose unimpeached verdict becomes conclusive upon the fact. The commission is not confined to idiots or lunatics strictly so called; but in modern times it is extended to all persons, who, from age, infirmity, or other misfortune, are incapable of managing their own affairs, and therefore are properly deemed of unsound mind, or non compotes mentis.<sup>2</sup>

CHAPTER XXXVI.

MARRIED WOMEN.

1366. WE may next proceed to the consideration of the peculiar jurisdiction exercised by Courts of Equity, in regard to the persons and property of MARRIED WOMEN, and principally, in regard to their property. It is not our design, in these Commentaries, to enter upon any consideration of the general doctrines relative to the rights, duties, powers, and interests of husband and wife, which are recognised at the Common Law. That would properly belong to a treatise of a very different nature. It will be sufficient, for our present purpose, to examine those particulars only, which are peculiar to Courts of Equity, or in which a remedial justice is applied by them beyond, or unknown to, the Common Law.

§ 1367. It is well known, that, at the Common Law, the husband and wife are treated, for most purposes, as one person; that is to say, the very being or legal existence of the woman, as a distinct person, is suspended during the marriage, or at least is incorporated and consolidated with that of her husband.<sup>1</sup> Upon this principle of the union of person in husband and wife depend almost all the legal rights, duties, and disabilities, which either of them acquire by or during the marriage.<sup>1</sup> For this reason, a man cannot grant any thing to his wife, or enter into a covenant with her; for the grant would be to suppose her to possess a distinct and separate existence. And, therefore, it is also generally true, that contracts, made between husband and wife when single, are avoided by the intermarriage.<sup>2</sup> Upon the same ground it is, that if the wife be injured in her person or property during the marriage, she can bring no action for redress without the concurrence of her husband; neither can she be sued, without making her husband also a party in the cause.<sup>3</sup> All this is very different in the Civil Law, where the husband and wife are considered as two distinct persons; and may have separate estates, contracts, debts, and injuries;<sup>4</sup> and may also, by agreement with each other, have a community of interest in the nature of a partnership.

<sup>1</sup> 1 Black. Comm. 442.—I have qualified Blackstone's text by adding the words "for most purposes;" for in some respects, even at law, she is treated as a distinct person; as, for example, she may commit crimes separately from her husband; she may act as an attorney for him, or for others; she may levy a fine; she may swear articles of peace against him.

§ 1368. Now, in Courts of Equity, although the principles of law in regard to husband and wife are fully recognised and enforced in proper cases; yet they are not exclusively considered. On the contrary, Courts of Equity, for many purposes, treat the husband and wife, as the Civil Law treats them, as distinct persons, capable (in a limited sense) of contracting with each other, of suing each other, and of having separate estates, debts, and interests.<sup>5</sup> A wife may, in a Court of Equity, sue her husband, and be sued by him.<sup>1</sup> And in cases respecting her separate estate, she may also be sued without him;<sup>2</sup> although he is ordinarily required to be joined, for the sake of conformity to the rule of law, as a nominal party, whenever he is within the jurisdiction of the Court, and can be made a party.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1369. In the further illustrations of this subject we shall consider; first, the cases, in which contracts between husband and wife will be recognised and enforced in Equity; secondly, the manner, in which a wife may acquire a separate estate, and her powers and interest therein; thirdly, the equity of the wife to a settlement out of her own property, not reduced into the possession of her husband; and fourthly, her claim in Equity for maintenance and alimony.

§ 1370. And, first, in regard to contracts between husband and wife. By the general rules of law, as has been already stated, the contracts, made between husband and wife before marriage, become by their matrimonial union utterly extinguished.<sup>4</sup> Thus, for example, if a man should give a bond to his wife, or a wife to her husband, before marriage, the contract created thereby would at law be discharged by the intermarriage.<sup>5</sup> Courts of Equity, although they generally follow the same doctrine, will, in special cases, in furtherance of the manifest intentions and objects of the parties, carry into effect such a contract made before marriage between husband and wife, although it would be avoided at law.<sup>1</sup> An agreement, therefore, entered into by husband and wife before marriage for the mutual settlement of their estates, or of the estate of either upon the other, upon the marriage, even without the intervention of trustees, will be enforced in Equity, although void at law; for Equity will not suffer the intention of the parties to be defeated by the very act, which is designed to give effect to such a contract.<sup>2</sup> On this ground, where a wife before marriage gave a bond to her intended husband, that, in case the marriage took effect, she would convey her estate to him in fee, the bond was, after the marriage, carried into effect in Equity, although it was discharged at law. Upon that occasion the Lord Chancellor said; "It is unreasonable, that the inter-marriage, upon which alone the bond was to take effect should itself be a destruction of the bond. And the foundation of that notion is, that at law the husband and wife being one person, the husband cannot sue the wife on this agreement; whereas, in Equity it is constant experience, that the husband may sue the wife, or the wife the husband; and the husband might sue the wife upon this very agreement."<sup>3</sup>

§ 1371. Even at law a bond given by a husband to his intended wife, upon a condition not to be performed in his lifetime, (as, for instance, to leave her at his death £1000,) would not be extinguished by the inter-marriage; for marriage extinguishes such contracts only, as are for debts or things, which are due in presenti, or in futuro, or upon a contingency, which may occur during the coverture. But where the debt or thing cannot be due until after the coverture is dissolved, the contract is only suspended, and not extinguished during the coverture.<sup>1</sup> A fortiori, such an agreement would be specifically decreed in a Court of Equity.<sup>2</sup> Therefore, where a husband covenanted before marriage with his intended wife, that she should have power to dispose of £300 of her estate, he was afterwards held bound specifically to perform it.<sup>3</sup> The wife may even execute a power to dispose of property, so reserved to her, in favor of her husband.<sup>4</sup> them a mere nullity; for there is deemed to be a positive incapacity in each to contract with the other. But here again, although Courts of Equity follow the law, they will, under particular circumstances, give full effect and validity to post-nuptial contracts.<sup>1</sup> Thus, for example, if a wife having a separate estate, should bonâ fide enter into a contract with her husband to make him a certain allowance out of the income of such separate estate for a reasonable consideration, the contract, although void at law, would be held obligatory, and would be enforced in Equity.<sup>2</sup> So, if the husband should after marriage for good reasons contract with his wife, that she should separately possess and enjoy property bequeathed to her, the contract would be upheld in Equity.<sup>3</sup> So, if husband and wife, for a bonâ fide and valuable consideration, should agree, that he should purchase land, and build a house thereon for her, and she should pay him therefor out of the proceeds of her own real estate; if he should perform the contract on his side, she also would be compelled to perform it on her side.<sup>4</sup> Nay, if an estate should be devised to a husband for the separate use of his wife, it would be considered as a trust *for the wife, and he would be compelled to perform it.<sup>5</sup> [*602] become a creditor of her husband by acts and contracts during marriage; and her rights, as such, will be enforced against him and his representatives. Thus, for example, if a wife should unite with her husband to pledge her estate, or otherwise to raise a sum of money out of it to pay his debts, or to answer his necessities; whatever might be the mode adopted to carry that purpose into effect, the transaction would in Equity be treated according to the true intent of the parties. She would be deemed a creditor or a surety for him, (if so originally understood between them) for the sum so paid; and she would be entitled to reimbursement out of his estate, and to the like privileges as belong to other creditors.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1374. In respect also to gifts or grants of property by a husband to his wife after marriage, they are ordinarily (but not universally) void at law. But Courts of Equity will uphold them in many cases, where they would be held void at law; although in other cases, the rule of law will be recognised and enforced. Thus, for example, if a husband should by deed grant all his estate or property to his wife, the [*603] deed would be held inoperative in *Equity, as it would be in law; for it could in no just sense be deemed a reasonable provision for her, (which is all that Courts of Equity hold the wife entitled to); and in giving her the whole he would surrender all his own interests.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1375. But, on the other hand, if the nature and circumstances of the gift or grant, whether it be express or implied, are such, that there is no ground to suspect fraud, but it amounts only to a reasonable provision for the wife, it will, even though made after coverture, be sustained in Equity.<sup>1</sup> Thus, for example, gifts made by the husband to the wife during the coverture, to purchase clothes, or personal ornaments, or for her separate expenditures (commonly called pin-money), and personal savings and profits made by her in her domestic management, which the husband allows her to apply to her own separate use,<sup>2</sup> will be held to vest in her, as against her husband, (but not as against his creditors), an unimpeachable right of property therein, so that they may be treated as her exclusive and separate estate.<sup>3</sup> It is true, that Courts of Equity will require clear and incontrovertible evidence to establish such gifts, as a matter of intention and fact; but when that is established, full effect will be given to them.<sup>4</sup> A fortiori, such allowances provided for *by marriage articles, or by a settlement before [*604] marriage, even without the intervention of trustees, will be deemed valid in Equity to all intents and purposes, not only against the husband, but also against his creditors. § 1375. a. Pin-money is a very peculiar sort of gift for a particular purpose and object, and whether it is secured by a settlement or otherwise, it is still required to be applied to those purposes and objects. It is not deemed to be an absolute gift, or, as it is sometimes said, out and out, by the husband to the wife. It is not considered like money set apart for the sole and separate use of the wife during coverture, excluding the jus mariti. But it is a sum set apart for a specific purpose, due or given to the wife in virtue of a particular arrangement, payable and paid by the husband in virtue of that arrangement, and for that specific purpose. Pin-money is a sum paid in respect to the personal expense of the wife, for her dress and pocket money; and hence, as the very name seems to import, it has a connexion with her person, and is to deck and attire it. The husband, therefore, as well as the wife, may be said to have an interest in it; for the wife is to dress (it has been said) according to his rank and not her own. It is upon this ground, that Courts of Equity refuse to go back to call upon the husband to pay beyond the arrears of a year, although stipulated for by a marriage settlement; for the money is meant to dress the wife during the year, so as to keep up the dignity of the husband, and not for the accumulation of the fund. This provides a check and control to the husband. It prevents the wife from mispending the money. It secures the appropriation of the money to its natural and original purpose. It is with this view, quite as much as on account of the presumed satisfaction by acquiescence, that Courts of Equity have established the principle above stated, not to allow the wife to claim pin-money beyond the year. On the same ground it is, that the personal representatives of the wife are not allowed to make any claim for the arrears of pin-money, not even for arrears of a year; for the allowance has a sole regard to the personal dress and expenses of the wife herself during that period. And hence also it is, that if the wife becomes insane, and remains so until her death, if the husband has maintained her, and taken suitable care of her, according to her rank and condition, Courts of Equity will not allow her personal representatives to make any claim for any arrearages of pin-money, even secured by a marriage settlement.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Howard v. Digby, 8 Bligh, R. 224, 246 to 250. Id. 252, 257, 261, 262, 266, 267, 269, 271. The whole of this section is abstracted from the elaborate and able opinion of the Lord Chancellor in this case. In one part of his opinion the noble Lord said; "It is wonderful, indeed, how little there is to be found upon the subject of pin-money, notwithstanding its occurring almost every time, that a marriage takes place among persons of large fortune. You cannot even get a definition from the books, upon which you can rely; you cannot trace the line, which divides it from the separate property of the wife with any distinctness, or in a way on which you can depend. And as to authority either of decisions or dicta, or text writers, or obiter dicta of judges, there is nothing, that furnishes a clear and steady light on the subject; the cases running from pin-money into separate estate, and from separate estate into pin-money, in such a way, that when a text writer quotes a case, Brodie v. Barry, (2 Ves. & B. 36,) for instance, in support of a doctrine touching pin-money, you look at the book, and find it has nothing to do with pin-money, and does not support the proposition, for which it is cited." Again, "It is a very material fact, in a case where authority is so little to be had, that the general opinion of all those, who give pin-money, either to their own wives, or to the wives of their sons, upon marriage, should be entirely coin-

cident with the view, to which the argument had led ; namely, that it is a sum allowed to save the trouble of a constant recurrence by the wife to the husband upon every occasion of a milliner's bill, upon every occasion of a jeweller's account coming in,—I mean not the jeweller's account for the jewels, because that is a very different question,—but I mean for the repair and the wear and tear of trinkets, and for pocket money, and things of that sort ; I do not of course mean the carriage, and the house, and the gardens, but the ordinary personal expenses. It is in order to avoid the necessity of a perpetual recurrence by the wife to the husband, that a sum of money is settled at the marriage, which is to be set apart to the use of the wife, for the purpose of bearing those personal expenses." Again ; "It is meant for the wife's expenditure on her person—it is to meet her personal expenses, and to deck her person suitably to her husband's dignity, that is, suitably to the rank and station of his wife. It is a fund, which she may be made to spend during the coverture by the intercession and advice and at the instance of her husband. I will not go so far as to say, because it is not necessary for the purpose of this argument, that he might hold back her pin-money, if she did not attire herself in a becoming way. I should not be afraid, however, of stretching the proposition to that extent. But I am not bound here to do so, because if during her coverture a claim were made by her (and this is one distinction between the claim of the wife and the claim of her personal representatives after her death,) the absurd and incredible state of things, that I have put, as the consequence of their argument,—the case of her attiring herself in an unbecoming manner,—never could happen, if the pin-money is only to be claimed by herself ; for in that case the duke would of course say, 'If you do not dress as you ought to do, what occasion have you for pin-money ?' He need not refuse, but he remonstrates ; he uses that influence, which the law supposes him legitimately to have over his wife, and sees that the fund is duly expended for its proper purpose. Now, the purpose is not the purpose of the wife alone ; it is for the establishment ; it is for the joint concern ; it is for the maintenance of the common dignity ; it is for the support of that family, whose brightest ornament very probably is the wife ; whose support and strength is the husband, but whose ornament is the wife. It is to support the dignity and splendor of the joint establishment, consisting of husband and wife, that part of the whole expenditure is for the support of the wife herself. Then does it not follow from thence, that the husband has a direct interest in the expenditure of the pin-money ? He has a right to have the pleasure of it, to have the credit of it, to be spared the eyesore of a wife appearing, as misbecomes his station—That is the destination and the object of pin-money." Post, § 1396, § 1425, note.

a term originally of Greek derivation (where it means something reserved over and above dower, or a dotal portion,) and afterwards imported into the Civil Law, and from thence adopted into the language of the Common Law,<sup>1</sup> in which it includes all the personal apparel and ornaments of the wife, which she possesses, and which are suitable to her rank and condition in life.<sup>2</sup> At law, the husband in his lifetime may dispose of her paraphernalia, excepting, indeed, her necessary apparel; and they are liable to the claims of creditors, with the like exception.<sup>3</sup> But the wife is, even at law, entitled *to her paraphernalia against his repre- [*605] sentatives; for the husband cannot by will dispose of them, or leave them to his representatives.<sup>4</sup> Courts of Equity fully recognise this right of the husband and his creditors; although in case of the latter, if there are any other personal assets of the husband, they will, after his death, be marshalled against his representatives in favor of the widow.<sup>5</sup>

§ 1377. There is, however, a distinction upon this subject of paraphernalia, which is entitled to consideration. Where the husband, either before or after marriage, gives to his wife articles of a paraphernal nature, they are not treated as absolute gifts to her, as her own separate property ; for, if they were, she might dispose of them at any time, and he could not appropriate them to his own use. But they are deemed as, technically, paraphernalia, to be worn by the wife as ornaments of her person ; and so to be deemed gifts sub modo only.<sup>1</sup> But if the like articles were bestowed upon her by a father, or by a relative, or even by a stranger, before or after marriage, they would be deemed absolute gifts to her separate use ; and, then, if received with the consent of the husband, he could not, nor could his creditors, dispose [*606] *of them any more than they could of any other property received and held to her separate use.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1378. In the next place, as to the manner, in which a married woman may acquire a separate estate, and as to her powers and interests therein. It is well known, that the strict rules of the old Common Law would not permit the wife to take or enjoy any real or personal estate, separate from or independent of her husband. And, although these rules have been in some degree relaxed and modified in modern times ; yet they have still a very comprehensive influence and operation in Courts of Law.<sup>1</sup> On the other hand Courts of Equity have, for a great length of time, admitted the doctrine, that a married woman is capable of taking real and personal estate to her own separate and exclusive use ; and that she has also an incidental power to dispose of it.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1379. The power to hold real and personal property to her own separate and exclusive use may be, and often is, reserved to her by marriage articles, or by an actual settlement made before marriage ; and, in that case, the agreement becomes completely obligatory between the parties after marriage, and regulates their future rights, interests, and duties. In like manner, real and personal property may be secured for the separate and exclusive use of a married woman after marriage ; and thus the arrangement may acquire a complete obligation between the parties.<sup>3</sup>

*§ 1380. It was formerly supposed, that the [607*] interposition of trustees was in all arrangements of this sort, whether made before or after marriage, indispensable for the protection of the wife's rights and interests. In other words, it was deemed absolutely necessary, that the property, of which the wife was to have the separate and exclusive use, should be vested in trustees for her benefit ; and that the agreement of the husband should be made with such trustees, or at least, with persons capable of contracting with him for her benefit.<sup>1</sup> But, although in strict propriety that should always be done, and it usually is done in regular and well considered settlements; yet it has for more than a century been established in Courts of Equity, that the intervention of trustees is not indispensable; and that whenever real or personal property is given or devised or settled upon a married woman, either before or after marriage, for her separate and exclusive use, without the intervention of trustees, the intention of the parties shall be effectuated in Equity, and the wife's interest protected against the marital rights and claims of her husband.<sup>2</sup> In all such cases the husband will be held a mere trustee for her; and although the agreement is made between him and her alone, the [*608] trust *will attach upon him, and be enforced in the same manner, and under the same circumstances, that it would be, if he were a mere stranger.<sup>3</sup> It will make no difference, whether the separate estate be derived from her husband himself, or from a mere stranger; for, as to such separate estate, when obtained in either way, her husband will be treated as a mere trustee, and prohibited from disposing of it to her prejudice.

§ 1381. Under what circumstances property given, secured, or bequeathed to the wife, will be deemed a trust for her separate and exclusive use, is a matter, which, upon the authorities, involves some nice distinctions. There is no doubt, that when from the terms of the gift, settlement, or bequest, the property is expressly, or by just implication, designed to be for her separate and exclusive use, (for technical words are not necessary,) the intention will be fully acted upon; and the rights and interests of the wife sedulously protected in Equity.<sup>1</sup> But the question, which most frequently arises, is, what words are sufficiently expressive of such a purpose; for the purpose must clearly appear beyond any reasonable doubt; otherwise the husband will retain his ordinary, legal, and marital rights over it.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1382. On the one hand, if the language of marriage settlement made before marriage, or of a gift *or bequest to a married woman after marriage, [*609] be, that she is to have the property “to her sole use or disposal;” or “to her separate use or disposal;”<sup>3</sup> or, “to her sole use and benefit;”<sup>4</sup> or, “for her own use, and at her own disposal;”<sup>5</sup> or, “to her own use during her life, independent of her husband ;”<sup>1</sup> or, “that she shall enjoy and receive the issues and profits ;”<sup>2</sup> or, that it is an allowance as or for pin-money (eo nomine) ;<sup>3</sup> in all these cases the marital rights of her husband will be excluded, and the property will be for her exclusive use. So, a bequest to a married woman, “her receipt to the executors to be a sufficient discharge to the executors,” is equivalent to saying, to her sole and separate use.<sup>4</sup> So, money paid to the husband “for the livelihood of the wife ;” and money given to a married woman for her own use, “independent of her husband ;” and money or stock given to such a married woman, “not to be disposed of by her husband without her consent ;” will be construed to give her the property to her sole and separate use.<sup>5</sup> So, a bequest to a married woman and her infant daughter to be equally divided between them, share and share alike, “for their own use and benefit independent of any other person,” will be construed to mean to their sole and separate use.<sup>6</sup> So, a bequest to a married woman “for her benefit, independent of the control of her husband,” will receive the like [*610] construction.<sup>7</sup> In all these *cases the words manifest an unequivocal intent to exclude the power and marital rights of the husband.

§ 1383. On the other hand, a gift or bequest, after marriage, to a married woman, "for her own use and benefit;"<sup>1</sup> or, "to pay the same into her own proper hands, to and for her own use and benefit;"<sup>2</sup> have been held not to amount to a sufficient expression of an intention to exclude the marital rights of the husband; for although the money is to be paid into her own hands, or to her own use, yet there is nothing in that inconsistent with its being subject to his marital rights.<sup>3</sup> So, an annuity given in trust for a married woman for life, "to pay the same to her and her assigns," will not exclude the marital rights of the husband.<sup>4</sup>

§ 1384. A distinction has also been taken between the case of a gift or bequest to a married woman, and the case of a gift or bequest to an unmarried woman generally, and not in the contemplation *of an immediate marriage, or as a [*611] provision for that event. For if a gift or bequest should be made to an unmarried woman, to be at her own disposal, or for her sole and separate use,

But these opinions seem to have proceeded in a good measure upon a misunderstanding of the case of Johnes v. Lockhart, now correctly reported in 3 Bro. Ch. R. 383, Mr. Belt's note, where the doctrine of the text is explicitly supported. The case of Brown v. Clark, (3 Ves. 166,) shows, how nicely language is sometimes interpreted to sustain the marital rights of the husband.

This question has been much discussed in the English Courts and no small diversity of opinion has been expressed on it by the learned Judges in Equity. The doctrine stated in the text is supported by the cases above cited. But the Vice Chancellor (Sir Lancelot Shadwell) in Davies v. Thornycroft, 6 Sim. R. 420, held, that there was no difference, whether the bequest or trust was for the separate use of a married woman, or an unmarried woman; for in each case it would be a trust for her separate use and good as such against a present or future husband. (See also Maber v. Hobbs, 2 Younge & Coll. 317.) The same doctrine was held by Sir John Leach in Anderson v. Anderson, 2 Mylne & Keen, 427. In Bradley v. Hughes, 8 Sim. R. 149, the Vice Chancellor admitted, that it was now settled, that if property be given for the separate use of a woman during a particular coverture, she may after that coverture is gone alienate it, even though it is intended for her separate use. In Scarborough v. Borman decided in Nov. 1838, 17 Law Journ. p. 10 to 24, the Master of the Rolls (Lord Langdale) held, that a gift to the sole and separate use of an unmarried woman was good against an after taken husband. In the very recent case of Nedby v. Nedby, before the Lord Chancellor (Lord Cottenham) in January 1839, the point was directly made; but the Lord Chancellor refused to decide it on an interlocutory motion, at the same time admitting the authorities to be in conflict. So that the law upon this point is still left in a state of some uncertainty.

ently of any such custom, be established by an agreement between the husband and wife before or after marriage. When such an agreement is entered into before marriage, it stands upon a valuable consideration; and, therefore, if there is the interposition of trustees, it will be maintained against the husband and his creditors, as well at law as in Equity. In such a case the trustees of the wife will be entitled to the property assigned, and to the increase and profits thereof, for her sole and separate use and benefit. The wife will, even at law, be considered as the mere agent of her trustees, and her possession as their possession. Even if no trustees are interposed the property *will in the like case be protected in Equity [*612] against the claims of the husband and his creditors, and excepted out of the general rules, which govern in cases of husband and wife.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1387. We here perceive, that the law will give effect to such agreements, only when those forms have been observed, which will vest the property in parties, capable of enforcing the proper rights of the wife in legal tribunals; as is the case, where the property is vested in trustees for her sole use and benefit, in order to enable her to carry on trade. But Courts of Equity will go further; and if there is [*613] *any such agreement before marriage, resting in articles and without trustees, by which she is to be permitted to carry on business on her sole and separate account; or if, without any such antenuptial agreement, the husband should permit her, after marriage, to carry on business on her sole and separate account; all, that she earns in the trade, will be deemed to be her separate property, and disposable by her as such, subject, however, to the claims of third persons properly affecting it.<sup>2</sup> In the former case, the earnings will, in Equity, be supported for her separate use against her husband and his creditors; in the latter, against him only, unless the permission after marriage arises from a valuable consideration.<sup>3</sup> So, if a husband should desert his wife, and she should be enabled, by the aid of her friends, to carry on a separate trade (as that of a milliner), her earnings in

§ *1388. It remains to say a few words on [*614] the subject of the wife's power to dispose of her separate property, and of its liability for her contracts and debts. Wherever a trust is created or a power is reserved by a settlement, to enable the wife after marriage to dispose of her separate property, either real or personal, it may be executed by her in the very manner provided for, whether it be by deed or other writing, or by a will or appointment. And Courts of Equity will in all cases enforce against heirs, devisees, and trustees, as well as against the husband and his representatives, the rights of the donee, or appointee of the wife.<sup>2</sup> But where no such settlement, trust, or power is created before marriage, but it rests in a mere agreement between the husband and wife, it was formerly a matter of doubt, whether the wife could dispose of her separate real estate, so as effectually to

But if no trustees intervened, and the agreement was after marriage, then the husband would be liable for the debts at law. At least, he would be liable, unless a credit was exclusively given to the wife in relation to the trade; or the trade had been carried on without his sanction or permission. If, however, he should be liable at law, a Court of Equity would relieve him, at least, to the extent of making the funds in the trade applicable to the payment of the debts. bind it; although it was admitted, that she had a full power to dispose of her personal estate.

§ 1389. The distinction, and the reasons for it, are very clearly stated by Lord Hardwicke. "Agreements," (said he,) "for settling estates to the separate use of the wife on marriage, are very frequent, relating both to real and personal estate. As to personal; undoubtedly, where there is an agreement between husband and wife before marriage, that the wife shall have to her separate use, either the whole, or par-[*615] ticular parts, she may *dispose of it by an act in her life or will. She may do it by either, though nothing is said of the manner of disposing of it. But there is a much stronger ground in that case, than there can be in the case of real estate; because, that is to take effect during the life of the husband; for, if the husband survives, he is entitled to the whole; and none can come into a share with the husband on the Statute of Distributions. Then, such an agreement binds and bars the husband, and consequently bars every body. But it is very different, as to real estate; for her real estate will descend to her heir at law, and that more or less beneficially; for the husband may be tenant by the curtesy, if they have issue; otherwise not. But still it descends to her heir at law. Undoubtedly, on her marriage, a woman may take such a method, that she may dispose of that real estate from going to her heir at law; that is, she may do it without a fine. But I doubt, whether it can be done but by way of trust or of power over an use."<sup>1</sup>

doctrine is now firmly established by the highest authority, that in such a case Courts of Equity will compel the heir of the wife to make a conveyance to the party, in whose favor she has made a disposition of the real estate; in other words, he will be treated as a trustee of the donee, or appointee of the wife.<sup>1</sup> So, that it may *now be laid down as a general rule, that [*616] all antenuptial agreements for securing to a wife separate property, will, unless the contrary is stipulated or implied, give her, in Equity, the full power of disposing of the same, whether real or personal, by any suitable act or instrument in her lifetime, or by her last will, in the same manner and to the same extent, as if she were a feme sole.<sup>2</sup> And in all cases, where a power for this purpose is reserved to her by means of a trust, which is created for the purpose, she may execute the power without joining her trustees, unless it is made necessary by the instrument of trust.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1391. In regard to the power of the wife to dispose of her separate property, where no trust is interposed, but it rests merely upon a postnuptial agreement of the husband, there is a material distinction, whether it be personal estate, or it be real estate. In the former case her power to dispose of it can affect her husband's rights only; and, therefore, his assent is conclusive upon him.<sup>1</sup> But it is very different in respect to her real estate; for, here, her own heirs are, or may be, deeply affected in their interests by descent. Now, by the general principles of law, a married woman is during her coverture disabled from entering into any contract respecting her real property, either to bind herself, or to bind her heirs. And this disability can be overcome only by adopting the precise means allowed by law to dispose of her real estate; as in England by a fine, and in America by a solemn

When a married woman has an absolute power to dispose of property, she may execute it in any manner capable of transferring it. When she has a power only over it, she must dispose of it in the manner prescribed by the power. And this distinction is very important; for, in many cases, Courts of Equity will not interpose to aid the defective execution of powers in favor of volunteers, whatever it may do in favor of purchasers. conveyance.<sup>1</sup> It is true, that the husband, by his own postnuptial agreement with his wife, may bind his own interest in her real estate, and convert *himself [*618] into a trustee for her. But he cannot trench upon the rights of her heir, who is no party to such an agreement. And, under such circumstances, the latter will take her real estate by descent, unaffected by any of the trusts springing from the agreement.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1392. The remarks, which have been made, apply to the case of the real estate of the wife, already vested in her, as affected by her own antenuptial or postnuptial agreement with her husband. But the question may arise, as to her rights and power over real estate, which is given by a third person to her during her coverture for her separate use, with a power to dispose of the same, where no trustees are interposed to protect the exercise of the power.<sup>3</sup> As to this, the received doctrine seems to be, that if an estate is during coverture given to a married woman and her heirs for her separate use, without more, she cannot, in Equity, dispose of the fee from her heirs; but she must dispose of it, if at all, in the manner prescribed by law; as by a fine.<sup>4</sup> But, if in such a case a clause is expressly superadded, that she shall have

§ 1393. As to personal property, and the income of real property, we have already seen, that, if they are given for the separate use of a married woman, she has, in Equity, a full power to dispose of them at her pleasure.<sup>3</sup> But qualifications may be attached to the gift, which will control this absolute power; and, on the other hand, this absolute power may exist, notwithstanding words accompany the gift, which may seem, primâ facie, intended to confer the power sub

Thus, for example, if there be an express limitation to a married woman for life, with a power to dispose of the same property by will; there, her interest will be deemed a partial interest, and equivalent to a life estate only; and she cannot dispose of the property absolutely, except in the manner prescribed by the power.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1394. On the other hand, if the property is expressly given to a married woman, “to her for her sole and separate use,” without saying, for life; and she is further authorized to dispose of the same by will; in such a case, the gift will be construed to confer on her the absolute property; and, consequently, she may dispose of it otherwise than by will; for the absolute property being given, the power becomes nugatory, and is construed to be nothing more, than an anxious expression of the donor, that she may have an uncontrolled power of disposing of the property.<sup>2</sup> So,

Farrer*, 16 Ves. 86; Ante, § 974, (a.)—Some very nice distinctions exist in the cases on this subject. Thus, in Bradley v. Westcott, 13 Ves. 445, 451, where A. bequeathed to his wife B. all his personal estate for life, to be at her absolute disposal during that period; and after her death he gave such of his wife's jewels, &c. household furniture, and plate, which she should be possessed of at the time of her death, together with £500, to such persons as she should appoint by her will; and, in default of such appointment, the same to fall into the residuum of his personal estate, which he afterwards bequeathed to other persons; Sir Wm. Grant held, that the wife took an estate for life only in the whole, with a power of appointment. On that occasion he said; “The distinction is perhaps slight, which exists between a gift for life, with a power of disposition superadded, and a gift to a person indefinitely, with a superadded power to dispose by deed or will. But that distinction is perfectly established, that in the latter case the property

if a limitation be to a married woman for life for her sole and separate use, with a particular power of appointment of the property, and in default of any appointment, the property is limited to her personal representatives, she will, or at least may, under such circumstances, be deemed the absolute owner ; and as such, she will have an unqualified power to dispose of the property generally, without any exercise of the power of appointment.<sup>1</sup>

vests. A gift to A. and to such person, as he shall appoint, is absolute property in A. without any appointment. But if it is to him for life, and after his death to such person, as he shall appoint by will, he must make an appointment in order to entitle that person to any thing." In Barford v. Street, (16 Ves. 135,) where there was a gift for life to A. with a power of appointment by deed, or writing, or will, and some special limitations, it was held, that A. had an estate for life, with an unqualified power of appointing the inheritance; and that comprehended every thing. So that A. was held to be entitled, as absolute owner. The case of Irwin v. Farrer, 19 Ves. 86, is still stronger. See also the case of Smith v. Bell, 6 Peters, R. 68; *Acton v. R. 1.—The doctrine stated in the text, that, where there is a bequest to a married woman for life, for her sole and separate use, with a power of appointment, and in default of such appointment, to her personal representatives, she may, under such circumstances, take the absolute interest, is fully supported by the language of Sir Wm. Grant, in Anderson v. Dawson, (15 Ves. 533, 536,) and is distinguished by him from the case, where,

in default of the appointment, the property is to go "to her next of kin." "There is," said he, "a great difference between a limitation to the executors and administrators, and a limitation to the next of kin. The former is, as to personal property, the same as a limitation to the right heirs, as to real estate. But a limitation to the next of kin is like a limitation to heirs of a particular description; which would not give the ancestor, having a particular estate, the whole property in the land. Mr. Roper, (2 Roper on Husband and Wife, ch. 20, § 2, p. 211 to 213,) however, thinks the doctrine ill founded. His remarks are as follows. "The reader's attention is requested to the circumstance, that in the cases before stated upon the present subject, with the exception of Sockett v. Wray, the ultimate limitation of the property, in default of the wife's appointment, was not to herself, but to a stranger, or to her next of kin. Because it has been intimated in some of those cases, that although an express estate be given to the wife's separate use for life, with a power to dispose of the principal; yet, if, in default of appointment, such principal be limited to her executors or administrators, and not to her next of kin, the absolute interest in the fund will vest in her, and be disposable with her husband's concurrence, without resort to the particular power given her for the purpose. The principle of the distinction is this; that in the first case the wife is to be considered complete mistress or owner of the property, the effect of such limitation being compared to that of a limitation to her right heirs, which, in the instance of real estates, vests the absolute inheritance. But that in the second case, the limitation to the wife's next of kin, being the same in effect, as that to particular heirs, which, if the subject were lands, would not pass the fee to a donee or devisee, will not therefore vest the absolute interest in personal estate in the wife; and consequently, that in order to dispose of the capital, the wife must have resort to her special power. It is, however, submitted, that this analogy between real and personal estates is not applicable to the subject now under consideration. But that, when the limitation, in default of appointment, is to the wife's executors or administrators, it will be required, that she should execute her power, in order to dispose of the fund during her marriage. The reasons are these; admitting the limitation to impart to the wife the absolute interest in the fund; yet, she being a married woman, the effect of such a limitation to her is quite different from a similar one to a man or to a single woman. For in the instance of such a limitation to a married woman, who is under a legal incapacity to dispose of property during coverture, there is no repugnancy nor inconsistency between a limitation to her of the absolute interest, and a particular power of disposition over it during the marriage; as appears in a former part of this work relating to powers, and also question naturally arises, whether she may bestow it by appointment, or otherwise, upon her husband; or whether the legal disability attaches to such a transaction. Upon this subject the doctrine is now firmly established in Equity, that she may bestow her separate property by appointment, or otherwise, upon her husband, as well as upon a stranger. But, at the same time, Courts of Equity examine every such trans- [*624] action between husband and wife with an *anxious watchfulness, and caution, and dread of undue influence; and if they are required to give sanction or effect to it, they will examine the wife in Court, and under the title Curtesy, where it is shown, that an equitable interest for the wife's separate use for life in real estate, and the ultimate limitation to her of the fee simple, do not unite in such a manner, as to merge the particular estate and extinguish the special limitation to her separate use for life. The analogy, therefore, mentioned in the commencement of these observations, is inapplicable to limitations to married women; and it does not authorize the conclusion, that, when the wife has an estate to her separate use for life in personal property, with a power of appointment, and the absolute interest is limited to her, if she do not execute the power, she has, in analogy to similar limitations of real estates at law, such an absolute estate, as of necessity enables her to dispose of the property, without regard to her special authority to do so. This necessity, therefore, not existing, and when the settlor's intention in giving such a power is considered, as also the anxiety of a Court of Equity to protect the wife's property against improvident dispositions of it from restraint, &c., during the marriage, it seems but reasonable, that, when an express estate for life in personalty is limited to her for her separate use, with a power of appointment, and in default of its execution to her, her executors or administrators, the same appointment should be considered necessary, as has been decided to be so, when the ultimate limitation in default of appointment is to her next of kin." There are also some nice distinctions in Richards v. Chambers, 10 Ves. 584; Ellis v. Atkinson, 3 Bro. Ch. R. 565, and Mr. Belt's note, which, unless they proceed upon the peculiar ground, that there was a contingent interest by survivorship in the wife, would seem to favor Mr. Roper's opinion. adopt other precautions to ascertain her unbiased will and wishes.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1396. Courts of Equity will not only sanction such a disposition of the wife's separate property in favor of her husband, when already made; but they will also, in proper, cases, upon her application and consent, given in Court, decree such property to be passed to her husband, whether it be in possession or reversion, in such a manner as she shall prescribe.<sup>2</sup> In the same way her separate estate may be charged with and made liable for his debts.<sup>3</sup> But Courts of Equity have no authority even with the consent of the wife, to transfer to the husband any property, secured to her sole and separate use for life, where no power of disposition is reserved to her over the property, or beyond the power reserved to her.<sup>4</sup> And, therefore, if the husband should receive such property, he will ordinarily be compelled to account therefor. The same rule will apply, where the husband has by a settlement contracted to allow a specific annual sum (not money) for her sole and separate use, as for example, £100, or £1000 a year ; for in such cases if he does not pay it, he will be held liable for the ar- [*625] rears.<sup>1</sup> *Where, indeed, the husband, with the consent of his wife, is in the habit of receiving the income, profits, and dividends of her separate estate, Courts of Equity regard the transaction, as shewing her voluntary choice thus to dispose of it for the use and benefit of the family ; and they will not, ordinarily, require him to account therefor, beyond the income, profits, and dividends received during the then last year,<sup>2</sup> any more than they will to account for arrears of the wife's pin-money beyond the year.<sup>3</sup> But a distinction would probably be taken between the year's arrears of pin-money, and the year's arrears of the wife's other separate personal estate, so that her personal representatives might claim the latter, but not the former.<sup>4</sup>

for any contracts, debts, or other charges created by her during her coverture. At law, she is during the coverture generally incapable of entering into any valid contract, to bind either her person, or her estate.<sup>1</sup> In Equity, also, it is now clearly established, that she cannot by contract bind her person, or her property generally. The only remedy allowed will be against her separate property.<sup>2</sup> The reason of this distinc-

Wigzell*, 1 Madd. R. 258. In this last case the principal authorities are collected and commented on, by Sir Thomas Plumer, and the doctrine in the text maintained. In Aylett v. Ashton, 1 Mylne & Craig, 105, 111, the Master of the Rolls (now Lord Cottenham) said; "The doctrine as to how far the Court will execute a contract entered into by a feme covert as to her separate estate was very fully discussed, and all the cases were cited, by Sir Thomas Plumer, in the case of Francis v. Wigzell, (1 Madd. 258.) It was there decided, and clearly in conformity with all previous decisions, that the Court has no power against a feme covert, in personam, but that if she has separate property, the Court has control over that separate property. In all cases, however, the Court must proceed in rem. against the property. A feme covert is not competent to enter into contracts, so as to give a personal remedy against her. Although she may become entitled to property for her separate use, she is no more capable of contracting than before. A personal contract would be within the incapacity, under which a feme covert labors. Sir T. Plumer says, "There is no case, in which this Court has made a personal decree against a feme covert. She may pledge her separate property, and make it answerable for her engagements; but where her trustees are not made parties to a bill, and no particular fund is sought to be charged, but, only a personal decree against her, the bill cannot be sustained." Sir. T. Plumer there refers to Hulme v. Tenant, (1 Bro. C. C. 16.) before Lord Thurlow, and to Nantes v. Corrock (9 Ves. 182.) where Lord Eldon, following the case before Lord Thurlow, lays down the rule in precisely the same terms. The present bill does not seek to affect the separate property except through Mrs. Ashton personally. If it had sought to affect the property, upon the ground that the contract had given the plaintiff a right against the property, the suit would have been brought against the trustees; for or independent of her husband, the title would vest absolutely in her, as owner; and the property would not, upon her subsequent marriage, be held by her in any other manner, than her other absolute property; but it would be subject to the marital rights of her husband.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1385. Cases also may occur of a separate estate, and even of a separate liability of a wife, of a more enlarged nature. This question has been much discussed in the English Courts and no small diversity of opinion has been expressed on it by the learned Judges in Equity. The doctrine stated in the text is supported by the cases above cited. But the Vice Chancellor (Sir Lancelot Shadwell) in Davies v. Thornycroft, 6 Sim. R. 420, held, that there was no difference, whether the bequest or trust was for the separate use of a married woman, or an unmarried woman; for in each case it would be a trust for her separate use and good as such against a present or future husband. (See also Maber v. Hobbs, 2 Younge & Coll. 317.) The same doctrine was held by Sir John Leach in Anderson v. Anderson, 2 Mylne & Keen, 427. In Bradley v. Hughes, 8 Sim. R. 149, the Vice Chancellor admitted, that it was now settled, that if property be given for the separate use of a woman during a particular coverture, she may after that coverture is gone alienate it, even though it is intended for her separate use. In Scarborough v. Borman decided in Nov. 1838, 17 Law Journ. p. 10 to 24, the Master of the Rolls (Lord Langdale) held, that a gift to the sole and separate use of an unmarried woman was good against an after taken husband. In the very recent case of Nedby v. Nedby, before the Lord Chancellor (Lord Cottenham) in January 1839, the point was directly made; but the Lord Chancellor refused to decide it on an interlocutory motion, at the same time admitting the authorities to be in conflict. So that the law upon this point is still left in a state of some uncertainty.

ently of any such custom, be established by an agreement between the husband and wife before or after marriage. When such an agreement is entered into before marriage, it stands upon a valuable consideration; and, therefore, if there is the interposition of trustees, it will be maintained against the husband and his creditors, as well at law as in Equity. In such a case the trustees of the wife will be entitled to the property assigned, and to the increase and profits thereof, for her sole and separate use and benefit. The wife will, even at law, be considered as the mere agent of her trustees, and her possession as their possession. Even if no trustees are interposed the property *will in the like case be protected in Equity [*612] against the claims of the husband and his creditors, and excepted out of the general rules, which govern in cases of husband and wife.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1386. Where the agreement for a separate trade by the wife occurs after marriage, and it is founded upon a valuable consideration, the like protection will be given at law, if the property is vested in trustees; and the property, and the income and profits thereof, will be held secure for the wife against the husband and his creditors.<sup>2</sup> A fortiori, the doctrine will be enforced in Equity. But if it is a voluntary agreement, it will be good against the husband only, and not against his creditors.<sup>3</sup> Care, however, must be taken in all these cases, that the negotiations are not carried on in the name of the wife, as by taking notes or other securities in her name; for then they will, at law, be

We here perceive, that the law will give effect to such agreements, only when those forms have been observed, which will vest the property in parties, capable of enforcing the proper rights of the wife in legal tribunals; as is the case, where the property is vested in trustees for her sole use and benefit, in order to enable her to carry on trade. But Courts of Equity will go further; and if there is [*613] *any such agreement before marriage, resting in articles and without trustees, by which she is to be permitted to carry on business on her sole and separate account; or if, without any such antenuptial agreement, the husband should permit her, after marriage, to carry on business on her sole and separate account; all, that she earns in the trade, will be deemed to be her separate property, and disposable by her as such, subject, however, to the claims of third persons properly affecting it.<sup>2</sup> In the former case, the earnings will, in Equity, be supported for her separate use against her husband and his creditors; in the latter, against him only, unless the permission after marriage arises from a valuable consideration.<sup>3</sup> So, if a husband should desert his wife, and she should be enabled, by the aid of her friends, to carry on a separate trade (as that of a milliner), her earnings in

At least, he would be liable, unless a credit was exclusively given to the wife in relation to the trade; or the trade had been carried on without his sanction or permission. If, however, he should be liable at law, a Court of Equity would relieve him, at least, to the extent of making the funds in the trade applicable to the payment of the debts. bind it; although it was admitted, that she had a full power to dispose of her personal estate.

§ 1389. The distinction, and the reasons for it, are very clearly stated by Lord Hardwicke. "Agreements," (said he,) "for settling estates to the separate use of the wife on marriage, are very frequent, relating both to real and personal estate. As to personal; undoubtedly, where there is an agreement between husband and wife before marriage, that the wife shall have to her separate use, either the whole, or par- [*615] ticular parts, she may *dispose of it by an act in her life or will. She may do it by either, though nothing is said of the manner of disposing of it. But there is a much stronger ground in that case, than there can be in the case of real estate; because, that is to take effect during the life of the husband; for, if the husband survives, he is entitled to the whole; and none can come into a share with the husband on the Statute of Distributions. Then, such an agreement binds and bars the husband, and consequently bars every body. But it is very different, as to real estate; for her real estate will descend to her heir at law, and that more or less beneficially; for the husband may be tenant by the curtesy, if they have issue; otherwise not. But still it descends to her heir at law. Undoubtedly, on her marriage, a woman may take such a method, that she may dispose of that real estate from going to her heir at law; that is, she may do it without a fine. But I doubt, whether it can be done but by way of trust or of power over an use." <sup>1</sup>

doctrine is now firmly established by the highest authority, that in such a case Courts of Equity will compel the heir of the wife to make a conveyance to the party, in whose favor she has made a disposition of the real estate; in other words, he will be treated as a trustee of the donee, or appointee of the wife.<sup>1</sup> So, that it may *now be laid down as a general rule, that [*616] all antenuptial agreements for securing to a wife separate property, will, unless the contrary is stipulated or implied, give her, in Equity, the full power of disposing of the same, whether real or personal, by any suitable act or instrument in her lifetime, or by her last will, in the same manner and to the same extent, as if she were a feme sole.<sup>2</sup> And in all cases, where a power for this purpose is reserved to her by means of a trust, which is created for the purpose, she may execute the power without joining her trustees, unless it is made necessary by the instrument of trust.<sup>3</sup>

What terms in the instrument will create either an express or a virtual restraint upon her power of disposing of such separate property has been a matter often discussed; and upon the authorities there is some nicety of construction. See on this subject Wagstaff v. Smith, 9 Ves.

When a married woman has an absolute power to dispose of property, she may execute it in any manner capable of transferring it. When she has a power only over it, she must dispose of it in the manner prescribed by the power. And this distinction is very important; for, in many cases, Courts of Equity will not interpose to aid the defective execution of powers in favor of volunteers, whatever it may do in favor of purchasers. conveyance.<sup>1</sup> It is true, that the husband, by his own postnuptial agreement with his wife, may bind his own interest in her real estate, and convert *himself [*618] into a trustee for her. But he cannot trench upon the rights of her heir, who is no party to such an agreement. And, under such circumstances, the latter will take her real estate by descent, unaffected by any of the trusts springing from the agreement.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1392. The remarks, which have been made, apply to the case of the real estate of the wife, already vested in her, as affected by her own antenuptial or postnuptial agreement with her husband. But the question may arise, as to her rights and power over real estate, which is given by a third person to her during her coverture for her separate use, with a power to dispose of the same, where no trustees are interposed to protect the exercise of the power.<sup>3</sup> As to this, the received doctrine seems to be, that if an estate is during coverture given to a married woman and her heirs for her separate use, without more, she cannot, in Equity, dispose of the fee from her heirs; but she must dispose of it, if at all, in the manner prescribed by law; as by a fine.<sup>4</sup> But, if in such a case a clause is expressly superadded, that she shall have

modo only. Thus, for example, if there be an express limitation to a married woman for life, with a power to dispose of the same property by will; there, her interest will be deemed a partial interest, and equivalent to a life estate only; and she cannot dispose of the property absolutely, except in the manner prescribed by the power.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1394. On the other hand, if the property is expressly given to a married woman, “to her for her sole and separate use,” without saying, for life; and she is further authorized to dispose of the same by will; in such a case, the gift will be construed to confer on her the absolute property; and, consequently, she may dispose of it otherwise than by will; for the absolute property being given, the power becomes nugatory, and is construed to be nothing more, than an anxious expression of the donor, that she may have an uncontrolled power of disposing of the property.<sup>2</sup> So,

Farrer, 16 Ves. 86; Ante, § 974, (a.)—Some very nice distinctions exist in the cases on this subject. Thus, in Bradley v. Westcott, 13 Ves. 445, 451, where A. bequeathed to his wife B. all his personal estate for life, to be at her absolute disposal during that period; and after her death he gave such of his wife's jewels, &c. household furniture, and plate, which she should be possessed of at the time of her death, together with £500, to such persons as she should appoint by her will; and, in default of such appointment, the same to fall into the residuum of his personal estate, which he afterwards bequeathed to other persons; Sir Wm. Grant held, that the wife took an estate for life only in the whole, with a power of appointment. On that occasion he said; “The distinction is perhaps slight, which exists between a gift for life, with a power of disposition superadded, and a gift to a person indefinitely, with a superadded power to dispose by deed or will. But that distinction is perfectly established, that in the latter case the property

if a limitation be to a married woman for life for her sole and separate use, with a particular power of appointment of the property, and in default of any appointment, the property is limited to her personal representatives, she will, or at least may, under such circumstances, be deemed the absolute owner ; and as such, she will have an unqualified power to dispose of the property generally, without any exercise of the power of appointment.<sup>1</sup>

vests. A gift to A. and to such person, as he shall appoint, is absolute property in A. without any appointment. But if it is to him for life, and after his death to such person, as he shall appoint by will, he must make an appointment in order to entitle that person to any thing." In Barford v. Street, (16 Ves. 135,) where there was a gift for life to A. with a power of appointment by deed, or writing, or will, and some special limitations, it was held, that A. had an estate for life, with an unqualified power of appointing the inheritance; and that comprehended every thing. So that A. was held to be entitled, as absolute owner. The case of Irwin v. Farrer, 19 Ves. 86, is still stronger. See also the case of Smith v. Bell, 6 Peters, R. 68; *Acton v. Grant, in Anderson v. Dawson, (15 Ves. 533, 536,) and is distinguished by him from the case, where,

in default of the appointment, the property is to go "to her next of kin." "There is," said he, "a great difference between a limitation to the executors and administrators, and a limitation to the next of kin. The former is, as to personal property, the same as a limitation to the right heirs, as to real estate. But a limitation to the next of kin is like a limitation to heirs of a particular description; which would not give the ancestor, having a particular estate, the whole property in the land. Mr. Roper, (2 Roper on Husband and Wife, ch. 20, § 2, p. 211 to 213,) however, thinks the doctrine ill founded. His remarks are as follows. "The reader's attention is requested to the circumstance, that in the cases before stated upon the present subject, with the exception of Sockett v. Wray, the ultimate limitation of the property, in default of the wife's appointment, was not to herself, but to a stranger, or to her next of kin. Because it has been intimated in some of those cases, that although an express estate be given to the wife's separate use for life, with a power to dispose of the principal; yet, if, in default of appointment, such principal be limited to her executors or administrators, and not to her next of kin, the absolute interest in the fund will vest in her, and be disposable with her husband's concurrence, without resort to the particular power given her for the purpose. The principle of the distinction is this; that in the first case the wife is to be considered complete mistress or owner of the property, the effect of such limitation being compared to that of a limitation to her right heirs, which, in the instance of real estates, vests the absolute inheritance. But that in the second case, the limitation to the wife's next of kin, being the same in effect, as that to particular heirs, which, if the subject were lands, would not pass the fee to a donee or devisee, will not therefore vest the absolute interest in personal estate in the wife; and consequently, that in order to dispose of the capital, the wife must have resort to her special power. It is, however, submitted, that this analogy between real and personal estates is not applicable to the subject now under consideration. But that, when the limitation, in default of appointment, is to the wife's executors or administrators, it will be required, that she should execute her power, in order to dispose of the fund during her marriage. The reasons are these; admitting the limitation to impart to the wife the absolute interest in the fund; yet, she being a married woman, the effect of such a limitation to her is quite different from a similar one to a man or to a single woman. For in the instance of such a limitation to a married woman, who is under a legal incapacity to dispose of property during coverture, there is no repugnancy nor inconsistency between a limitation to her of the absolute interest, and a particular power of disposition over it during the marriage; as appears in a former part of this work relating to powers, and also question naturally arises, whether she may bestow it by appointment, or otherwise, upon her husband ; or whether the legal disability attaches to such a transaction. Upon this subject the doctrine is now firmly established in Equity, that she may bestow her separate property by appointment, or otherwise, upon her husband, as well as upon a stranger. But, at the same time, Courts of Equity examine every such trans-[*624] action between husband and wife with an *anxious watchfulness, and caution, and dread of undue influence ; and if they are required to give sanction or effect to it, they will examine the wife in Court, and

under the title Curtesy, where it is shown, that an equitable interest for the wife's separate use for life in real estate, and the ultimate limitation to her of the fee simple, do not unite in such a manner, as to merge the particular estate and extinguish the special limitation to her separate use for life. The analogy, therefore, mentioned in the commencement of these observations, is inapplicable to limitations to married women ; and it does not authorize the conclusion, that, when the wife has an estate to her separate use for life in personal property, with a power of appointment, and the absolute interest is limited to her, if she do not execute the power, she has, in analogy to similar limitations of real estates at law, such an absolute estate, as of necessity enables her to dispose of the property, without regard to her special authority to do so. This necessity, therefore, not existing, and when the settlor's intention in giving such a power is considered, as also the anxiety of a Court of Equity to protect the wife's property against improvident dispositions of it from restraint, &c., during the marriage, it seems but reasonable, that, when an express estate for life in personalty is limited to her for her separate use, with a power of appointment, and in default of its execution to her, her executors or administrators, the same appointment should be considered necessary, as has been decided to be so, when the ultimate limitation in default of appointment is to her next of kin." There are also some nice distinctions in Richards v. Chambers, 10 Ves. 584 ; Ellis v. Atkinson, 3 Bro. Ch. R. 565, and Mr. Belt's note, which, unless they proceed upon the peculiar ground, that there was a contingent interest by survivorship in the wife, would seem to favor Mr. Roper's opinion. See also Field v. Sowle, 4 Russ. R. 112 ; Clancy on Married Women, ch. 6, p. 294 to 308.

§ 1396. Courts of Equity will not only sanction such a disposition of the wife's separate property in favor of her husband, when already made; but they will also, in proper cases, upon her application and consent, given in Court, decree such property to be passed to her husband, whether it be in possession or reversion, in such a manner as she shall prescribe.<sup>2</sup> In the same way her separate estate may be charged with and made liable for his debts.<sup>3</sup> But Courts of Equity have no authority even with the consent of the wife, to transfer to the husband any property, secured to her sole and separate use for life, where no power of disposition is reserved to her over the property, or beyond the power reserved to her.<sup>4</sup> And, therefore, if the husband should receive such property, he will ordinarily be compelled to account therefor. The same rule will apply, where the husband has by a settlement contracted to allow a specific annual sum (not money) for her sole and separate use, as for example, £100, or £1000 a year ; for in such cases if he does not pay it, he will be held liable for the ar- [*625] rears.<sup>1</sup> *Where, indeed, the husband, with the consent of his wife, is in the habit of receiving the income, profits, and dividends of her separate estate, Courts of Equity regard the transaction, as shewing her voluntary choice thus to dispose of it for the use and benefit of the family ; and they will not, ordinarily, require him to account therefor, beyond the income, profits, and dividends received during the then last year,<sup>2</sup> any more than they will to account for arrears of the wife's pin-money beyond the year.<sup>3</sup> But a distinction would probably be taken between the year's arrears of pin-money, and the year's arrears of the wife's other separate personal estate, so that her personal representatives might claim the latter, but not the former.<sup>4</sup>

for any contracts, debts, or other charges created by her during her coverture. At law, she is during the coverture generally incapable of entering into any valid contract, to bind either her person, or her estate.<sup>1</sup> In Equity, also, it is now clearly established, that she cannot by contract bind her person, or her property generally. The only remedy allowed will be against her separate property.<sup>2</sup> The reason of this distinc-

Wigzell*, 1 Madd. R. 258. In this last case the principal authorities are collected and commented on, by Sir Thomas Plumer, and the doctrine in the text maintained. In Aylett v. Ashton, 1 Mylne & Craig, 105, 111, the Master of the Rolls (now Lord Cottenham) said; "The doctrine as to how far the Court will execute a contract entered into by a feme covert as to her separate estate was very fully discussed, and all the cases were cited, by Sir Thomas Plumer, in the case of Francis v. Wigzell, (1 Madd. 258.) It was there decided, and clearly in conformity with all previous decisions, that the Court has no power against a feme covert, in personam, but that if she has separate property, the Court has control over that separate property. In all cases, however, the Court must proceed in rem, against the property. A feme covert is not competent to enter into contracts, so as to give a personal remedy against her. Although she may become entitled to property for her separate use, she is no more capable of contracting than before. A personal contract would be within the incapacity, under which a feme covert labors. Sir T. Plumer says, "There is no case, in which this Court has made a personal decree against a feme covert. She may pledge her separate property, and make it answerable for her engagements; but where her trustees are not made parties to a bill, and no particular fund is sought to be charged, but, only a personal decree against her, the bill cannot be sustained." Sir. T. Plumer there refers to Hulme v. Tenant, (1 Bro. C. C. 16.) before Lord Thurlow, and to Nantes v. Corrock (9 Ves. 182.) where Lord Eldon, following the case before Lord Thurlow, lays down the rule in precisely the same terms. The present bill does not seek to affect the separate property except through Mrs. Ashton personally. If it had sought to affect the property, upon the ground that the contract had given the plaintiff a right against the property, the suit would have been brought against the trustees; for

tion, between her separate property and her other property, is, that, as to the former, she is treated as a feme sole, having the general power of disposing of it; but, as to the latter, all the legal disabilities of a feme covert attach upon her.

§ 1398. The doctrines maintained by Courts of Equity, as to the nature and extent of the liability of the separate estate of a married woman for her debts and other charges created during her coverture, are somewhat artificial in their texture, and, therefore, require to be carefully distinguished from each other, as they cannot all be resolved into the general proposition, that she is, as to such property, to be deemed a feme sole. In the first place, her separate property is not in Equity liable for the payment of her general debts, or of her general personal engagements. So far Courts of Equity follow the analogies of the Common Law. If, therefore, a married woman should during her coverture contract debts generally, without doing any act, indicating an intention to charge her separate estate with the payment of them, Courts of Equity will not entertain any jurisdiction to enforce payment thereof, out of such separate estate during her life.<sup>1</sup>

there must be some trustees of that part of the property which is settled to Mrs. Ashton's separate use, although their names do not appear. Although a feme covert has power, and the Court has jurisdiction, over the rents and profits of her separate property, no case has given effect to her contracts against the corpus of her separate estate." § 1399. But, in the second place, her separate estate will, in Equity, be held liable for all the debts, charges, incumbrances, and other engagements, which she does expressly, or by implication, charge thereon; for, having the absolute power of disposing of the whole, she may, a fortiori, dispose of a part thereof.<sup>1</sup> Her agreement, however, creating the charge, is not, (it has been said) properly speaking, an obligatory contract, for as a feme covert she is incapable of contracting; but is rather an appointment out of her separate estate. The power of appointment is incident to the power of enjoyment of her separate property; and every security thereon, executed by her, is to be deemed an appointment pro tanto of the separate estate.<sup>2</sup>

But then, though they may be creditors by bond, they will not be entitled to any preference, but must come in pari passu with her simple contract creditors. 2 Roper on Husb. and Wife, ch. 21, § 3, p. 238, and 245, note, citing Anon. 18 Ves. 258; Gregory v. Lockyer, 6 Madd. R. 90. The circumstances of these cases, however, do not appear; and the wife may have charged her separate estate (for aught that appears) with the payment of all her debts. But in Norton v. Turvill, 2 P. Will. 144, it was held, that all the separate estate of a married woman was after her death a trust for the payment of her debts; and upon that ground a bond debt, contracted by her generally after marriage, was enforced against it. This question has been much discussed in the English Courts and no small diversity of opinion has been expressed on it by the learned Judges in Equity. The doctrine stated in the text is supported by the cases above cited. But the Vice Chancellor (Sir Lancelot Shadwell) in Davies v. Thornycroft, 6 Sim. R. 420, held, that there was no difference, whether the bequest or trust was for the separate use of a married woman, or an unmarried woman; for in each case it would be a trust for her separate use and good as such against a present or future husband. (See also Maber v. Hobbs, 2 Younge & Coll. 317.) The same doctrine was held by Sir John Leach in Anderson v. Anderson, 2 Mylne & Keen, 427. In Bradley v. Hughes, 8 Sim. R. 149, the Vice Chancellor admitted, that it was now settled, that if property be given for the separate use of a woman during a particular coverture, she may after that coverture is gone alienate it, even though it is intended for her separate use. In Scarborough v. Borman decided in Nov. 1838, 17 Law Journ. p. 10 to 24, the Master of the Rolls (Lord Langdale) held, that a gift to the sole and separate use of an unmarried woman was good against an after taken husband. In the very recent case of Nedby v. Nedby, before the Lord Chancellor (Lord Cottenham) in January 1839, the point was directly made; but the Lord Chancellor refused to decide it on an interlocutory motion, at the same time admitting the authorities to be in conflict. So that the law upon this point is still left in a state of some uncertainty.

ently of any such custom, be established by an agreement between the husband and wife before or after marriage. When such an agreement is entered into before marriage, it stands upon a valuable consideration; and, therefore, if there is the interposition of trustees, it will be maintained against the husband and his creditors, as well at law as in Equity. In such a case the trustees of the wife will be entitled to the property assigned, and to the increase and profits thereof, for her sole and separate use and benefit. The wife will, even at law, be considered as the mere agent of her trustees, and her possession as their possession. Even if no trustees are interposed the property *will in the like case be protected in Equity [*612] against the claims of the husband and his creditors, and excepted out of the general rules, which govern in cases of husband and wife.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1386. Where the agreement for a separate trade by the wife occurs after marriage, and it is founded upon a valuable consideration, the like protection will be given at law, if the property is vested in trustees; and the property, and the income and profits thereof, will be held secure for the wife against the husband and his creditors.<sup>2</sup> A fortiori, the doctrine will be enforced in Equity. But if it is a voluntary agreement, it will be good against the husband only, and not against his creditors.<sup>3</sup> Care, however, must be taken in all these cases, that the negotiations are not carried on in the name of the wife, as by taking notes or other securities in her name; for then they will, at law, be

§ 1387. We here perceive, that the law will give effect to such agreements, only when those forms have been observed, which will vest the property in parties, capable of enforcing the proper rights of the wife in legal tribunals; as is the case, where the property is vested in trustees for her sole use and benefit, in order to enable her to carry on trade. But Courts of Equity will go further; and if there is [*613] *any such agreement before marriage, resting in articles and without trustees, by which she is to be permitted to carry on business on her sole and separate account; or if, without any such antenuptial agreement, the husband should permit her, after marriage, to carry on business on her sole and separate account; all, that she earns in the trade, will be deemed to be her separate property, and disposable by her as such, subject, however, to the claims of third persons properly affecting it.<sup>2</sup> In the former case, the earnings will, in Equity, be supported for her separate use against her husband and his creditors; in the latter, against him only, unless the permission after marriage arises from a valuable consideration.<sup>3</sup> So, if a husband should desert his wife, and she should be enabled, by the aid of her friends, to carry on a separate trade (as that of a milliner), her earnings in

§ *1388. It remains to say a few words on [*614] the subject of the wife's power to dispose of her separate property, and of its liability for her contracts and debts. Wherever a trust is created or a power is reserved by a settlement, to enable the wife after marriage to dispose of her separate property, either real or personal, it may be executed by her in the very manner provided for, whether it be by deed or other writing, or by a will or appointment. And Courts of Equity will in all cases enforce against heirs, devisees, and trustees, as well as against the husband and his representatives, the rights of the donee, or appointee of the wife.<sup>2</sup> But where no such settlement, trust, or power is created before marriage, but it rests in a mere agreement between the husband and wife, it was formerly a matter of doubt, whether the wife could dispose of her separate real estate, so as effectually to

But if no trustees intervened, and the agreement was after marriage, then the husband would be liable for the debts at law. At least, he would be liable, unless a credit was exclusively given to the wife in relation to the trade; or the trade had been carried on without his sanction or permission. If, however, he should be liable at law, a Court of Equity would relieve him, at least, to the extent of making the funds in the trade applicable to the payment of the debts. bind it; although it was admitted, that she had a full power to dispose of her personal estate.

§ 1389. The distinction, and the reasons for it, are very clearly stated by Lord Hardwicke. "Agreements," (said he,) "for settling estates to the separate use of the wife on marriage, are very frequent, relating both to real and personal estate. As to personal; undoubtedly, where there is an agreement between husband and wife before marriage, that the wife shall have to her separate use, either the whole, or par-[*615] ticular parts, she may *dispose of it by an act in her life or will. She may do it by either, though nothing is said of the manner of disposing of it. But there is a much stronger ground in that case, than there can be in the case of real estate; because, that is to take effect during the life of the husband; for, if the husband survives, he is entitled to the whole; and none can come into a share with the husband on the Statute of Distributions. Then, such an agreement binds and bars the husband, and consequently bars every body. But it is very different, as to real estate; for her real estate will descend to her heir at law, and that more or less beneficially; for the husband may be tenant by the curtesy, if they have issue; otherwise not. But still it descends to her heir at law. Undoubtedly, on her marriage, a woman may take such a method, that she may dispose of that real estate from going to her heir at law; that is, she may do it without a fine. But I doubt, whether it can be done but by way of trust or of power over an use."<sup>1</sup>

doctrine is now firmly established by the highest authority, that in such a case Courts of Equity will compel the heir of the wife to make a conveyance to the party, in whose favor she has made a disposition of the real estate; in other words, he will be treated as a trustee of the donee, or appointee of the wife.<sup>1</sup> So, that it may *now be laid down as a general rule, that [*616] all antenuptial agreements for securing to a wife separate property, will, unless the contrary is stipulated or implied, give her, in Equity, the full power of disposing of the same, whether real or personal, by any suitable act or instrument in her lifetime, or by her last will, in the same manner and to the same extent, as if she were a feme sole.<sup>2</sup> And in all cases, where a power for this purpose is reserved to her by means of a trust, which is created for the purpose, she may execute the power without joining her trustees, unless it is made necessary by the instrument of trust.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1391. In regard to the power of the wife to dispose of her separate property, where no trust is interposed, but it rests merely upon a postnuptial agreement of the husband, there is a material distinction, whether it be personal estate, or it be real estate. In the former case her power to dispose of it can affect her husband's rights only; and, therefore, his assent is conclusive upon him.<sup>1</sup> But it is very different in respect to her real estate; for, here, her own heirs are, or may be, deeply affected in their interests by descent. Now, by the general principles of law, a married woman is during her coverture disabled from entering into any contract respecting her real property, either to bind herself, or to bind her heirs. And this disability can be overcome only by adopting the precise means allowed by law to dispose of her real estate; as in England by a fine, and in America by a solemn

When a married woman has an absolute power to dispose of property, she may execute it in any manner capable of transferring it. When she has a power only over it, she must dispose of it in the manner prescribed by the power. And this distinction is very important; for, in many cases, Courts of Equity will not interpose to aid the defective execution of powers in favor of volunteers, whatever it may do in favor of purchasers. conveyance.<sup>1</sup> It is true, that the husband, by his own postnuptial agreement with his wife, may bind his own interest in her real estate, and convert *himself [*618] into a trustee for her. But he cannot trench upon the rights of her heir, who is no party to such an agreement. And, under such circumstances, the latter will take her real estate by descent, unaffected by any of the trusts springing from the agreement.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1392. The remarks, which have been made, apply to the case of the real estate of the wife, already vested in her, as affected by her own antenuptial or postnuptial agreement with her husband. But the question may arise, as to her rights and power over real estate, which is given by a third person to her during her coverture for her separate use, with a power to dispose of the same, where no trustees are interposed to protect the exercise of the power.<sup>3</sup> As to this, the received doctrine seems to be, that if an estate is during coverture given to a married woman and her heirs for her separate use, without more, she cannot, in Equity, dispose of the fee from her heirs; but she must dispose of it, if at all, in the manner prescribed by law; as by a fine.<sup>4</sup> But, if in such a case a clause is expressly superadded, that she shall have

§ 1393. As to personal property, and the income of real property, we have already seen, that, if they are given for the separate use of a married woman, she has, in Equity, a full power to dispose of them at her pleasure.<sup>3</sup> But qualifications may be attached to the gift, which will control this absolute power; and, on the other hand, this absolute power may exist, notwithstanding words accompany the gift, which may seem, primâ facie, intended to confer the power sub

Thus, for example, if there be an express limitation to a married woman for life, with a power to dispose of the same property by will; there, her interest will be deemed a partial interest, and equivalent to a life estate only; and she cannot dispose of the property absolutely, except in the manner prescribed by the power.<sup>1</sup>

On the other hand, if the property is expressly given to a married woman, “to her for her sole and separate use,” without saying, for life; and she is further authorized to dispose of the same by will; in such a case, the gift will be construed to confer on her the absolute property; and, consequently, she may dispose of it otherwise than by will; for the absolute property being given, the power becomes nugatory, and is construed to be nothing more, than an anxious expression of the donor, that she may have an uncontrolled power of disposing of the property.<sup>2</sup> So,

Farrer*, 16 Ves. 86; Ante, § 974, (a.)—Some very nice distinctions exist in the cases on this subject. Thus, in Bradley v. Westcott, 13 Ves. 445, 451, where A. bequeathed to his wife B. all his personal estate for life, to be at her absolute disposal during that period; and after her death he gave such of his wife's jewels, &c. household furniture, and plate, which she should be possessed of at the time of her death, together with £500, to such persons as she should appoint by her will; and, in default of such appointment, the same to fall into the residuum of his personal estate, which he afterwards bequeathed to other persons; Sir Wm. Grant held, that the wife took an estate for life only in the whole, with a power of appointment. On that occasion he said; “The distinction is perhaps slight, which exists between a gift for life, with a power of disposition superadded, and a gift to a person indefinitely, with a superadded power to dispose by deed or will. But that distinction is perfectly established, that in the latter case the property

if a limitation be to a married woman for life for her sole and separate use, with a particular power of appointment of the property, and in default of any appointment, the property is limited to her personal representatives, she will, or at least may, under such circumstances, be deemed the absolute owner ; and as such, she will have an unqualified power to dispose of the property generally, without any exercise of the power of appointment.<sup>1</sup>

vests. A gift to A. and to such person, as he shall appoint, is absolute property in A. without any appointment. But if it is to him for life, and after his death to such person, as he shall appoint by will, he must make an appointment in order to entitle that person to any thing." In Barford v. Street, (16 Ves. 135,) where there was a gift for life to A. with a power of appointment by deed, or writing, or will, and some special limitations, it was held, that A. had an estate for life, with an unqualified power of appointing the inheritance; and that comprehended every thing. So that A. was held to be entitled, as absolute owner. The case of Irwin v. Farrer, 19 Ves. 86, is still stronger. See also the case of Smith v. Bell, 6 Peters, R. 68; *Acton v. Grant, in Anderson v. Dawson, (15 Ves. 533, 536,) and is distinguished by him from the case, where,

in default of the appointment, the property is to go "to her next of kin." "There is," said he, "a great difference between a limitation to the executors and administrators, and a limitation to the next of kin. The former is, as to personal property, the same as a limitation to the right heirs, as to real estate. But a limitation to the next of kin is like a limitation to heirs of a particular description; which would not give the ancestor, having a particular estate, the whole property in the land. Mr. Roper, (2 Roper on Husband and Wife, ch. 20, § 2, p. 211 to 213,) however, thinks the doctrine ill founded. His remarks are as follows. "The reader's attention is requested to the circumstance, that in the cases before stated upon the present subject, with the exception of Sockett v. Wray, the ultimate limitation of the property, in default of the wife's appointment, was not to herself, but to a stranger, or to her next of kin. Because it has been intimated in some of those cases, that although an express estate be given to the wife's separate use for life, with a power to dispose of the principal; yet, if, in default of appointment, such principal be limited to her executors or administrators, and not to her next of kin, the absolute interest in the fund will vest in her, and be disposable with her husband's concurrence, without resort to the particular power given her for the purpose. The principle of the distinction is this; that in the first case the wife is to be considered complete mistress or owner of the property, the effect of such limitation being compared to that of a limitation to her right heirs, which, in the instance of real estates, vests the absolute inheritance. But that in the second case, the limitation to the wife's next of kin, being the same in effect, as that to particular heirs, which, if the subject were lands, would not pass the fee to a donee or devisee, will not therefore vest the absolute interest in personal estate in the wife; and consequently, that in order to dispose of the capital, the wife must have resort to her special power. It is, however, submitted, that this analogy between real and personal estates is not applicable to the subject now under consideration. But that, when the limitation, in default of appointment, is to the wife's executors or administrators, it will be required, that she should execute her power, in order to dispose of the fund during her marriage. The reasons are these; admitting the limitation to impart to the wife the absolute interest in the fund; yet, she being a married woman, the effect of such a limitation to her is quite different from a similar one to a man or to a single woman. For in the instance of such a limitation to a married woman, who is under a legal incapacity to dispose of property during coverture, there is no repugnancy nor inconsistency between a limitation to her of the absolute interest, and a particular power of disposition over it during the marriage; as appears in a former part of this work relating to powers, and also question naturally arises, whether she may bestow it by appointment, or otherwise, upon her husband ; or whether the legal disability attaches to such a transaction. Upon this subject the doctrine is now firmly established in Equity, that she may bestow her separate property by appointment, or otherwise, upon her husband, as well as upon a stranger. But, at the same time, Courts of Equity examine every such trans- [*624] action between husband and wife with an *anxious watchfulness, and caution, and dread of undue influence ; and if they are required to give sanction or effect to it, they will examine the wife in Court, and under the title Curtesy, where it is shown, that an equitable interest for the wife's separate use for life in real estate, and the ultimate limitation to her of the fee simple, do not unite in such a manner, as to merge the particular estate and extinguish the special limitation to her separate use for life. The analogy, therefore, mentioned in the commencement of these observations, is inapplicable to limitations to married women ; and it does not authorize the conclusion, that, when the wife has an estate to her separate use for life in personal property, with a power of appointment, and the absolute interest is limited to her, if she do not execute the power, she has, in analogy to similar limitations of real estates at law, such an absolute estate, as of necessity enables her to dispose of the property, without regard to her special authority to do so. This necessity, therefore, not existing, and when the settlor's intention in giving such a power is considered, as also the anxiety of a Court of Equity to protect the wife's property against improvident dispositions of it from restraint, &c., during the marriage, it seems but reasonable, that, when an express estate for life in personalty is limited to her for her separate use, with a power of appointment, and in default of its execution to her, her executors or administrators, the same appointment should be considered necessary, as has been decided to be so, when the ultimate limitation in default of appointment is to her next of kin." There are also some nice distinctions in Richards v. Chambers, 10 Ves. 584 ; Ellis v. Atkinson, 3 Bro. Ch. R. 565, and Mr. Belt's note, which, unless they proceed upon the peculiar ground, that there was a contingent interest by survivorship in the wife, would seem to favor Mr. Roper's opinion. adopt other precautions to ascertain her unbiased will and wishes.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1396. Courts of Equity will not only sanction such a disposition of the wife's separate property in favor of her husband, when already made; but they will also, in proper, cases, upon her application and consent, given in Court, decree such property to be passed to her husband, whether it be in possession or reversion, in such a manner as she shall prescribe.<sup>2</sup> In the same way her separate estate may be charged with and made liable for his debts.<sup>3</sup> But Courts of Equity have no authority even with the consent of the wife, to transfer to the husband any property, secured to her sole and separate use for life, where no power of disposition is reserved to her over the property, or beyond the power reserved to her.<sup>4</sup> And, therefore, if the husband should receive such property, he will ordinarily be compelled to account therefor. The same rule will apply, where the husband has by a settlement contracted to allow a specific annual sum (not money) for her sole and separate use, as for example, £100, or £1000 a year; for in such cases if he does not pay it, he will be held liable for the ar- [*625] rears.<sup>1</sup> *Where, indeed, the husband, with the consent of his wife, is in the habit of receiving the income, profits, and dividends of her separate estate, Courts of Equity regard the transaction, as shewing her voluntary choice thus to dispose of it for the use and benefit of the family; and they will not, ordinarily, require him to account therefor, beyond the income, profits, and dividends received during the then last year,<sup>2</sup> any more than they will to account for arrears of the wife's pin-money beyond the year.<sup>3</sup> But a distinction would probably be taken between the year's arrears of pin-money, and the year's arrears of the wife's other separate personal estate, so that her personal representatives might claim the latter, but not the former.<sup>4</sup>

for any contracts, debts, or other charges created by her during her coverture. At law, she is during the coverture generally incapable of entering into any valid contract, to bind either her person, or her estate.<sup>1</sup> In Equity, also, it is now clearly established, that she cannot by contract bind her person, or her property generally. The only remedy allowed will be against her separate property.<sup>2</sup> The reason of this distinc-

Wigzell*, 1 Madd. R. 258. In this last case the principal authorities are collected and commented on, by Sir Thomas Plumer, and the doctrine in the text maintained. In Aylett v. Ashton, 1 Mylne & Craig, 105, 111, the Master of the Rolls (now Lord Cottenham) said; "The doctrine as to how far the Court will execute a contract entered into by a feme covert as to her separate estate was very fully discussed, and all the cases were cited, by Sir Thomas Plumer, in the case of Francis v. Wigzell, (1 Madd. 258.) It was there decided, and clearly in conformity with all previous decisions, that the Court has no power against a feme covert, in personam, but that if she has separate property, the Court has control over that separate property. In all cases, however, the Court must proceed in rem. against the property. A feme covert is not competent to enter into contracts, so as to give a personal remedy against her. Although she may become entitled to property for her separate use, she is no more capable of contracting than before. A personal contract would be within the incapacity, under which a feme covert labors. Sir T. Plumer says, "There is no case, in which this Court has made a personal decree against a feme covert. She may pledge her separate property, and make it answerable for her engagements; but where her trustees are not made parties to a bill, and no particular fund is sought to be charged, but, only a personal decree against her, the bill cannot be sustained." Sir. T. Plumer there refers to Hulme v. Tenant, (1 Bro. C. C. 16.) before Lord Thurlow, and to Nantes v. Corrock (9 Ves. 182.) where Lord Eldon, following the case before Lord Thurlow, lays down the rule in precisely the same terms. The present bill does not seek to affect the separate property except through Mrs. Ashton personally. If it had sought to affect the property, upon the ground that the contract had given the plaintiff a right against the property, the suit would have been brought against the trustees; for

tion, between her separate property and her other property, is, that, as to the former, she is treated as a feme sole, having the general power of disposing of it; but, as to the latter, all the legal disabilities of a feme covert attach upon her.

§ 1398. The doctrines maintained by Courts of Equity, as to the nature and extent of the liability of the separate estate of a married woman for her debts and other charges created during her coverture, are somewhat artificial in their texture, and, therefore, require to be carefully distinguished from each other, as they cannot all be resolved into the general proposition, that she is, as to such property, to be deemed a feme sole. In the first place, her separate property is not in Equity liable for the payment of her general debts, or of her general personal engagements. So far Courts of Equity follow the analogies of the Common Law. If, therefore, a married woman should during her coverture contract debts generally, without doing any act, indicating an intention to charge her separate estate with the payment of them, Courts of Equity will not entertain any jurisdiction to enforce payment thereof, out of such separate estate during her life.<sup>1</sup>

there must be some trustees of that part of the property which is settled to Mrs. Ashton's separate use, although their names do not appear. Although a feme covert has power, and the Court has jurisdiction, over the rents and profits of her separate property, no case has given effect to her contracts against the corpus of her separate estate." See also Milnes v. Busk, 2 Ves. jr. 498, 499, where Lord Rosslyn comments upon the then prevailing doctrines at law, and doubts them.

§ 1399. But, in the second place, her separate estate will, in Equity, be held liable for all the debts, charges, incumbrances, and other engagements, which she does expressly, or by implication, charge thereon; for, having the absolute power of disposing of the whole, she may, a fortiori, dispose of a part thereof.<sup>1</sup> Her agreement, however, creating the charge, is not, (it has been said) properly speaking, an obligatory contract, for as a feme covert she is incapable of contracting; but is rather an appointment out of her separate estate. The power of appointment is incident to the power of enjoyment of her separate property; and every security thereon, executed by her, is to be deemed an appointment pro tanto of the separate estate.<sup>2</sup>

But then, though they may be creditors by bond, they will not be entitled to any preference, but must come in pari passu with her simple contract creditors. 2 Roper on Husb. and Wife, ch. 21, § 3, p. 238, and 245, note, citing Anon. 18 Ves. 258; Gregory v. Lockyer, 6 Madd. R. 90. The circumstances of these cases, however, do not appear; and the wife may have charged her separate estate (for aught that appears) with the payment of all her debts. But in Norton v. Turvill, 2 P. Will. 144, it was held, that all the separate estate of a married woman was after her death a trust for the payment of her debts; and upon that ground a bond debt, contracted by her generally after marriage, was enforced against it. tive expression of an intention to charge her separate estate, shall be deemed sufficient to create such a charge; and what sufficient to demonstrate an intention [*628] to create only a general debt. *It is agreed, that there must be an intention to charge her separate estate, otherwise the debt will not affect it. The fact, that the debt has been contracted during the coverture, either as a principal or as a surety, for herself, or for her husband, or jointly with him, seems ordinarily to be held primâ facie evidence to charge her separate estate, without any proof of a positive agreement or intention so to do.<sup>1</sup> It has been remarked, that this rule of holding, that a general security, executed by a married woman, purporting only to create a personal demand, and not referring to her separate property, shall be intended as primâ facie an appointment or charge upon her separate property, is a strong case of constructive implication by Courts of Equity, founded more upon a desire to do justice, than upon any satisfactory reasoning. The main argument in favor of it seems to be, that the security must be supposed to have been executed with the intention, that it shall operate in some way; and that it can have no operation, except as against her separate estate. If this reasoning be correct, it will equally apply to all her general pecuniary engagements; for she has no other means of satisfying them, except out of her separate estate.<sup>2</sup> To this extent the doctrine has not as yet been established, although the tendency of the more recent decisions is certainly in that direction. Indeed, it does seem difficult to make any sound or satisfactory distinction on the subject as to any particular class of debts, since the natural implication is, that if a married woman contracts a debt, she means to pay it; and if she means to pay it, and she has a separate estate, that seems to be the natural fund, which both parties contemplate as furnishing the means of payment.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> This subject was a good deal discussed in Murray v. Barlee, 4 Sim. R. 82, by the Vice Chancellor, and on appeal in that case by Lord Chancellor Brougham, in 3 Mylne & Keen, 209, in which he affirmed the Vice Chancellor's decision, and acted upon the ground stated in the text. On that occasion his Lordship said; "That at law a feme covert cannot in any way be sued, even for necessities, is certain. Bind herself, or her husband, by specialty she cannot; and although, living with him, and not allowed necessities, or apart from him, whether on an insufficient allowance or an unpaid allowance, she may so far bind him, that those, who furnish her with articles of subsistence, may sue him; yet even in respect of these she herself is free from all suit. This is her position of disability or immunity at law; and this is now clearly settled. Her separate existence is not contemplated; it is merged by the coverture in that of her husband; and she is no more recognised than is the cestui que trust or the mortgagor, the legal estate, which is the only interest the law recognises, being in others. But though this is now settled law, we know, that it was not always so; or at least that an exception was admitted to what all men allow to be the general rule. When Corbett v. Poelnitz was decided, Lord Mansfield said, that, as times alter, new customs and manners arise; and he held, with the concurrence of all his learned brothers, that where the wife has a separate maintenance, and lives apart from her husband, receiving credit upon the possession of that estate, she ought to be bound; and the action was accordingly held to lie. That this great and accomplished Judge imported his views on the subject from those courts of equity, which he had once adorned as an advocate, I have no doubt. But it is certain, that the decision never received the assent of Westminster Hall. That those, who pronounced, it very strongly adhered to it, there can be no question. Mr. Justice Buller, sitting in this court a few years after, recites it among other clear points, and plainly refers to it more emphatically than to the rest, in these words: 'All these things have been determined, and I know no reason, why these decisions should not be as religiously and as sacredly observed as

any judgment, in any time, by any set of men. I believe they are founded in good sense, and are adapted to the transactions, the understanding, the welfare of mankind ;' Compton v. Collinson. He adds, that the reasons, on which these decisions were founded, were so satisfactory both to the parties interested and to the profession, that no writ of error had ever been brought. It happened, however, that this was a very groundless panegyric. The profession was always much divided upon the point, and latterly the general opinion was against it. A case for the opinion of the Court of Common Pleas was directed by Mr. J. Buller in Compton v. Collinson ; and though the certificate of the Judges, when that case came to be argued, was in conformity with the law as then laid down by Lord Mansfield, yet Lord Loughborough, in delivering the judgment of the Court, observed, after an elaborate review of the cases, that it could not be considered as a settled point, that an action might be maintained against a married woman separated from her husband by consent, and enjoying a separate maintenance. A few years afterwards, that judgment, which had been pronounced to be as worthy of religious and sacred observance as any judgment ever delivered, was overruled, on the fullest consideration and after two arguments, by the unanimous determination of all the Judges: Marshall v. Rutton. The doors of the courts of common law were thus shut against an admission of the equitable principle ; and the law was fixed, that in those courts the wife could in no way be sued by reason of her having separate property, and living apart from her husband. But in equity the case is wholly different. Her separate existence, both as regards her liabilities and her rights, is here abundantly acknowledged ; not, indeed, that her person can be made liable, but her property may, and it may be reached through a suit instituted against herself and her trustees. It may be added, that the current of decisions has generally run in favor of such recognition. The principle has been supposed to be carried further in Hulme v. Tenant, than it had ever been before, because there a bond, in which the husband and wife joined, and which, indeed, so far as the obligation of the wife was concerned, was absolutely void at law, was allowed to charge the wife's estate vested in trustees to her separate use, though such estate could be only reached by implication ; and though till then the better opinion seemed to be, that the wife could only bind her separate estate by a direct charge upon it. Lord Eldon repeatedly expressed his doubts as to this case ; but it has been constantly acted upon by other judges, and never, in decision, departed from by himself. It is enough to mention Heatley v. Thomas, and Bullpin v. Clarke, both before Sir William Grant, who in the latter case held the wife's separate estate to be charged by a promissory note for money lent

to her; which at law never could have charged the husband in any way, directly or indirectly. The same was held as to a bill of exchange accepted by a feme covert in Stuart v. Lord Kirkwall, and an agreement by the wife as to her separate estate in Master v. Fuller. In all these cases I take the foundation of the doctrine to be this;—the wife has a separate estate subject to her own control, and exempt from all other interference or authority. If she cannot affect it, no one can; and the very object of the settlement, which vests it in her exclusively, is to enable her to deal with it, as if she were discovert. The power to affect it being unquestionable, the only doubt that can arise is, whether or not she has validly incumbered it. At first the Court seems to have supposed, that nothing could touch it but some real charge, as a mortgage, or an instrument amounting to an execution of a power, where that view was supported by the nature of the settlement. But afterwards her intention was more regarded, and the Court only required to be satisfied, that she intended to deal with her separate property. When she appeared to have done so, the Court held her to have charged it, and made the trustees answer the demand thus created against it. A good deal of the nicety, that attends the doctrine of powers, thus came to be imported into this consideration of the subject. If the wife did any act directly charging the separate estate, no doubt could exist; just as an instrument expressing to be in execution of a power was always, of course, considered as made in execution of it. But so, if, by any reference to the estate, it could be gathered, that such was her intent, the same conclusion followed. Thus, if she only executed a bond, or made a note, or accepted a bill, because those acts would have been nugatory, if done by a feme covert without any reference to her separate estate, it was held in the cases I have above cited, that she must be intended to have designed a charge on that estate, since in no other way could the instruments thus made by her have any validity or operation; in the same manner as an instrument, which can mean nothing if it means not to execute a power, has been held to be made in execution of that power, though no direct reference is made to the power. Such is the principle, and it goes the full length of the present case. But doubts have been in one or two instances expressed as to the effect of any dealing, whereby a general engagement only is raised, that is, where she becomes indebted without executing any written instrument at all. This point was discussed in Greatly v. Noble; and the present Master of the Rolls appears, in the subsequent case of Stuart v. Lord Kirkwall, to have been of opinion, that the wife's separate estate was not liable without a charge, and to have supposed, that he had before stated that opinion in Greatly v. Noble, though he by no means expressed himself so strongly in disposing of that case, and distinctly abstained

from deciding the point. I own I can perceive no reason for drawing any such distinction. If, in respect of her separate estate, the wife is in equity taken as a feme sole, and can charge it by instruments absolutely void at law, can there be any reason for holding, that her liability, or, more properly, her power of affecting the separate estate shall only be exercised by a written instrument? Are we entitled to invent a rule, to add a new chapter to the Statute of Frauds, and to require writing, where that act requires none? Is there any equity, reaching written dealings with the property, which extends not also to dealing in other ways; as by sale and delivery of goods? Shall necessary supplies for her maintenance not touch the estate, and yet money furnished to squander away at play be a charge on it, if fortified by a scrap of writing? No such distinction can be taken upon any conceivable principle. But one of the earlier cases, Kenge v. Delavall, makes no mention of such a distinction, for there being indebted generally is all, that is stated, as grounding the claim; and in Lillia v. Airey, the party, who had furnished necessary supplies to the wife, was held entitled to recover to the extent of her separate maintenance. She had, it is true, given a bond, but only for 60*l.*; the Court, however, held the creditor entitled to a larger sum, the separate maintenance exceeding the amount of the bond. But the present is by no means a case of mere general charge. If it were, I have no doubt, that the claim would well lie; but there are written promises. I hold a retainer in writing to imply a promise to pay, whatever shall be reasonably and lawfully demanded by the solicitor or attorney, acting under that retainer. So, if there be no formal retainer, but only a written acknowledgment or adoption of the professional conduct, or instructions in writing to proceed further, the party, who gives such written instructions, in effect promises to pay, whatever may lawfully become due to one acting in obedience to them, that is, to pay the costs, which shall be taxed. The present case is, in almost the whole, if not the whole of it, covered by such written authority, although such written authority was not necessary to bind Mrs. Barlec's separate estate. I am of opinion, therefore, that the decree of his Honor ordering the solicitor's bill to be taxed is well founded. Nothing could more effectually defeat the very purpose of such settlements than denying power to the wife thus to charge her estate. She is meant to be protected by the separate provisions from all oppression and circumvention, and to be made independent of her husband, as well as of all others. If she cannot obtain professional aid, and

(as we have seen,) is not the modern doctrine ; for by that it turns upon the intention of the married woman to create a charge on her separate estate, either as an appointment, or as a disposition of it by a contract in the nature of an appointment.<sup>1</sup> The difficulty, then, is to distinguish upon any clear reasoning, what ground of general presumption exists to infer an intention, not expressed, to charge any particular debt upon her separate estate, which would not ordinarily apply to all her general debts. If she gives a promissory note, or an acceptance, or a bond, to pay her own debt, or if she joins in a bond with her husband to pay his debts, the decisions have gone the length of charging it on her separate estate, either as a contract, or as an appointment, without any distinct circumstance that, which the facility, which other parties find in obtaining it, she is not on equal terms with them. If the husband or the trustees can hold her at arm's length, and refuse her the proceeds of the fund held by them for her use, and if they can by a verbal retainer engage a solicitor, while she can only obtain such help by executing a mortgage or by granting bonds or notes, she is not on the same footing with them. I hold, therefore, that, so far from a solicitor's or attorney's bill being less entitled to favor in courts of equity when sued upon, as against the separate estate of a married woman, the argument is all the other way." See also the learned note of Mr. Roper, in his Treatise on Husband and Wife, (ch. 21, § 3, p. 241 to 247,) which contains a very elaborate review of the leading authorities, and, in a great measure, exhausts the subject. From that note the materials in the text have been partly drawn. See also Clancy on Married Women, ch. 9, p. 331 to 346. In Vandergucht v. De Blaquiere, 8 Sim. R. 315, the Vice Chancellor held, that where a married woman divorced from her husband, and entitled to alimony under a decree of the Ecclesiastical Court, accepted a Bill of Exchange for articles of dress, supplied to her by the drawer of the bill, and made it payable at her Banker's, to whom the alimony was paid, she did not thereby charge her alimony.

establishing her intention.<sup>1</sup> Where, indeed, she lives apart from her husband, and has a separate estate and maintenance secured to her, there may be good ground to hold, that all her debts, contracted for such maintenance, and in the course of her dealings with tradesmen, are understood by both parties to be upon the credit of her separate funds for maintenance.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1402. In the next place, let us proceed to the consideration of what is commonly called the Equity of a wife to a settlement out of her own property. It is well known, that, at the Common Law, marriage amounts to an absolute gift to the husband of all the goods, personal chattels, and other personal estate, of which the wife is actually or beneficially possessed at that time in her own right, and of such other goods, personal chattels, and personal estate, as come to her during the marriage.<sup>3</sup> But to her choses in action, such as debts due by obligation, or by contract, or otherwise, the husband is not absolutely entitled, unless they are reduced into possession during her life.<sup>4</sup> In regard to chattels real, of which the wife is, or may be, possessed during the coverture, the husband has a qualified title. He has an interest therein in her right; and he may, by his alienation during the coverture, absolutely deprive her of her right therein. But if he does not alien them, she will be entitled to them, if she survives him; and, if he survives her, he will be entitled to them in virtue of his marital rights.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1403. These general explanations of the state of the Common Law, as to the respective rights of husband and wife in regard to her personal property, are sufficient to enable us to understand the origin, nature, and character of the wife's Equity to a settlement. We have already seen the protective power, which Courts of Equity exert to preserve the control and disposition of married women over property, secured or given to their separate use, and also to preserve the rights and interests of wards of the Court. Whenever the husband has reduced the personal estate of his wife, of whatever original nature it may be, whether legal or equitable, into possession, he becomes thereby the absolute owner of it, and may dispose of it at his pleasure.<sup>2</sup> And, this being the just exercise of his legal marital rights, Courts of Equity will not interfere to restrain or limit it.<sup>3</sup>

Wherever, also, he is pursuing the common remedies at law, for the purpose of reducing such personal [*632] *property into possession, Courts of Equity for the same reason are, or at least (it is said) ought to be, ordinarily passive.<sup>1</sup> We say, ordinarily; because it is not, perhaps, quite certain, that Courts of Equity will not interfere by way of injunction to suits at law for the wife's personal property against the husband under special circumstances. In one class of cases, that of legacies to the wife, when they are sued for by the husband in the Ecclesiastical Courts, it is certain, that an injunction will be allowed for the purpose of enforcing the wife's Equity to a settlement.<sup>2</sup>

Mr. Clancy insists, that there is no just ground, upon which the Courts of Equity should decline to interfere in cases, where the husband is seeking at law to recover the wife's legal choses in action. His reasoning is entitled to great consideration from its intrinsic force; and there are certainly authorities in its favor, although he admits, that the prevalent spirit of the cases is against it. Clancy on Marr. Women, B. 5, ch. 2, p. 466 to 470. Mr. Jacob, in his late edition of Roper on Husband and Wife, (Vol. I. 271, 272,) expressly denies, that there is any sound principle, for making a distinction between a trust term and any other equitable chose in action of the wife. It were to be wished, that the principle could, as a matter of general justice, be maintained in Equity. In Pierce v. Thornely, (2 Sim. R. 167,) the Vice Chancellor held a doctrine, which seems to cover the very case. "At law," said he, "where judgment had been recovered by the husband and § 1404. The principal, if not the sole, cases, in which Courts of Equity now interpose to secure to the wife her Equity to a settlement, are; first, where the husband seeks aid or relief in a Court of Equity in regard to her property; secondly, where he makes an assignment of her equitable interests; thirdly, where she seeks the like relief, as plaintiff, against her husband, or his assignees, in regard to her equitable interests.<sup>1</sup> In the first case, the Court lays hold of the occasion, upon the ground of the maxim, that he, who seeks equity, must do equity, to require the husband to make a suitable settlement upon the wife (if not already made) out of that property, or some other property, for her due maintenance and support, in case of her survivorship, according to the rank and condition and circumstances of the parties.<sup>2</sup> In the second case, the same principle is applied to other persons claiming under the husband, as to himself. In the third case, the doctrine may seem more artificial. But it is, in truth, enforcing against the husband her admitted equity to prevent an irreparable injustice.<sup>3</sup>

wife, the husband alone could levy execution. But a Court of Equity will not, unless the wife consents, permit the husband to recover the whole of his wife's choses in action; but will require a settlement to be made upon her." See also Kenny v. Udall, 5 John. Ch. R. 477, and Van Epps v. Van Deusen, 4 Paige, R. 74. In the latter case Mr. Chancellor Walworth was of opinion, that an injunction ought to go to a proceeding at law, in order to enforce the wife's Equity to a settlement.

property in all the personal estate of his wife, capable of immediate and tangible possession. But, if it is such, as cannot be reduced into possession, except by an action at law, or by a suit in Equity, he has only a qualified interest therein, such as will enable him to make it an absolute interest, by reducing it into possession. If it is a chose in action, properly so called, that is, a right, which may be asserted by an action at law, he will be entitled to it, if he has actually reduced it into possession (for a judgment is not sufficient) in his lifetime. But if it is a right, which must be asserted by a suit in Equity, as where it is vested in trustees, who have the legal property, he has still less interest. He cannot reach it without application to a Court of Equity, in which he cannot sue without joining her with him; although perhaps a Court of Law might permit him to do so, or at least, to use her name without her consent. If the aid of a Court of Equity is asked by him in such a case, it will make him provide for her, unless she consents to give such equitable property to him.<sup>1</sup>

property, at the instance of her debtor.<sup>1</sup> We shall presently see in what manner the wife may waive the right to such a settlement; and what will be the effects of her waiver; and what other circumstances will deprive her and her issue of the right.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1407. It is not easy to ascertain the precise origin of this right of the wife, or the precise grounds, upon which it was first established. It has been said, that it is an equity grounded upon natural justice; that it is that kind of parental care, which a Court of Equity exercises for the benefit of orphans; and that, as a father would not have married his daughter without insisting upon some provision; so, a Court of Equity, which stands in loco parentis, will insist on it.<sup>3</sup> This is not so much a statement of the origin, as it is of the effect and value of the jurisdiction. The truth seems to be, that its origin cannot be traced to any distinct source. It is the creature of a Court of Equity, and stands upon its own peculiar doctrine and practice. It is in vain to attempt, by general reasoning, to ascertain the nature or extent of the doctrine; and, therefore, we must look entirely to the practice of the Court for its proper foundation and extent.<sup>4</sup>

§ 1408. And, in the first place, a settlement will be decreed to the wife, whenever the husband seeks the aid or relief of a Court of Equity to procure the possession of any portion of his wife's fortune.<sup>5</sup> In such a case, it is of no consequence, whether the fortune accrues before or during the marriage ; whether the property consists of funds in the possession of trustees, or of third persons ; or whether it is in the possession of the Court, or under its administration, or not ; for under all these circumstances, the equity of the wife will equally attach to it.<sup>1</sup> This equity of the wife was for a long time supposed to be confined to the absolute personal property of the wife. But it is now extended to the rents and profits of the real estate, in which she has a life interest ;<sup>2</sup> although it does not generally extend, as against the husband personally, to equitable interests, in which she has a life estate only.<sup>3</sup>

The husband and wife joined in a sale of her life estate, and he became bankrupt. The wife afterwards filed a bill for a provision against the purchaser ; but it was refused. The Vice Chancellor (Sir John Leach) on that occasion said ; " I find no authority for the Equity claimed by the wife as against the particular assignee, in the case of an interest given to the wife for her life ; and it does not follow as a corollary or consequence from any established doctrine of the Court. Where an absolute equitable interest is given to the wife, the Court will not permit the husband to possess it, without making a provision for the wife, or her express consent ; and all who claim under the husband must take his interest subject to the same equity. But where an equitable interest is given to the wife for her life only, this Court does permit the husband to enjoy it without the consent of the wife, and without making any provision for her. It is true, that if the husband desert his wife, and fail to perform the obligation of maintaining her, which is the condition, upon which the law gives him her property, this Court will apply any equitable interest, which he retains for the life of the wife, either wholly, or in part, for the maintenance of the wife. And if the husband becomes bankrupt, or takes the benefit of an insolvent debtor's act, this Court will fasten the same obligation of maintaining the wife out of the property of this description, which devolves, by act of law, upon the general assignee; for when the title of such assignee vests, the incapacity of the husband to maintain the wife has already raised this Equity for the wife. But the same principle does not necessarily apply to a particular assignee for a valuable consideration, who purchased this interest, when the husband was maintaining the wife, and before circumstances had raised any present Equity in this property for the wife, whatever may be the force of general reasoning upon it. If, however, I considered it to be useful, that the same rule should be applied to the particular assignee, as to the general assignee, which may be doubted, by declaring this rule, in the absence of all direct authority, and of all authority leading necessarily to the same conclusion, I fear, that I should not be administering the actual law of this Court, but I should be making a new law, and I cannot venture to assume such a jurisdiction." In Stanton v. Hall, 2 Russ. & Mylne, 175, a devise was in trust to A., the husband, for life of certain rents and profits; if he attempted to assign the same, or become bankrupt or insolvent, then upon trust to pay to his wife an annuity of £100 during his life, and after his death an annuity to his widow of £30. It was held, that the annuity was not the separate estate of the wife, but passed to the husband's assignee for value, and that against that assignee the wife had no equity for a settlement out of the annuity. On that occasion the Lord Chancellor (Brougham) said; "The case involves the question how far a married woman, to whom an annuity for life was bequeathed in terms, which have been adjudged not to vest it in her as her separate estate, is entitled to claim a settlement out of it, against one, who was a purchaser for valuable consideration from her husband, the husband having afterwards become insolvent. And, as Elliott v. Cordell, if it should be held to be law, decides the question, I have looked with some attention into that case, and also into the former authorities; and I find no warrant for supposing, that Elliott v. Cordell introduced any new doctrine upon the subject. The same doctrine, in principle, was recognised long before by Sir W. Grant, although, undoubtedly, neither in Mitford v. Mitford (9 Ves. 87,) nor in Wright v. Morley (11 Ves. 12,) was the point raised and disposed of formally. It was, however, repeatedly referred to in those cases; and it is perfectly plain, from the language there used, that the opinion of Sir W. Grant would have excluded the wife's claim as against particular as-

§ 1409. There are some exceptions to the general doctrine, however, which deserve notice. In the first

place, if both the husband and wife are subjects of, and residents in, a foreign country, where he would be entitled to his wife's fortune without making any settlement upon her, in such a case Courts of Equity, sitting in another jurisdiction, will, as to personal property of the wife within their jurisdiction, follow the local law, and do what the local tribunals would ordain under similar circumstances; for the rights of the husband and wife are properly subject to the local law of their own sovereign.<sup>1</sup>

[*637] * § 1410. Another exception seems to be, where the wife's property is a leasehold estate, or a term for years, held in trust for her. In such a case it is said, that the husband may assign the term for a valuable consideration, and thereby dispose of it, without the wife having any claim against his assignee; and, if he does not dispose of it, there is some doubt, whether the wife has any equity against him.<sup>2</sup> It is extremely difficult to perceive the exact grounds, upon which signees. If the question were now for the first time raised, whether Courts of Equity had not gone farther than principle warranted, in allowing the claim against particular assignees, in cases where a capital sum is at stake, some doubt might, perhaps, be entertained. But in a case like Elliott v. Cordell, where the question related to a mere life interest, and where, prior to the assignment, there was no failure on the part of the husband to maintain his wife, the Vice-Chancellor would have gone a great step farther, had he listened to the argument in favor of the wife's equity." this exception rests. It constitutes a seeming anomaly, resting more upon authority than principle; and, as such, it has been several times doubted.<sup>1</sup> But, however questionable it may be in its origin, and however it may seem to be at variance with the received doctrine in other analogous cases of assignment by the husband, it has at present a decided weight of judicial authority in its favor. It has even been carried to this extent, that the husband may, by his assignment of the reversionary interest in a term of years, held in trust for the wife, bind that interest, so as to deprive her of her equity therein; although he could not in the same way dispose of her reversionary interest in any choses in action or personal chattels.<sup>2</sup> The sole ground of the doctrine seems to be, that the husband may dispose of the wife's contingent, reversionary, legal interest in a term for years, and that there is no difference in equity between the legal interests in and the trusts of a term for years.<sup>3</sup>

* § 1411. Secondly. In regard to the wife's [*638] Equity to a settlement in cases, where the husband has made an assignment of her choses in action, or other equitable interests. settlement upon the wife out of her choses in action, and equitable interests assigned to them, whether they are absolute interests or life interests only in her, in the same way, and to the same extent, and under the same circumstances, as he would be bound to make one; for it is a general principle, that such assignees take the property, subject to all the equities, which affect the bankrupt, or insolvent, or general assignor.<sup>1</sup> Such assignees also take the property, subject to the wife's right of survivorship, in case the husband dies before the assignees have reduced her choses in action and equitable interests into possession.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1412. The principal controversy, which has arisen, [*639] is, whether a special assignee or purchaser *from the husband for a valuable consideration of her choses in action, or equitable interests, is bound to make such a settlement. It is now firmly established, that he is bound to make such a settlement. But, (it is said), that, subject to such provision, he will be entitled to the choses in action and equitable interests so assigned, discharged from the title of the wife by survivorship.<sup>3</sup>

Johnson*, 1 Jac. & Walk. 456, 457.—In this respect the case of general assignees differs from that of a special assignee for a valuable consideration, if the doctrine be correct, that the latter will take against the right of the wife by survivorship. In the former case the assignees take, subject to the wife's right by survivorship. Mitford v. Mitford, 9 Ves. 87, 97, 99, 100; Ante, § 1411. The ground of the distinction, if it exists, (which is doubtful,) is not perhaps, at first sight, very obvious. But, in the case of a special assignee, it is said, that Equity considers the assignment of the husband, as amounting to an agreement, that he will reduce the property into possession. It likewise considers that, which a party agrees to do, as actually done. And, therefore, when the husband has the present power of reducing the property into possession, his assignment of the choses in action of the wife will be regarded as a reduction of it into possession. Honner v. Morton, 3 Russ. R. 68, 69. But, why may not the same principle be applied to the case of a general assignment by the husband for the benefit of his creditors? And, as to the rule in Equity, it is a rule applicable properly to the husband himself, and to his rights. Why should it affect the right of survivorship of the wife, when there is no actual reduction into possession? See the Lord Chancellor's observations in Druce v. Denison, 6 Ves. 394; 2 Roper on Husband & Wife, Addenda, No. 3, p. 509 to 522. Sir Thomas Plumer, in his able judgment in Purdew v. Jackson, (1 Russ. R. 63, 64,) said; "An opinion has certainly prevailed, that a distinction subsists between an assignment by operation of law, and an assignment for a valuable consideration to an individual by contract; that the former is no bar to the right of the surviving wife, but that the latter is. And I think both kinds of assignment ought to have the same effect; and that it would be a manifest inconsistency to decide the contrary." See also Id. p. 53, and Pierce v. Thornely 2 Sim. R. 167. But in the cases of Elliott v. Cordell, 5 Madd. R. 149, and Stanton v. Hall, 2 Russ. & Mylne, 355, cited, Ante, § 1408, the distinction is insisted on.

where an annuity or life interest in a fund was given to a married woman and not settled to her separate use, the husband with her concurrence, was capable of effectually disposing of her entire life estate, seeing that she might outlive her husband, and then, as to such part of it as would be enjoyed by her after the coverture determined, her interest would be reversionary only. He should be glad to be furnished with any cases, which would relieve him from this difficulty; but unless some authority for it was produced, he must decline to make the order." Afterwards, when he became Lord Chancellor, he reheard the cause, and said; "When this petition came on to be heard, it was assumed, that the only question was the authority of some late decisions with respect to property left to the separate use of a woman not married at the time. But I suggested another difficulty, namely, with respect to the power of the husband to dispose of his wife's life interest when not settled to her separate use; and the petition stood over for the purpose of enabling the petitioners' counsel to produce cases in favor of such right. I have since been informed, that no such cases are to be found. It is, I believe, certain that there are none; and the question is, whether consistently with the doctrine established in Purdew v. Jackson, (1 Russ. 1,) and Honner v. Morton (3 Russ. 65,) any such power can exist. This very point is just alluded to in a note to Purdew v. Jackson (1 Russ. 71, note,); but there is no decision upon it. I do not see how, consistently with the cases of Purdew v. Jackson and Honner v. Morton, the husband can make a title to such of the dividends of the fund as may accrue after his own death, and during the life of his wife surviving him." The case of Major v. Lansley, (2 Russ. & Mylne, 259) may seem at first view to contradict or to qualify the generality of the doctrine stated in the text. But there were several circumstances in that case materially distinguishing it from the cases referred to in the text. One circumstance was, that in that case the annuity, (which was assigned by the husband and wife,) though a reversionary interest was devised to the separate use of the wife; and of course she had the same complete power to dispose of it, as she had of any other equitable property vested in her for her separate use; and she joined in the assignment of her husband. Another was, that there were no trustees interposed, and the legal interest of the annuity, therefore, devolved upon her husband for the joint lives of himself and the wife, and she had only an equitable interest therein, and the assignment could operate upon that equitable interest. Another was, that the reversionary interest fell into possession before the death of the husband, and he had, by the assignment, covenanted, that he and his wife would levy a fine of the annuity; which,

however, was not done at the time of his death. The Court thought, that under these circumstances the legal estate in the annuity, coming to the wife by the death of the husband, did not defeat the title of the assignee to the equitable interest therein under the assignment, as a bona fide purchase for a valuable consideration.

<sup>3</sup> Ante, § 1402, § 1410. In Honner v. Morton (3 Russ. 65,) Lord Chancellor Lyndhurst said, " This fund was a chose in action of the wife ; it was her reversionary chose in action. Whether the husband has the power of assigning his wife's reversionary interest in a chose in action, is a question, which has been repeatedly agitated, and has excited considerable interest, both at law and in equity. At law, the choses in action of the wife belong to the husband, if he reduces them into possession; if he does not reduce them into possession, and dies before his wife, they survive to her. When the husband assigns the chose in action of his wife, one would suppose, on the first impression, that the assignee would not be in a better situation than the assignor; and that he, too, must take some steps to reduce the subject into possession, in order to make his title good against the wife surviving. But equity considers the assignment by the husband as amounting to an agreement, that he will reduce the property into possession. It likewise considers, what a party agrees to do, as actually done: and, therefore, where the husband has the power of reducing the property into possession, his assignment of the chose in action of the wife will be regarded as a reduction of it into possession. On the other hand, I should also infer, that, where the husband has not the power of reducing the chose in action into possession, his assignment does not transfer the property, till, by subsequent events, he comes into the situation of being able to reduce the property into possession; and then his previous assignment will operate on his actual situation, and the property will be transferred."

§ 1414. Thirdly. The Equity of a wife to a settlement will not only be enforced, in regard to her choses in action and equitable interests under the circumstances above mentioned, against *the husband and [*642] his assignees, where he or they are plaintiffs, seeking aid and relief in Equity; but it will also be enforced, where she or her trustee brings a suit in Equity for the purpose of asserting it. This was formerly matter of no inconsiderable doubt, as it was (not unnaturally) supposed, that the jurisdiction rested solely upon the ground, that parties seeking relief in equity should do equity; and, if they were not seeking any relief, then, that the Court remained passive. But the doctrine is now firmly established, that, whenever the wife is entitled to this Equity for a settlement out of her equitable interests against her husband or his assignees, she may assert it in a suit, as plaintiff, by bringing a bill in the name of her next friend.<sup>1</sup> And certainly there is

he will ordinarily be compelled to account therefor. The same rule will apply, where the husband has by a settlement contracted to allow a specific annual sum (not money) for her sole and separate use, as for example, £100, or £1000 a year; for in such cases if he does not pay it, he will be held liable for the ar- [*625] rears.<sup>1</sup> *Where, indeed, the husband, with the consent of his wife, is in the habit of receiving the income, profits, and dividends of her separate estate, Courts of Equity regard the transaction, as shewing her voluntary choice thus to dispose of it for the use and benefit of the family; and they will not, ordinarily, require him to account therefor, beyond the income, profits, and dividends received during the then last year,<sup>2</sup> any more than they will to account for arrears of the wife's pin-money beyond the year.<sup>3</sup> But a distinction would probably be taken between the year's arrears of pin-money, and the year's arrears of the wife's other separate personal estate, so that her personal representatives might claim the latter, but not the former.<sup>4</sup>

for any contracts, debts, or other charges created by her during her coverture. At law, she is during the coverture generally incapable of entering into any valid contract, to bind either her person, or her estate.<sup>1</sup> In Equity, also, it is now clearly established, that she cannot by contract bind her person, or her property generally. The only remedy allowed will be against her separate property.<sup>2</sup> The reason of this distinc-

Wigzell*, 1 Madd. R. 258. In this last case the principal authorities are collected and commented on, by Sir Thomas Plumer, and the doctrine in the text maintained. In Aylett v. Ashton, 1 Mylne & Craig, 105, 111, the Master of the Rolls (now Lord Cottenham) said; "The doctrine as to how far the Court will execute a contract entered into by a feme covert as to her separate estate was very fully discussed, and all the cases were cited, by Sir Thomas Plumer, in the case of Francis v. Wigzell, (1 Madd. 258.) It was there decided, and clearly in conformity with all previous decisions, that the Court has no power against a feme covert, in personam, but that if she has separate property, the Court has control over that separate property. In all cases, however, the Court must proceed in rem, against the property. A feme covert is not competent to enter into contracts, so as to give a personal remedy against her. Although she may become entitled to property for her separate use, she is no more capable of contracting than before. A personal contract would be within the incapacity, under which a feme covert labors. Sir T. Plumer says, "There is no case, in which this Court has made a personal decree against a feme covert. She may pledge her separate property, and make it answerable for her engagements; but where her trustees are not made parties to a bill, and no particular fund is sought to be charged, but, only a personal decree against her, the bill cannot be sustained." Sir. T. Plumer there refers to Hulme v. Tenant, (1 Bro. C. C. 16.) before Lord Thurlow, and to Nantes v. Corrock (9 Ves. 182.) where Lord Eldon, following the case before Lord Thurlow, lays down the rule in precisely the same terms. The present bill does not seek to affect the separate property except through Mrs. Ashton personally. If it had sought to affect the property, upon the ground that the contract had given the plaintiff a right against the property, the suit would have been brought against the trustees; for

tion, between her separate property and her other property, is, that, as to the former, she is treated as a feme sole, having the general power of disposing of it; but, as to the latter, all the legal disabilities of a feme covert attach upon her.

§ 1398. The doctrines maintained by Courts of Equity, as to the nature and extent of the liability of the separate estate of a married woman for her debts and other charges created during her coverture, are somewhat artificial in their texture, and, therefore, require to be carefully distinguished from each other, as they cannot all be resolved into the general proposition, that she is, as to such property, to be deemed a feme sole. In the first place, her separate property is not in Equity liable for the payment of her general debts, or of her general personal engagements. So far Courts of Equity follow the analogies of the Common Law. If, therefore, a married woman should during her coverture contract debts generally, without doing any act, indicating an intention to charge her separate estate with the payment of them, Courts of Equity will not entertain any jurisdiction to enforce payment thereof, out of such separate estate during her life.<sup>1</sup>

there must be some trustees of that part of the property which is settled to Mrs. Ashton's separate use, although their names do not appear. Although a feme covert has power, and the Court has jurisdiction, over the rents and profits of her separate property, no case has given effect to her contracts against the corpus of her separate estate." § 1399. But, in the second place, her separate estate will, in Equity, be held liable for all the debts, charges, incumbrances, and other engagements, which she does expressly, or by implication, charge thereon; for, having the absolute power of disposing of the whole, she may, a fortiori, dispose of a part thereof.<sup>1</sup> Her agreement, however, creating the charge, is not, (it has been said) properly speaking, an obligatory contract, for as a feme covert she is incapable of contracting; but is rather an appointment out of her separate estate. The power of appointment is incident to the power of enjoyment of her separate property; and every security thereon, executed by her, is to be deemed an appointment pro tanto of the separate estate.<sup>2</sup>

Lockyer, 6 Madd. R. 90. The circumstances of these cases, however, do not appear; and the wife may have charged her separate estate (for aught that appears) with the payment of all her debts. But in Norton v. Turvill, 2 P. Will. 144, it was held, that all the separate estate of a married woman was after her death a trust for the payment of her debts; and upon that ground a bond debt, contracted by her generally after marriage, was enforced against it. See Court v. Jeffrey, 1 Sim. & Stu. 105, and Mr. Roper's note, supra.

tive expression of an intention to charge her separate estate, shall be deemed sufficient to create such a charge; and what sufficient to demonstrate an intention [*628] to create only a general debt. *It is agreed, that there must be an intention to charge her separate estate, otherwise the debt will not affect it. The fact, that the debt has been contracted during the coverture, either as a principal or as a surety, for herself, or for her husband, or jointly with him, seems ordinarily to be held primâ facie evidence to charge her separate estate, without any proof of a positive agreement or intention so to do.<sup>1</sup> It has been remarked, that this rule of holding, that a general security, executed by a married woman, purporting only to create a personal demand, and not referring to her separate property, shall be intended as primâ facie an appointment or charge upon her separate property, is a strong case of constructive implication by Courts of Equity, founded more upon a desire to do justice, than upon any satisfactory reasoning. The main argument in favor of it seems to be, that the security must be supposed to have been executed with the intention, that it shall operate in some way; and that it can have no operation, except as against her separate estate. If this reasoning be correct, it will equally apply to all her general pecuniary engagements; for she has no other means of satisfying them, except out of her separate estate.<sup>2</sup> To this extent the doctrine has not as yet been established, although the tendency of the more recent decisions is certainly in that direction. Indeed, it does seem difficult to make any sound or satisfactory distinction on the subject as to any particular class of debts, since the natural implication is, that if a married woman contracts a debt, she means to pay it; and if she means to pay it, and she has a separate estate, that seems to be the natural fund, which both parties contemplate as furnishing the means of payment.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> This subject was a good deal discussed in Murray v. Barlee, 4 Sim. R. 82, by the Vice Chancellor, and on appeal in that case by Lord Chancellor Brougham, in 3 Mylne & Keen, 209, in which he affirmed the Vice Chancellor's decision, and acted upon the ground stated in the text. On that occasion his Lordship said; "That at law a feme covert cannot in any way be sued, even for necessities, is certain. Bind herself, or her husband, by specialty she cannot; and although, living with him, and not allowed necessities, or apart from him, whether on an insufficient allowance or an unpaid allowance, she may so far bind him, that those, who furnish her with articles of subsistence, may sue him; yet even in respect of these she herself is free from all suit. This is her position of disability or immunity at law; and this is now clearly settled. Her separate existence is not contemplated; it is merged by the coverture in that of her husband; and she is no more recognised than is the cestui que trust or the mortgagor, the legal estate, which is the only interest the law recognises, being in others. But though this is now settled law, we know, that it was not always so; or at least that an exception was admitted to what all men allow to be the general rule. When Corbett v. Poelnitz was decided, Lord Mansfield said, that, as times alter, new customs and manners arise; and he held, with the concurrence of all his learned brothers, that where the wife has a separate maintenance, and lives apart from her husband, receiving credit upon the possession of that estate, she ought to be bound; and the action was accordingly held to lie. That this great and accomplished Judge imported his views on the subject from those courts of equity, which he had once adorned as an advocate, I have no doubt. But it is certain, that the decision never received the assent of Westminster Hall. That those, who pronounced, it very strongly adhered to it, there can be no question. Mr. Justice Buller, sitting in this court a few years after, recites it among other clear points, and plainly refers to it more emphatically than to the rest, in these words: 'All these things have been determined, and I know no reason, why these decisions should not be as religiously and as sacredly observed as

any judgment, in any time, by any set of men. I believe they are founded in good sense, and are adapted to the transactions, the understanding, the welfare of mankind;' Compton v. Collinson. He adds, that the reasons, on which these decisions were founded, were so satisfactory both to the parties interested and to the profession, that no writ of error had ever been brought. It happened, however, that this was a very groundless panegyric. The profession was always much divided upon the point, and latterly the general opinion was against it. A case for the opinion of the Court of Common Pleas was directed by Mr. J. Buller in Compton v. Collinson; and though the certificate of the Judges, when that case came to be argued, was in conformity with the law as then laid down by Lord Mansfield, yet Lord Loughborough, in delivering the judgment of the Court, observed, after an elaborate review of the cases, that it could not be considered as a settled point, that an action might be maintained against a married woman separated from her husband by consent, and enjoying a separate maintenance. A few years afterwards, that judgment, which had been pronounced to be as worthy of religious and sacred observance as any judgment ever delivered, was overruled, on the fullest consideration and after two arguments, by the unanimous determination of all the Judges: Marshall v. Rutton. The doors of the courts of common law were thus shut against an admission of the equitable principle; and the law was fixed, that in those courts the wife could in no way be sued by reason of her having separate property, and living apart from her husband. But in equity the case is wholly different. Her separate existence, both as regards her liabilities and her rights, is here abundantly acknowledged; not, indeed, that her person can be made liable, but her property may, and it may be reached through a suit instituted against herself and her trustees. It may be added, that the current of decisions has generally run in favor of such recognition. The principle has been supposed to be carried further in Hulme v. Tenant, than it had ever been before, because there a bond, in which the husband and wife joined, and which, indeed, so far as the obligation of the wife was concerned, was absolutely void at law, was allowed to charge the wife's estate vested in trustees to her separate use, though such estate could be only reached by implication; and though till then the better opinion seemed to be, that the wife could only bind her separate estate by a direct charge upon it. Lord Eldon repeatedly expressed his doubts as to this case; but it has been constantly acted upon by other judges, and never, in decision, departed from by himself. It is enough to mention Heatley v. Thomas, and Bullpin v. Clarke, both before Sir William Grant, who in the latter case held the wife's separate estate to be charged by a promissory note for money lent married woman is, as to her separate property, to be deemed a feme sole; and, therefore, that her general

to her; which at law never could have charged the husband in any way, directly or indirectly. The same was held as to a bill of exchange accepted by a feme covert in Stuart v. Lord Kirkwall, and an agreement by the wife as to her separate estate in Master v. Fuller. In all these cases I take the foundation of the doctrine to be this;—the wife has a separate estate subject to her own control, and exempt from all other interference or authority. If she cannot affect it, no one can; and the very object of the settlement, which vests it in her exclusively, is to enable her to deal with it, as if she were discovert. The power to affect it being unquestionable, the only doubt that can arise is, whether or not she has validly incumbered it. At first the Court seems to have supposed, that nothing could touch it but some real charge, as a mortgage, or an instrument amounting to an execution of a power, where that view was supported by the nature of the settlement. But afterwards her intention was more regarded, and the Court only required to be satisfied, that she intended to deal with her separate property. When she appeared to have done so, the Court held her to have charged it, and made the trustees answer the demand thus created against it. A good deal of the nicety, that attends the doctrine of powers, thus came to be imported into this consideration of the subject. If the wife did any act directly charging the separate estate, no doubt could exist; just as an instrument expressing to be in execution of a power was always, of course, considered as made in execution of it. But so, if, by any reference to the estate, it could be gathered, that such was her intent, the same conclusion followed. Thus, if she only executed a bond, or made a note, or accepted a bill, because those acts would have been nugatory, if done by a feme covert without any reference to her separate estate, it was held in the cases I have above cited, that she must be intended to have designed a charge on that estate, since in no other way could the instruments thus made by her have any validity or operation; in the same manner as an instrument, which can mean nothing if it means not to execute a power, has been held to be made in execution of that power, though no direct reference is made to the power. Such is the principle, and it goes the full length of the present case. But doubts have been in one or two instances expressed as to the effect of any dealing, whereby a general engagement only is raised, that is, where she becomes indebted without executing any written instrument at all. This point was discussed in Greatly v. Noble; and the present Master of the Rolls appears, in the subsequent case of Stuart v. Lord Kirkwall, to have been of opinion, that the wife's separate estate was not liable without a charge, and to have supposed, that he had before stated that opinion in Greatly v. Noble, though he by no means expressed himself so strongly in disposing of that case, and distinctly abstained

from deciding the point. I own I can perceive no reason for drawing any such distinction. If, in respect of her separate estate, the wife is in equity taken as a feme sole, and can charge it by instruments absolutely void at law, can there be any reason for holding, that her liability, or, more properly, her power of affecting the separate estate shall only be exercised by a written instrument? Are we entitled to invent a rule, to add a new chapter to the Statute of Frauds, and to require writing, where that act requires none? Is there any equity, reaching written dealings with the property, which extends not also to dealing in other ways; as by sale and delivery of goods? Shall necessary supplies for her maintenance not touch the estate, and yet money furnished to squander away at play be a charge on it, if fortified by a scrap of writing? No such distinction can be taken upon any conceivable principle. But one of the earlier cases, Kenge v. Delavall, makes no mention of such a distinction, for there being indebted generally is all, that is stated, as grounding the claim; and in Lillia v. Airey, the party, who had furnished necessary supplies to the wife, was held entitled to recover to the extent of her separate maintenance. She had, it is true, given a bond, but only for 60*l.*; the Court, however, held the creditor entitled to a larger sum, the separate maintenance exceeding the amount of the bond. But the present is by no means a case of mere general charge. If it were, I have no doubt, that the claim would well lie; but there are written promises. I hold a retainer in writing to imply a promise to pay, whatever shall be reasonably and lawfully demanded by the solicitor or attorney, acting under that retainer. So, if there be no formal retainer, but only a written acknowledgment or adoption of the professional conduct, or instructions in writing to proceed further, the party, who gives such written instructions, in effect promises to pay, whatever may lawfully become due to one acting in obedience to them, that is, to pay the costs, which shall be taxed. The present case is, in almost the whole, if not the whole of it, covered by such written authority, although such written authority was not necessary to bind Mrs. Barlee's separate estate. I am of opinion, therefore, that the decree of his Honor ordering the solicitor's bill to be taxed is well founded. Nothing could more effectually defeat the very purpose of such settlements than denying power to the wife thus to charge her estate. She is meant to be protected by the separate provisions from all oppression and circumvention, and to be made independent of her husband, as well as of all others. If she cannot obtain professional aid, and that, which the facility, which other parties find in obtaining it, she is not on equal terms with them. If the husband or the trustees can hold her at arm's length, and refuse her the proceeds of the fund held by them for her use, and if they can by a verbal retainer engage a solicitor, while she can only obtain such help by executing a mortgage or by granting bonds or notes, she is not on the same footing with them. I hold, therefore, that, so far from a solicitor's or attorney's bill being less entitled to favor in courts of equity when sued upon, as against the separate estate of a married woman, the argument is all the other way." See also the learned note of Mr. Roper, in his Treatise on Husband and Wife, (ch. 21, § 3, p. 241 to 247,) which contains a very elaborate review of the leading authorities, and, in a great measure, exhausts the subject. From that note the materials in the text have been partly drawn. See also Clancy on Married Women, ch. 9, p. 331 to 346. In Vandergucht v. De Blaquiere, 8 Sim. R. 315, the Vice Chancellor held, that where a married woman divorced from her husband, and entitled to alimony under a decree of the Ecclesiastical Court, accepted a Bill of Exchange for articles of dress, supplied to her by the drawer of the bill, and made it payable at her Banker's, to whom the alimony was paid, she did not thereby charge her alimony.

(as we have seen,) is not the modern doctrine ; for by that it turns upon the intention of the married woman to create a charge on her separate estate, either as an appointment, or as a disposition of it by a contract in the nature of an appointment.<sup>1</sup> The difficulty, then, is to distinguish upon any clear reasoning, what ground of general presumption exists to infer an intention, not expressed, to charge any particular debt upon her separate estate, which would not ordinarily apply to all her general debts. If she gives a promissory note, or an acceptance, or a bond, to pay her own debt, or if she joins in a bond with her husband to pay his debts, the decisions have gone the length of charging it on her separate estate, either as a contract, or as an appointment, without any distinct circumstance

establishing her intention.<sup>1</sup> Where, indeed, she lives apart from her husband, and has a separate estate and maintenance secured to her, there may be good ground to hold, that all her debts, contracted for such maintenance, and in the course of her dealings with tradesmen, are understood by both parties to be upon the credit of her separate funds for maintenance.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1402. In the next place, let us proceed to the consideration of what is commonly called the Equity of a wife to a settlement out of her own property. It is well known, that, at the Common Law, marriage amounts to an absolute gift to the husband of all the goods, personal chattels, and other personal estate, of which the wife is actually or beneficially possessed at that time in her own right, and of such other goods, personal chattels, and personal estate, as come to her during the marriage.<sup>3</sup> But to her choses in action, such as debts due by obligation, or by contract, or otherwise, the husband is not absolutely entitled, unless they are reduced into possession during her life.<sup>4</sup> In regard to chattels real, of which the wife is, or may be, possessed during the coverture, the husband has a qualified title. He has an interest therein in her right; and he may, by his alienation during the coverture, absolutely deprive her of her right therein. But if he does not alien them, she will be entitled to them, if she survives him; and, if he survives her, he will be entitled to them in virtue of his marital rights.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1403. These general explanations of the state of the Common Law, as to the respective rights of husband and wife in regard to her personal property, are sufficient to enable us to understand the origin, nature, and character of the wife's Equity to a settlement. We have already seen the protective power, which Courts of Equity exert to preserve the control and disposition of married women over property, secured or given to their separate use, and also to preserve the rights and interests of wards of the Court. Whenever the husband has reduced the personal estate of his wife, of whatever original nature it may be, whether legal or equitable, into possession, he becomes thereby the absolute owner of it, and may dispose of it at his pleasure.<sup>2</sup> And, this being the just exercise of his legal marital rights, Courts of Equity will not interfere to restrain or limit it.<sup>3</sup>

Wherever, also, he is pursuing the common remedies at law, for the purpose of reducing such personal [*632] *property into possession, Courts of Equity for the same reason are, or at least (it is said) ought to be, ordinarily passive.<sup>1</sup> We say, ordinarily; because it is not, perhaps, quite certain, that Courts of Equity will not interfere by way of injunction to suits at law for the wife's personal property against the husband under special circumstances. In one class of cases, that of legacies to the wife, when they are sued for by the husband in the Ecclesiastical Courts, it is certain, that an injunction will be allowed for the purpose of enforcing the wife's Equity to a settlement.<sup>2</sup>

Mr. Clancy insists, that there is no just ground, upon which the Courts of Equity should decline to interfere in cases, where the husband is seeking at law to recover the wife's legal choses in action. His reasoning is entitled to great consideration from its intrinsic force; and there are certainly authorities in its favor, although he admits, that the prevalent spirit of the cases is against it. Clancy on Marr. Women, B. 5, ch. 2, p. 466 to 470. Mr. Jacob, in his late edition of Roper on Husband and Wife, (Vol. I. 271, 272,) expressly denies, that there is any sound principle, for making a distinction between a trust term and any other equitable chose in action of the wife. It were to be wished, that the principle could, as a matter of general justice, be maintained in Equity. In Pierce v. Thornely, (2 Sim. R. 167,) the Vice Chancellor held a doctrine, which seems to cover the very case. "At law," said he, "where judgment had been recovered by the husband and

§ 1404. The principal, if not the sole, cases, in which Courts of Equity now interpose to secure to the wife her Equity to a settlement, are; first, where the husband seeks aid or relief in a Court of Equity in regard to her property; secondly, where he makes an assignment of her equitable interests; thirdly, where she seeks the like relief, as plaintiff, against her husband, or his assignees, in regard to her equitable interests.<sup>1</sup> In the first case, the Court lays hold of the occasion, upon the ground of the maxim, that he, who seeks equity, must do equity, to require the husband to make a suitable settlement upon the wife (if not already made) out of that property, or some other property, for her due maintenance and support, in case of her survivorship, according to the rank and condition and circumstances of the parties.<sup>2</sup> In the second case, the same principle is applied to other persons claiming under the husband, as to himself. In the third case, the doctrine may seem more artificial. But it is, in truth, enforcing against the husband her admitted equity to prevent an irreparable injustice.<sup>3</sup>

wife, the husband alone could levy execution. But a Court of Equity will not, unless the wife consents, permit the husband to recover the whole of his wife's choses in action; but will require a settlement to be made upon her." See also Kenny v. Udall, 5 John. Ch. R. 477, and Van Epps v. Van Deusen, 4 Paige, R. 74. In the latter case Mr. Chancellor Walworth was of opinion, that an injunction ought to go to a proceeding at law, in order to enforce the wife's Equity to a settlement.

property in all the personal estate of his wife, capable of immediate and tangible possession. But, if it is such, as cannot be reduced into possession, except by an action at law, or by a suit in Equity, he has only a qualified interest therein, such as will enable him to make it an absolute interest, by reducing it into possession. If it is a chose in action, properly so called, that is, a right, which may be asserted by an action at law, he will be entitled to it, if he has actually reduced it into possession (for a judgment is not sufficient) in his lifetime. But if it is a right, which must be asserted by a suit in Equity, as where it is vested in trustees, who have the legal property, he has still less interest. He cannot reach it without application to a Court of Equity, in which he cannot sue without joining her with him; although perhaps a Court of Law might permit him to do so, or at least, to use her name without her consent. If the aid of a Court of Equity is asked by him in such a case, it will make him provide for her, unless she consents to give such equitable property to him.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1406. It is called the wife's Equity. But in truth it is never limited to the wife; for, in all cases where a settlement is decreed, it is the invariable practice to include a provision for the issue of the marriage, through the instrumentality of the Equity of the wife.<sup>2</sup> This Equity will not only be administered at the instance of the wife and her trustees; but also, where the husband sues in Equity for her

§ 1407. It is not easy to ascertain the precise origin of this right of the wife, or the precise grounds, upon which it was first established. It has been said, that it is an equity grounded upon natural justice; that it is that kind of parental care, which a Court of Equity exercises for the benefit of orphans; and that, as a father would not have married his daughter without insisting upon some provision; so, a Court of Equity, which stands in loco parentis, will insist on it.<sup>3</sup> This is not so much a statement of the origin, as it is of the effect and value of the jurisdiction. The truth seems to be, that its origin cannot be traced to any distinct source. It is the creature of a Court of Equity, and stands upon its own peculiar doctrine and practice. It is in vain to attempt, by general reasoning, to ascertain the nature or extent of the doctrine; and, therefore, we must look entirely to the practice of the Court for its proper foundation and extent.<sup>4</sup>

a case, it is of no consequence, whether the fortune accrues before or during the marriage ; whether the property consists of funds in the possession of trustees, or of third persons ; or whether it is in the possession of the Court, or under its administration, or not ; for under all these circumstances, the equity of the wife will equally attach to it.<sup>1</sup> This equity of the wife was for a long time supposed to be confined to the absolute personal property of the wife. But it is now extended to the rents and profits of the real estate, in which she has a life interest ;<sup>2</sup> although it does not generally extend, as against the husband personally, to equitable interests, in which she has a life estate only.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>3</sup> Elliott v. Cordell, 5 Madd. R. 155, 156. In this case a legacy was given to a married woman of the dividends of £9000 three per cents., during her life, with a bequest over. The husband and wife joined in a sale of her life estate, and he became bankrupt. The wife afterwards filed a bill for a provision against the purchaser ; but it was refused. The Vice Chancellor (Sir John Leach) on that occasion said ; " I find no authority for the Equity claimed by the wife as against the particular assignee, in the case of an interest given to the wife for her life ; and it does not follow as a corollary or consequence from any established doctrine of the Court. Where an absolute equitable interest is given to the wife, the Court will not permit the husband to possess it, without making a provision for the wife, or her express consent ; and all who claim under the husband must take his interest subject to the same equity. But where an equitable interest is given to the wife for her life only, this Court does permit the husband to enjoy it without the consent of the wife, and without making any provision for her. It is true, that if the husband desert his wife, and fail to perform the obligation of maintain-

ing her, which is the condition, upon which the law gives him her property, this Court will apply any equitable interest, which he retains for the life of the wife, either wholly, or in part, for the maintenance of the wife. And if the husband becomes bankrupt, or takes the benefit of an insolvent debtor's act, this Court will fasten the same obligation of maintaining the wife out of the property of this description, which devolves, by act of law, upon the general assignee; for when the title of such assignee vests, the incapacity of the husband to maintain the wife has already raised this Equity for the wife. But the same principle does not necessarily apply to a particular assignee for a valuable consideration, who purchased this interest, when the husband was maintaining the wife, and before circumstances had raised any present Equity in this property for the wife, whatever may be the force of general reasoning upon it. If, however, I considered it to be useful, that the same rule should be applied to the particular assignee, as to the general assignee, which may be doubted, by declaring this rule, in the absence of all direct authority, and of all authority leading necessarily to the same conclusion, I fear, that I should not be administering the actual law of this Court, but I should be making a new law, and I cannot venture to assume such a jurisdiction." In Stanton v. Hall, 2 Russ. & Mylne, 175, a devise was in trust to A., the husband, for life of certain rents and profits; if he attempted to assign the same, or become bankrupt or insolvent, then upon trust to pay to his wife an annuity of £100 during his life, and after his death an annuity to his widow of £30. It was held, that the annuity was not the separate estate of the wife, but passed to the husband's assignee for value, and that against that assignee the wife had no equity for a settlement out of the annuity. On that occasion the Lord Chancellor (Brougham) said; "The case involves the question how far a married woman, to whom an annuity for life was bequeathed in terms, which have been adjudged not to vest it in her as her separate estate, is entitled to claim a settlement out of it, against one, who was a purchaser for valuable consideration from her husband, the husband having afterwards become insolvent. And, as Elliott v. Cordell, if it should be held to be law, decides the question, I have looked with some attention into that case, and also into the former authorities; and I find no warrant for supposing, that Elliott v. Cordell introduced any new doctrine upon the subject. The same doctrine, in principle, was recognised long before by Sir W. Grant, although, undoubtedly, neither in Mitford v. Mitford (9 Ves. 87,) nor in Wright v. Morley (11 Ves. 12,) was the point raised and disposed of formally. It was, however, repeatedly referred to in those cases; and it is perfectly plain, from the language there used, that the opinion of Sir W. Grant would have excluded the wife's claim as against particular as-

place, if both the husband and wife are subjects of, and residents in, a foreign country, where he would be entitled to his wife's fortune without making any settlement upon her, in such a case Courts of Equity, sitting in another jurisdiction, will, as to personal property of the wife within their jurisdiction, follow the local law, and do what the local tribunals would ordain under similar circumstances; for the rights of the husband and wife are properly subject to the local law of their own sovereign.<sup>1</sup>

[*637] * § 1410. Another exception seems to be, where the wife's property is a leasehold estate, or a term for years, held in trust for her. In such a case it is said, that the husband may assign the term for a valuable consideration, and thereby dispose of it, without the wife having any claim against his assignee; and, if he does not dispose of it, there is some doubt, whether the wife has any equity against him.<sup>2</sup> It is extremely difficult to perceive the exact grounds, upon which signees. If the question were now for the first time raised, whether Courts of Equity had not gone farther than principle warranted, in allowing the claim against particular assignees, in cases where a capital sum is at stake, some doubt might, perhaps, be entertained. But in a case like Elliott v. Cordell, where the question related to a mere life interest, and where, prior to the assignment, there was no failure on the part of the husband to maintain his wife, the Vice-Chancellor would have gone a great step farther, had he listened to the argument in favor of the wife's equity." this exception rests. It constitutes a seeming anomaly, resting more upon authority than principle; and, as such, it has been several times doubted.<sup>1</sup> But, however questionable it may be in its origin, and however it may seem to be at variance with the received doctrine in other analogous cases of assignment by the husband, it has at present a decided weight of judicial authority in its favor. It has even been carried to this extent, that the husband may, by his assignment of the reversionary interest in a term of years, held in trust for the wife, bind that interest, so as to deprive her of her equity therein; although he could not in the same way dispose of her reversionary interest in any choses in action or personal chattels.<sup>2</sup> The sole ground of the doctrine seems to be, that the husband may dispose of the wife's contingent, reversionary, legal interest in a term for years, and that there is no difference in equity between the legal interests in and the trusts of a term for years.<sup>3</sup>

settlement upon the wife out of her choses in action, and equitable interests assigned to them, whether they are absolute interests or life interests only in her, in the same way, and to the same extent, and under the same circumstances, as he would be bound to make one; for it is a general principle, that such assignees take the property, subject to all the equities, which affect the bankrupt, or insolvent, or general assignor.<sup>1</sup> Such assignees also take the property, subject to the wife's right of survivorship, in case the husband dies before the assignees have reduced her choses in action and equitable interests into possession.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1412. The principal controversy, which has arisen, [*639] is, whether a special assignee or purchaser *from the husband for a valuable consideration of her choses in action, or equitable interests, is bound to make such a settlement. It is now firmly established, that he is bound to make such a settlement. But, (it is said), that, subject to such provision, he will be entitled to the choses in action and equitable interests so assigned, discharged from the title of the wife by survivorship.<sup>3</sup>

Here, again, a distinction is taken between such a special assignee, or purchaser, and a general assignee in bankruptcy, or otherwise; for in the latter case the wife has an equity for a settlement out of her equitable interest for life; whereas, in the former case,

Johnson*, 1 Jac. & Walk. 456, 457.—In this respect the case of general assignees differs from that of a special assignee for a valuable consideration, if the doctrine be correct, that the latter will take against the right of the wife by survivorship. In the former case the assignees take, subject to the wife's right by survivorship. Mitford v. Mitford, 9 Ves. 87, 97, 99, 100; Ante, § 1411. The ground of the distinction, if it exists, (which is doubtful,) is not perhaps, at first sight, very obvious. But, in the case of a special assignee, it is said, that Equity considers the assignment of the husband, as amounting to an agreement, that he will reduce the property into possession. It likewise considers that, which a party agrees to do, as actually done. And, therefore, when the husband has the present power of reducing the property into possession, his assignment of the choses in action of the wife will be regarded as a reduction of it into possession. Honner v. Morton, 3 Russ. R. 68, 69. But, why may not the same principle be applied to the case of a general assignment by the husband for the benefit of his creditors? And, as to the rule in Equity, it is a rule applicable properly to the husband himself, and to his rights. Why should it affect the right of survivorship of the wife, when there is no actual reduction into possession? See the Lord Chancellor's observations in Druce v. Denison, 6 Ves. 394; 2 Roper on Husb. & Wife, Addenda, No. 3, p. 509 to 522. Sir Thomas Plumer, in his able judgment in Purdew v. Jackson, (1 Russ. R. 63, 64,) said; "An opinion has certainly prevailed, that a distinction subsists between an assignment by operation of law, and an assignment for a valuable consideration to an individual by contract; that the former is no bar to the right of the surviving wife, but that the latter is. And I think both kinds of assignment ought to have the same effect; and that it would be a manifest inconsistency to decide the contrary." See also Id. p. 53, and Pierce v. Thornely 2 Sim. R. 167. But in the cases of Elliott v. Cordell, 5 Madd. R. 149, and Stanton v. Hall, 2 Russ. & Mylne, 355, cited, Ante, § 1408, the distinction is insisted on.

§ 1413. The same principle applies generally to reversionary choses in action, and other reversionary equitable interests of the wife in personal chattels, (although not in chattels real), but in a manner more favorable to her rights.<sup>2</sup> For no assignment by the husband, even with her consent, and joining in the assignment, will exclude her right of survivorship in such cases. The assignment is not, and cannot from the nature of the thing amount to, a reduction into possession of such reversionary interests; and her consent during the coverture to the assignment is not [*641] *an act obligatory upon her.<sup>3</sup> Nay; in such a case, the wife's consent in Court to the transfer of such reversionary interest to or by her husband, will not

where an annuity or life interest in a fund was given to a married woman and not settled to her separate use, the husband with her concurrence, was capable of effectually disposing of her entire life estate, seeing that she might outlive her husband, and then, as to such part of it as would be enjoyed by her after the coverture determined, her interest would be reversionary only. He should be glad to be furnished with any cases, which would relieve him from this difficulty; but unless some authority for it was produced, he must decline to make the order." Afterwards, when he became Lord Chancellor, he reheard the cause, and said; "When this petition came on to be heard, it was assumed, that the only question was the authority of some late decisions with respect to property left to the separate use of a woman not married at the time. But I suggested another difficulty, namely, with respect to the power of the husband to dispose of his wife's life interest when not settled to her separate use; and the petition stood over for the purpose of enabling the petitioners' counsel to produce cases in favor of such right. I have since been informed, that no such cases are to be found. It is, I believe, certain that there are none; and the question is, whether consistently with the doctrine established in Purdew v. Jackson, (1 Russ. 1,) and Honner v. Morton (3 Russ. 65,) any such power can exist. This very point is just alluded to in a note to Purdew v. Jackson (1 Russ. 71, note,); but there is no decision upon it. I do not see how, consistently with the cases of Purdew v. Jackson and Honner v. Morton, the husband can make a title to such of the dividends of the fund as may accrue after his own death, and during the life of his wife surviving him." The case of Major v. Lansley, (2 Russ. & Mylne, 259) may seem at first view to contradict or to qualify the generality of the doctrine stated in the text. But there were several circumstances in that case materially distinguishing it from the cases referred to in the text. One circumstance was, that in that case the annuity, (which was assigned by the husband and wife,) though a reversionary interest was devised to the separate use of the wife; and of course she had the same complete power to dispose of it, as she had of any other equitable property vested in her for her separate use; and she joined in the assignment of her husband. Another was, that there were no trustees interposed, and the legal interest of the annuity, therefore, devolved upon her husband for the joint lives of himself and the wife, and she had only an equitable interest therein, and the assignment could operate upon that equitable interest. Another was, that the reversionary interest fell into possession before the death of the husband, and he had, by the assignment, covenanted, that he and his wife would levy a fine of the annuity; which,

however, was not done at the time of his death. The Court thought, that under these circumstances the legal estate in the annuity, coming to the wife by the death of the husband, did not defeat the title of the assignee to the equitable interest therein under the assignment, as a bona fide purchase for a valuable consideration.

<sup>2</sup> This was until lately a matter of controversy, which was acutely and severely debated in the profession. But it is put finally at rest by the decisions in Purdew v. Jackson, 1 Russ. R. 1, and Honner v. Morton, 3 Russ. R. 65.

<sup>3</sup> Ante, § 1402, § 1410. In Honner v. Morton (3 Russ. 65,) Lord Chancellor Lyndhurst said, " This fund was a chose in action of the wife ; it was her reversionary chose in action. Whether the husband has the power of assigning his wife's reversionary interest in a chose in action, is a question, which has been repeatedly agitated, and has excited considerable interest, both at law and in equity. At law, the choses in action of the wife belong to the husband, if he reduces them into possession; if he does not reduce them into possession, and dies before his wife, they survive to her. When the husband assigns the chose in action of his wife, one would suppose, on the first impression, that the assignee would not be in a better situation than the assignor; and that he, too, must take some steps to reduce the subject into possession, in order to make his title good against the wife surviving. But equity considers the assignment by the husband as amounting to an agreement, that he will reduce the property into possession. It likewise considers, what a party agrees to do, as actually done: and, therefore, where the husband has the power of reducing the property into possession, his assignment of the chose in action of the wife will be regarded as a reduction of it into possession. On the other hand, I should also infer, that, where the husband has not the power of reducing the chose in action into possession, his assignment does not transfer the property, till, by subsequent events, he comes into the situation of being able to reduce the property into possession; and then his previous assignment will operate on his actual situation, and the property will be transferred."

§ 1414. Thirdly. The Equity of a wife to a settlement will not only be enforced, in regard to her choses in action and equitable interests under the circumstances above mentioned, against *the husband and [*642] his assignees, where he or they are plaintiffs, seeking aid and relief in Equity; but it will also be enforced, where she or her trustee brings a suit in Equity for the purpose of asserting it. This was formerly matter of no inconsiderable doubt, as it was (not unnaturally) supposed, that the jurisdiction rested solely upon the ground, that parties seeking relief in equity should do equity; and, if they were not seeking any relief, then, that the Court remained passive. But the doctrine is now firmly established, that, whenever the wife is entitled to this Equity for a settlement out of her equitable interests against her husband or his assignees, she may assert it in a suit, as plaintiff, by bringing a bill in the name of her next friend.<sup>1</sup> And certainly there is

much good sense in disallowing any distinction, founded upon the mere consideration, who is plaintiff on the record; for her Equity is precisely the same, whether she is plaintiff, or whether she is defendant. If it is a substantial right, it ought to be enforced in her favor, whenever it is withheld from her.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1415. We have seen, that when the husband comes into a Court of Equity for relief, as to any property, which he claims in her right, jure mariti, he will be obliged to submit to the terms of the Court, and make a settlement or provision for her; otherwise [*643] *the Court will not render him any assistance. If he does not choose to make any such settlement or provision, the Court will not, ordinarily, take from him the income and interest of his wife's fortune, so long as he is willing to live with her, and maintain her, and there is no reason for their living apart. The most the Court will do under such circumstances is, to secure the fund, allowing him, whenever it is deemed proper, under its order to receive the income and interest.<sup>2</sup> The effect of this proceeding is, that the wife will have the chance of taking it by survivorship.<sup>3</sup>

But, where the husband refuses her a maintenance, or deserts her, the rule, as we shall presently see, is different. The like doctrine, subject to the like exceptions and limitations, is applied to assignees in bankruptcy, and to other general assignees, claiming title under the husband.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1416. Let us pass, in the next place, to the consideration of the circumstances, under which this Equity to a settlement may be waived, or lost. And, here, it need scarcely be said, that, if the wife is already amply provided for under a prior settlement, the very motive and ground for the interference of a Court of Equity in her favor is removed.<sup>2</sup> But she will not ordinarily be barred by an inadequate *settlement, unless it be by an express contract [*644] made before marriage.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1417. The wife's Equity for a settlement is generally understood to be strictly personal to her; and it does not extend to her issue, unless it has been asserted, and perfected by her in her lifetime. If, therefore, she should die, entitled to any equitable interest, and leave a husband, and her children are unprovided for by any settlement; still, her husband will be enabled to file a bill to recover the same, without making any provision for the children.<sup>4</sup> In truth the Equity of the children is not an Equity, to which in their own right they are entitled. It cannot therefore, be asserted against the wishes of the wife, or in opposition to her rights. The Court, in making a settlement of the wife's property, always attends to the interests of the children; because it is supposed, that in so doing, it is carrying into effect her own desires to provide for her offspring. But, if she dissents, the Court withholds all rights from the children.<sup>1</sup> But the right of the children to the benefit of a settlement attaches upon the wife's filing a bill for that purpose; and if she should die, pending the proceedings, without waiving the right to

<sup>1</sup> Hodgens v. Hodgens, 11 Bligh, R. 104, 105, 106. On this occasion Lord Cottenham said; "The equity of the children is not an equity to which they are in their own right entitled. In making the settlement of the wife's property, the interests of the children are always attended to, because it must be supposed to be the object, and it is the duty of the Court in carrying that object into effect, to provide for those, whom the mother of the children would be anxious to provide for; but, as between the mother and the children, I know of no authority for saying, that the Court has jurisdiction to take from the mother that, which the Court has given to the mother, as against the right of the husband for the purpose of creating a benefit to the children. That the children have no equity of their own, that it is only the equity that they obtain through the means of the consent of the mother, is sufficiently clear, when I call to your Lordships' recollection the fact, that if the mother, having attained the age of twenty-one, comes into Court, and consents, that the property shall be paid over to the husband, that the Court will permit it to be paid over without reference to the interests of the children. But in no instance are the children permitted to assert an independent equity of their own; and in no instance has that right ever been permitted against the mother. It is against the father, that the Court exercises jurisdiction, to exclude him from those rights, which the law would otherwise give him; and then the Court deals with those rights as between the mother, whose property it is, and as between the children of the marriage, in such a way as may be thought for the interests of the family. But the question is, whether the children have any right of their own against their mother, to deprive her of that income, which is given to her by a settlement, though not actually executed, yet in the hands of the Master at the time, when the party thought proper to submit to the jurisdiction of the Court."

§ 1418. It is competent, however, for the wife at any time pending the proceedings, and before a settlement under the decree is completed, or, at least, before proposals are made under that decree, by her consent, given in open Court or under a commission, to waive a settlement, and to agree, that the equitable fund shall be wholly and absolutely *paid over to [*645] her husband.<sup>2</sup> In such an event, both she and her children will be deprived of all right whatsoever in and over the fund.<sup>3</sup> But a female ward of the Court of Chancery, who has been married without its authority, and in contempt of it, will not be allowed by the Court to dispense with a settlement out of her property.<sup>4</sup>

On the contrary, the Court will insist upon such a settlement's being made by the husband, notwithstanding her consent to the contrary. And the Court will often, by way of punishment, in gross cases do, what it is not accustomed to do on common occasions, require a settlement of the whole of the wife's property to be made on her and her children.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1419. The Equity of the wife to a settlement may not only be waived by her ; but it may also be lost, or suspended by her own misconduct. Thus, [*646] *if the wife should be living in adultery, apart from her husband, a Court of Equity will not interfere, upon her own application, to direct a settlement out of her choses in action, or other equitable interests; for by such misconduct she has rendered herself unworthy of the protection and favor of the Court.<sup>2</sup> On the other hand, a Court of Equity will not, in such a case, upon the application of the husband, decree such equitable property of the wife to be paid over to him; for he is at no charge for her maintenance; and it is only in respect to his duty to maintain her, that the law gives him her fortune.<sup>1</sup>

Married Women, B. 5, ch. 6, p. 525; Id. ch. 11, p. 579, 580. Upon this point Lord Cottenham, in Hodgens v. Hodgens, 11 Bligh, R. 103, said ; " In cases either, where the husband has been guilty of contempt in marrying a ward, or where he has not been guilty of such contempt, if a Court of Equity has jurisdiction over the property of the ward, it undoubtedly, in making settlements, constantly and almost uniformly, I may say, provides for the interests of the children. The case we have now to consider is, where the husband has been guilty of a gross contempt, and where the settlement to be made and the objects to be provided for by that settlement are to be considered with reference to the situation, in which he, the husband, stands as respects himself and the property of the ward, with regard to whom he has been guilty of an offence by marrying without the consent of the Court."

§ 1419. a. Where, indeed, the wife has entitled herself to a settlement, and it has been decreed by a Court of Equity, there, the Court will not withhold or vary her right in consequence of any misconduct on her part, even although the decree has not been carried into execution. Nor will the Court in such a case at the instance of the husband, who has misconducted himself, entertain a suit for a settlement against the wife or her children, and thereby relieve him from his ordinary duty of maintaining them.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1420. But we must be careful to distinguish between an application made for a settlement on the wife, which is addressed to the Equity of the Court, and which is administered by it, suâ sponte, upon the merits of the parties, and is not founded in any antecedent vested rights, and other applications, where the parties stand upon their own positive vested rights under a settlement, or under a valid contract for a settlement, made before marriage. In the latter cases, Courts of Equity cannot refuse to protect or support those vested rights on account of any misconduct in the wife; and it will be no answer to a suit, brought by her for a settlement in such cases, that she has been guilty of adultery.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1421. Let us, in the next place, consider, under what circumstances Courts of Equity will allow alimony to a married woman. The wife's Equity already mentioned, as it is ordinarily administered against her husband, or against his particular assignee for a valuable consideration, is, by decreeing a settlement, which secures to her a provision for her maintenance, commencing from the death of her husband.<sup>2</sup> When the same Equity is administered upon a general assignment of his property in bankruptcy, or otherwise, the settlement secures a present and immediate provision for the maintenance of the wife; because the general assignment of his property renders him incapable of giving her a suitable support.<sup>3</sup> In each case, the Equity is administered out of the equitable funds, which are brought under the control of the Court, and are subject to its order. The object of the Court, in each case, is, to secure to her a maintenance out of such equitable funds, whenever she stands in need of it.

§ 1421. a. So, if it is apparent from the state of the case, that the husband must remain in future without funds to maintain his wife, and there is an equitable fund belonging to her within the reach of a Court of Equity, it will decree the income of the whole fund to be applied primarily to the maintenance of the wife during her lifetime and after her death the principal to be divided among her children. Thus, if the husband has become insolvent, and has taken advantage of an Insolvent Act, which discharges his person but not his future effects, there, a Court of Equity will secure the whole fund in the manner above mentioned for the benefit of the wife and children; for it is apparent, that there is no certainty, that he can ever have any means of supporting his wife and children. In this respect, the case differs from that of a discharge under the Bankrupt laws; for in the latter case the future effects of the bankrupt are not liable to his creditors. It is upon this difference that Courts of Equity will not give the whole fund to the wife and children in cases of bankruptcy, as they will in cases of insolvency.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1422. But it is obvious, that cases may arise calling for relief in favor of the wife, under very different circumstances from those above stated. Thus, a woman may be totally abandoned and deserted by her husband; or she may be driven from his home, and compelled by his ill treatment and cruelty to seek an asylum elsewhere. The question, *there- [*648] fore, may arise, whether, under such circumstances, Courts of Equity have a general authority to decree alimony to the wife, when she is left without any other adequate means of maintenance. To this question,

<sup>1</sup> See Brett v. Greenwell 3 Younge and Coll. 230, 231, 232; Beresford v. Hobson, 1 Madd. R. 362. In Foden v. Finney, 4 Russ. R. 428, the whole fund in the Court being less than £200 (which is the lowest sum for which the Court give the wife the benefit of her equity,) the Court ordered the whole to be paid over to the husband, notwithstanding he had deserted her, and left her without support for ten years. This case seems difficult to be maintained on principle.

propounded in its general form, the answer must be in the negative. Although it is clearly the duty of the husband to provide a suitable maintenance for his wife, if it is within his power ; yet it is not an obligation or duty, of which Courts of Equity will decree the specific performance, by directing in such a case a separate maintenance.<sup>1</sup> The proper remedy is by an action in a Court of Common Law, to be brought against the husband by any person, who shall, under such circumstances, supply the wife with necessaries according to her rank and condition ; for, by compelling the wife thus to leave him, the husband sends her abroad with a general credit for her maintenance.<sup>2</sup> Or, if this reliance should be precarious, the wife may make an application to the proper Ecclesiastical Court for a decree a mensâ et thoro, or for a restitution of conjugal rights ; and, as incident thereto, (but not, as it seems, as an exercise of original jurisdiction,) the latter Court may pronounce a decree for a suitable alimony.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1423. It has, indeed, been said, that upon a writ of supplicavit in Chancery by the wife for security of the peace against her husband, the [*649] *Court may, as an incident to the exercise of that jurisdiction, decree a separate maintenance to her.<sup>4</sup>

§ 1424. But although Courts of Equity do not assert any general jurisdiction to decree a suitable maintenance for the wife out of her husband's property, because he has deserted her, or ill treated her;<sup>2</sup> yet, on the other hand, they do not abstain altogether from interference in her favor.<sup>3</sup> Whenever the wife has any equitable property, within the reach of the jurisdiction of Courts of Equity, they will lay hold of it; and, in the case of the desertion or ill treatment of the wife by the husband, as well as in the case of his inability or refusal to maintain her, they will decree her a suitable maintenance out of such equitable funds.<sup>4</sup> The general ground, on which this jurisdiction is asserted, is, that the law, when it gives the property of the wife to the husband, imposes upon him the correspondent obligation of maintaining her; and that obligation will fasten itself upon such equitable property, in the nature of a lien or trust, which Courts of Equity, when necessary, will in pursuance of their duty enforce. If the equitable property has been fraudulently transferred into the possession of the husband, or of a third person for his use, the same Equity will be enforced against it in their hands; and if it has passed into the possession of a bonâ fide purchaser without notice, the other property of the husband will be held liable, as a substitute.<sup>1</sup> seeks by fraud or otherwise to evade it.<sup>1</sup> However, it has been recently held in England, that no Bill ought to be maintained in Equity to enforce any decree for alimony in the Ecclesiastical Court, after the death of the wife. The reason is suggested to be, that alimony is the proper and exclusive subject for discussion in the Ecclesiastical Court, whose province it is to determine, what ought be the amount, for how long it is to be granted, and what operates to discharge it.<sup>2</sup>

R. 22, whether a Bill is maintainable in Equity by the Executors of the wife against her husband, for an account and arrears of alimony decreed by an Ecclesiastical Court, which remained unpaid at the time of her death. The point was left undecided by the Vice Chancellor. It was suggested, that the Ecclesiastical Court might enforce the payment in such a case; and, if so, that would show, that the Courts of Equity need not interfere. But this was thought by the Court doubtful, and therefore the Bill was retained for a hearing. But the Lord Chancellor (Lord Lyndhurst) reversed the decree, and dismissed the bill. Stones v. Cooke, 8 Sim. R. 321, note. In Earl Digby v. Howard (4 Sim. R. 588) it was held by the Vice Chancellor, where the Duchess of Norfolk was entitled to pin-money, and became lunatic and remained so until her death, and the Duke received all the rents and maintained her during her life, that the Duke was liable in equity for all the arrears, as she was incapable of consent. But this decision was reversed in the House of Lords. Howard v. Digby, 8 Bligh, R. 224, N. S.; S. C. 5 Sim. R. 330; Ante, § 1375 a, § 1396.

<sup>2</sup> Stones v. Cooke, 8 Sim. 321, note. On this occasion, Lord Lyndhurst is reported to have said: "Alimony is the proper and exclusive subject for discussion in the Ecclesiastical Court. It is the province of that court to determine, what ought to be its amount, for how long it is to be granted, and what operates to discharge it. There is no instance in modern times of such a bill as the present being filed. During the Rebellion bills were filed for alimony; but they were filed in consequence of the abolition of the Ecclesiastical Courts. The decisions during that period do not apply, as they proceed upon the peculiar state of circumstances then existing. Other cases, where maintenance has been allowed to the wife, were cited, but neither do they apply, as they were cases arising out of the fraudulent conduct of the husband, or they were cases of trust. The simple question is, whether, where the alimony has been suffered to run in arrear, a bill can be maintained, by the executors of a wife, against the husband. It was said, that, in analogy to the cases, in which this court grants the writ of ne exeat regno, and on principle, the bill might be sustained; but it is impossible to look into those cases without seeing how very reluctantly the court has acted in giving relief. See Shaftoe v. Shaftoe, and Dawson v. Dawson. Then it was said, that the party will be without remedy, because executors cannot maintain a suit in the Ecclesiastical Court. That argument operates, I think, the other way, for executors may maintain suits in the Ecclesiastical Court, but not for arrears of alimony. It should seem, therefore, that the claim must cease with the death of the wife. That is probably the principle; but it does not follow, that, therefore, this court has jurisdiction. There is no instance of such a bill as the present being filed against a husband, by the executors of the wife; and I should be very averse to establish a precedent. The authorities do not warrant it. The cases, in which the court has granted the writ of ne exeat regno, do not warrant it, nor, from the circumstance of the Ecclesiastical Court not interfering, can I found any jurisdiction in this court." is deemed subversive of the true policy of the matrimonial law, and destructive of the best interests of society.<sup>1</sup> A fortiori, where *the wife has eloped, and [652*] is living in a state of adultery, they will withhold all countenance to such grossly immoral conduct; and they will leave the wife to bear, as she may, the ordinary results of her own infamous abandonment of duty.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1426. This equity of a wife to a maintenance, out of her own equitable estate, is generally confined to cases of the nature above mentioned, that is to say, where the husband abandons or deserts her; or where he refuses to maintain her; or where by reason of his insolvency he is incapable of affording a suitable maintenance for her. Unless some one of these ingredients exists, Courts of Equity will decline to interfere. If, therefore, the separation of the wife from her husband is voluntary on her part, and is caused by no cruelty or ill treatment; or if he is, bonâ fide, ready and willing and able to maintain her, and she, without good cause, chooses to remain separate from him; or if she already has a competent maintenance; in all such cases, Courts of Equity will afford her no aid whatever in accomplishing a purpose, which

§ 1427. So earnest, indeed, are Courts of Equity to promote the reconciliation of parties living in a state of separation, that they will, on no occasion whatever, enforce articles of separation by decreeing a continuance of the separation.<sup>3</sup> It has, indeed, been often questioned, whether deeds of separation between husband and wife, through the intervention of trustees, ought not to be held utterly void to all intents and purposes, as against the policy of the law, not only in their direct provisions for the separation, but also in respect to all collateral and accessorial provisions, such as a stipulation for a separate maintenance.<sup>4</sup> But the authorities on this subject have, perhaps, gone too far to enable Courts of Equity to adopt this broad principle, even if it were as unquestionable and salutary in morals and policy, as it has been thought to be.<sup>5</sup>

I have drawn the distinctions in the text principally from his labors, and those of Mr. Clancy. Clancy on Married Women, B. 4, ch. 4, p. 397 to 421. See also Westmeath v. Salisbury, 5 Bligh, R. (N. S.) 339, where this subject is elaborately discussed. Lord Eldon, in delivering his opinion in this case, expressed his disapprobation of the doctrine in the following terms (p. 398, 399.) “According to the law of this country, marriage is an indissoluble contract. It can only be dissolved a vinculo matrimonii by the legislature; and that contract, once entered into, imposes upon the husband and wife, both with respect to themselves and with respect to their offspring, most important and most sacred duties; so important and so sacred, that it does seem a little astonishing, that it ever should have happened, that it should be thought, that they could, by a mutual agreement between themselves, destroy all the duties they owed to each other, and all the duties they owed to their offspring. I do not go through, what has been stated in a great variety of cases upon the subject, nor do I refer to them for any other purpose, than that of stating that, which I think can admit of no contradiction, that it is impossible for any person to read the judgments, I have had the honor to pronounce upon the subject, without seeing, that I never could originally have been a party to any such doctrine. But when decision followed decision; when men whose professional knowledge, whose talents, and whose abilities I was bound, not only to respect, but to revere, had so often, in Courts of Law, stated doctrines, to which I could not agree, it seemed to me a most improper thing, that I should take upon myself to say, that those doctrines were wrong, without putting the matter into the most solemn course of inquiry; and I believe it will be found, if your Lordships look at the judgments, to which I am referring, that I was always exceedingly anxious, that a case of this important nature should be brought before the House of Lords.”

without the intervention of trustees, is utterly void.<sup>1</sup> In the next place, a deed for an immediate separation, with the intervention of trustees, will not be enforced so far, as it regards any covenant for separation ; but only so far as maintenance is covenanted for by the husband, and the trustees covenant to exonerate him from any debts contracted therefor.<sup>2</sup> In the next place, if a deed of separation contains a covenant, purporting to preclude the parties from any future suit for the restitution of conjugal rights, the covenant will be utterly void.<sup>3</sup> In the next place,

Salisbury*, 5 Bligh, R. (N. S.) 375 ; Id. 356. The subject of the legality of deeds of separation between husband and wife was much discussed in the very recent case of Jones v. Waite, 5 Bing. New Cas. 341, in the Exchequer Chamber, where it was held by three Judges against two, that a deed of separation having been drawn up between husband and wife, a promise by a third person to pay certain debts and expenses, for which the husband was solely liable, if he could execute the deed of separation, was held to be a valid promise. Lords Abinger and Denman being against the decision, and Patterson, Alderson and Littledale, Justices, being in favor of it. Lord Denman on this occasion said ; “ If I could venture to lay down any principle, which alone seems safely deducible for all these cases (which he cited) it is this ; That when a husband has by his deed acknowledged his wife to have a just cause of separation from him, and has covenanted with her natural friends to allow her a maintenance during separation on being relieved from liability for her debts, he shall not be allowed to impeach the validity of that covenant.” The whole case deserves deliberate examination, and it was argued with great ability and learning.

a deed, containing a covenant with trustees for a future separation of the husband and wife, and for her maintenance consequent thereon, will be utterly void.<sup>1</sup> In the next place, even in case of a deed for an immediate separation, if the parties come together again, there is an end to it with respect to any future, as well as to the past, separation.<sup>2</sup>

[*655.] *§ 1429. Such are some of the more important instances of the exercise of jurisdiction by Courts of Equity in regard to married women, for their protection, support, and relief; in some of which they are merely auxiliary to the Common Law; and in others, again, they proceed upon principles wholly independent, if not in contravention, of that system. Upon a just survey of the doctrines of Courts of Equity upon this subject, it is difficult to resist the impression, that their interposition is founded in wis-

See on this point the authorities collected and commented on by Mr. Clancy. (Clancy on Married Women, B. 4, ch. 4, p. 405, to 420.) Mr. Clancy thinks, that, where the separation is intended to be temporary, it would not be enforced; where it is intended to be permanent it would. dom, in sound morals, and in a delicate adaptation to the exigencies of a polished and advancing state of society. And here, as well as in the exercise of the jurisdiction in regard to infants and lunatics, we cannot fail to observe the parental solicitude, with which Courts of Equity administer to the wants, and guard the interests, and succor the weakness of those, who are left without any other protectors, in a manner, which the Common Law was too rigid to consider, or too indifferent to provide for.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

SET-OFF.

§ 1430. It remains for us to take notice of a few other matters, over which Courts of Equity exercise a jurisdiction, either in its own nature exclusive, or, at least, exclusive for particular objects, and under particular circumstances. Upon these, however, our commentaries will necessarily be brief, as they either are not of very frequent occurrence, or they are, in a great measure, embraced under the heads, which have been already discussed.

§ 1431. And, in the first place, let us consider the subject of SET-OFF, as an original source of Equity Jurisdiction.<sup>1</sup> It is not easy to ascertain the true nature and extent of this jurisdiction, since it has been materially affected in its practical application in England, by the Statutes of 2 Geo. II. ch. 22, and 8 Geo. II. ch. 24, in regard to set-off at law, in cases of mutual unconnected debts;<sup>2</sup> and by the more enlarged operation of the bankrupt laws, in regard to set-off, both at law and in Equity, in cases of mutual debts and mutual credits.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1432. It was said, by a late learned chancellor, that before the statutes of set-off at law, and the statutes of mutual debts and credits in bankruptcy, "this Court (that is, the Court of Chancery as a Court of Equity) was *in possession of it (i. e. the doctrine of set-off,) as grounded upon principles of Equity, long before the Law interfered. It is true, where the Court does not find a natural Equity, going beyond the statute (of set-off,) the construction is the same in Equity, as at law. But, that does not affect the general doctrine upon natural Equity. So, as to mutual debts and credits, Courts of Equity must make the same construction as the law. But, both in law and in Equity, that statute, enabling a party to prove the balance of the account upon mutual credit, have gone much further than the party could have gone before, either in law, or in Equity, as to set-off." This is not a very instructive account of the doctrine; for it leaves in utter obscurity, what were the particular cases, in which Courts of Equity did interpose upon principles of natural Equity.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1433. Lord Mansfield has expressed his views of the subject of set-off in Equity, in the following language. "Natural Equity says, that cross demands should compensate each other, by deducting the less sum from the greater; and that the difference is the only sum, which can be justly due. But positive law, for the sake of the forms of proceeding and convenience of trial, has said, that each must sue and recover

separately, in separate actions. It may give light to this case, and the authorities cited, if I trace the law relative to the doing complete justice in the same suit, or turning the defendant round to another suit, which, [*658] under various circumstances, *may be of no avail. Where the nature of the employment, transaction, or dealings, necessarily constitutes an account, consisting of receipts and payments, debts and credits, it is certain, that only the balance can be the debt; and, by the proper forms of proceeding in Courts of Law or Equity, the balance only can be recovered. After a judgment, or decree 'to account,' both parties are equally actors. Where there were mutual debts unconnected, the law said, they should not be set off; but each must sue. And Courts of Equity followed the same rule, because it was the law; for, had they done otherwise, they would have stopped the course of law in all cases, where there was a mutual demand. The natural sense of mankind was first shocked at this in the case of bankrupts; and it was provided for by 4 Ann. ch. 17, § 11, and 5 Geo. II. ch. 30, § 28. This clause must have, every where, the same construction and effect; whether the question arises upon a summary petition, or a formal bill, or an action at law. There can be but one right construction; and, therefore, if Courts differ, one must be wrong. Where there was no bankruptcy, the injustice of not setting off, (especially after the death of either party,) was so glaring, that Parliament interposed by 2 Geo. II. ch. 22, and 8 Geo. II. ch. 24, § 5. But the provision does not go to goods, or other specific things wrongfully detained. And, therefore, neither Courts of Law nor Equity can make the plaintiff, who sues for such goods, pay first what is due to the defendant; except so far as the goods can be construed a pledge; and then the right of the plaintiff is only to redeem.”<sup>1</sup>

*§ 1434. If this be a true account of the matter, then it would seem, that Courts of Equity did not, antecedently to the statutes of set-off, exercise any jurisdiction as to set-off, unless some peculiar equity intervened, independently of the mere fact of mutual, unconnected accounts. As to connected accounts of debt and credit, it is certain, that, both at law and in Equity, and without any reference to the statutes, or to the tribunal, in which the cause was depending, the same general principle prevailed, that the balance of the accounts only was recoverable; which was, therefore, a virtual adjustment and set-off between the parties.<sup>2</sup> But there is some reason to doubt, whether Lord Mansfield’s statement of the jurisdiction of Equity in cases of set-off is to be understood in its general latitude, and without some qualifications. It is true, that Equity generally follows the law, as to set-off; but it is with limitations and restrictions.<sup>3</sup> If there is no connexion between the demands, then the rule is, as it is at law. But if there is a connexion between the demands, Equity acts upon it, and allows a set-off under particular circumstances.<sup>4</sup>

§ 1435. In the first place, it would seem, that, independently of the statutes of set-off, Courts of Equity, in virtue of their general jurisdiction, are accustomed to grant relief in all cases, where, although there are mutual and independent debts, yet there is a mutual credit between the parties, founded, at the time, upon the existence of some debt due by the crediting party [*660] *to the other. By mutual credit, in the sense, in which the terms are here used, we are to understand a knowledge on both sides of an existing debt due to one party, and a credit by the other party, founded on, and trusting to such debt, as a means of discharging it.<sup>1</sup> Thus, for example, if A. should be indebted to B. in the sum of £10,000 on bond, and B. should borrow of A. £2,000 on his own bond, the bonds being payable at different times, the nature of

<sup>1</sup> See Ex parte Prescott, 1 Atk. 231.—In Hankey v. Smith, (3 T. R. 507, note,) it seems to have been thought by the Court, that, to constitute mutual credit within the Bankrupt Acts, it is not necessary, that the parties mean particularly to trust to each other in each transaction. Therefore, where a bill of exchange, accepted by A., got into the hands of B., and B. bought sugars of A., intending to cover the bill, it was held to be a case of mutual credit, although A. did not know, that the bill was in B.'s hands. Lord Kenyon said, the mutual credit was constituted by taking the bill on the one hand and selling the sugars on the other hand; to which Buller J. assented. The distinction between a mutual debt and a mutual credit is, in this view, extremely nice. In Trench v. Fenn, (Cooke, Bank. Laws, 569, 4th edit. 554, 5th edit.; S. C. 3 Doug. R. 257,) Mr. Justice Buller said; Wherever there is a trust between two men on each side, that makes a mutual credit. In Olive v. Smith, (5 Taunt. R. 60,) Mr. Justice Gibbs said, that Lord Mansfield, in Trench v. Fenn, adopted it as a principle, that wherever there is a mutual trust, that is, wherever one party, being indebted to another, intrusts that other with goods, it is a case of mutual credit. See also Atkinson v. Elliot, (7 T. R. 376,) Olive v. Smith, (5 Taunt. R. 67, 68). In Key v. Flint, (8 Taunt. R. 23,) Mr. Justice Dallas said, that mutual credit meant something different from mutual debts. Mutual credit must mean mutual trust. In Rose v. Hart, (8 Taunt. R. 499, 506,) the Court narrowed the extent of former decisions, and held, that, in order to constitute a mutual credit, the demands must be of such a nature, as must terminate in cross debts. See Easum v. Cato, 5 B. & Ald. 861.

the transaction would lead to the presumption, that there was a mutual credit between the parties, as to the £2,000, as an ultimate set-off, pro tanto, from the debt of £10,000. But if the bonds were both payable at *the same time, the presumption of such a [*661] mutual credit would be converted almost into an absolute certainty. Now, in such a case, a Court of Law could not set-off these independent debts against each other. But a Court of Equity would not hesitate to do so, upon the ground, either of the presumed intention of the parties, or of, what is called, a natural Equity.<sup>1</sup> If in such a case there should be an express agreement to set-off the debts against each other, pro tanto, there could be no doubt, that a Court of Equity would enforce a specific performance of the agreement, although, at the Common Law, the party might be remediless.<sup>2</sup>

In Jeffs v. Wood, (2 P. Will. 129,) the Master of the Rolls said; “But it may be a doubt, whether an insolvent person may, in Equity, recover against his debtor, to whom he at the same time owes a greater sum; though I own it is against conscience, that A. should be demanding a debt against B., to whom he is indebted in a larger sum, and would avoid paying it. However, it seems, that the least evidence of an agreement for a stoppage will do. And in these cases Equity will take hold of a very slight thing, to do both parties right.” In Green v. Darling, 5 Mason, R. 207 to 213, the principal cases in respect to set-off in Equity are collected.

§ 1436. In the next place, as to equitable debts, or a legal debt on one side, and an equitable debt [*662] *on the other, there is great reason to believe, that, whenever there is a mutual credit between the parties, touching such debts, a set-off is, upon that ground alone, maintainable in Equity; although the mere existence of mutual debts, without such a mutual credit, would not, even in a case of insolvency, sustain it.<sup>1</sup>

R. 95; Taylor v. Okey, 13 Ves. 180.—In ex parte Prescott, (1 Atk. R. 231,) Lord Hardwicke said, that in cases of bankruptcy, before the making of the Act of 5 Geo. 2d, ch. 30, if a person was a creditor, he was obliged to prove his debt under the commission, and receive perhaps a dividend only of 2s. 6d. in the pound from the bankrupt's estate, and at the same time, pay the whole to the assignee of what he owed to the bankrupt. So that, it seems, that insolvency alone would not constitute a sufficient Equity. See Lord Lanesborough v. Jones, (1 P. Will. 325); James v. Kynnier, (5 Ves. 110). In Simson v. Hart (14 Johns. R. 63, 76) it seems to have been thought, that the fact of insolvency created an Equity, or, at least, fortified it. See also Sewall v. Sparrow, 16 Mass. R. 24; Lyman v. Estes, 1 Greenl. R. 182; Peters v. Soame, 2 Vern. R. 428. In Greene v. Darling (5 Mason R. 212) the Court, after citing the principal decisions, summed up the result in the following language. "The conclusion, which seems deducible from the general current of the English decisions, (though most of them have arisen in bankruptcy,) is, that Courts of Equity will set-off distinct debts, where there has been a mutual credit, upon the principles of natural justice, to avoid circuitry of suits, following the doctrine of compensation of the Civil Law to a limited extent. That law went farther than ours, deeming each debt, suo jure, set-off or extinguished pro tanto; whereas, our law gives the party an election to set-off, if he chooses to exercise it. But if he does not, the debt is left in full force, to be recovered in an adversary suit. Since the statutes of set-off of mutual debts and credits, Courts of Equity have generally followed the course adopted in the construction of the statutes by Courts of law; and have applied the doctrine to equitable debts. They have rarely, if ever, broken in upon the decisions at law, unless

§ 1437. In the next place, Courts of Equity, following the law, will not allow a set-off of a joint debt against a separate debt, or, conversely, of a separate debt against a joint debt; or, to state the proposition more generally, they will not allow a set-off of debts accruing in different rights. But special circumstances may occur, creating an Equity, which will justify even such an interposition.<sup>1</sup> Thus, for example, if a joint creditor fraudulently conducts himself in relation to the separate property of one of the debtors, and misapplies it, so that the latter is drawn some other Equity intervened, which justified them in granting relief beyond the rules of law, such as has been already alluded to. And, on the other hand, Courts of law sometimes set-off equitable against legal debts, as in Bottomley v. Brooke, (cited 1 T. R. 619.) The American Courts have generally adopted the same principles, as far as the statutes of set-off of the respective states have enabled them to act." The Court adhered to the same doctrine in Howe v. Sheppard, 2 Sumn. Rep. 409, 414, 416. And Gordon v. Lewis, 2 Sumn. Rep. 628, 633, 634.

Oxley* (5 Cranch, 34) the Supreme Court of the United States held, that under the bankrupt laws of the United States, where a suit was brought by the assignee of one partner (who had become a bankrupt) for a separate debt, due to him by the defendant, who was a creditor of the partnership, the joint debt due by the partners might be set-off by the creditor against the separate debt due by him to the partner, who had become bankrupt. There were, however, special circumstances in the case. The partnership had been dissolved, and the separate debt was contracted afterwards with the bankrupt partner, who had agreed on the dissolution of the partnership to pay the joint debts, and who testified, that he intended, that the separate debt should, when contracted, be a credit for the joint debt. This might well constitute a case of mutual credit. But the Court relied on the provisions of the bankrupt laws; which, in fact on this point, did not differ from those of the English bankrupt laws.

in to act differently from what he would, if he knew the facts, that will constitute in a case of bankruptcy, a sufficient Equity for a set-off of the separate debt, created by such misapplication, against the joint debt.<sup>1</sup> So, if one of the joint debtors is only a surety for the other, he may, in Equity, set-off the separate debt due to his principal from the creditor; for, in such a case, the joint debt is nothing more than a security for the separate debt of the principal; and, upon equitable considerations, a creditor, who has a joint security for a separate debt, cannot resort to that security, without allowing what he has received on the separate account, for which the other was a security.<sup>2</sup> Indeed, it may be generally stated, that a joint debt may, in Equity, be set-off against a separate debt, where there is a clear series of transactions, establishing, that there was a joint credit given on account of the separate debt.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1437. . It has been already suggested, that Courts of Equity will extend the doctrine of set-off and claims in the nature of set-off beyond the law in all cases, where peculiar Equities intervene between the parties. These are so very various as to admit of no comprehensive enumeration. Some cases, however, illustrative of the doctrine, may readily be put. Thus, if an agent, having a title to an estate, should allow his principal to expend money upon the estate without any notice of that title, he will not be permitted after a recovery at law in ejectment to maintain an action at law against the principal for mesne profits; but Courts of Equity will require, that to the extent of the improvements there shall be a set-off or compensation allowed to the principal against the mesne profits.<sup>1</sup> So, if an agent in his own name should procure a policy of insurance to be underwritten for his principal, he will be personally liable for the premium of insurance to the underwriters; and if he has also in his own name procured another policy to be underwritten for the same principal, and a loss occurs under the latter policy, on which he sues the underwriters, they may in Equity if not at law, set-off the premiums due on the first policy against such loss.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1438. We may conclude this very brief review of the doctrine of set-off, as recognised in Courts of Equity, a doctrine, which is, practically, of rare occurrence in cases not within the statutes of set-off, either at law generally, or in bankruptcy, by a few remarks upon the same subject, as it is found recognised in the Civil Law. In the latter the doctrine was well known under the title of Compensation, which may be defined to be the reciprocal acquittal *of debts between two persons, who are in- [*665] debted, the one to the other;<sup>3</sup> or, as it is perhaps better stated by Pothier, compensation is the extinction of debts, of which two persons are reciprocally debtors to one another, by the credits, of which they are reciprocally creditors to one another.<sup>4</sup> The Civil Law itself expressed it in a still more concise form. Compensatio est debiti et crediti inter se contributio.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1439. The Civil Law treated compensation, as founded upon a natural Equity, and upon the mutual interest of each party to have the benefit of the set-off, rather than to pay what he owed, and then to have an action for what was due to himself. Ideo, compensatio necessaria est, quia interest nostra potius non solvere, quam solutum repetere.<sup>2</sup> Baldus adds another and very just reason, that it avoids circuitry of action. Quod potest brevius per unum actum, expediri compensando, incassum protraheretur per plures solutiones et repetitiones.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1440. It has been truly said, that the English doctrine of set-off has been borrowed from the Roman Jurisprudence. But there are several important differences between compensation in the Civil Law, and set-off in our law.<sup>4</sup> In the first place, in our

Pothier has examined this whole subject with great ability, and given a full exposition of the doctrines of the Civil Law, in his Treatise on Obligations, Pt. 3, ch. 4, n. 587 to 605 [n. 622 to 640 of French Editions.]

<sup>4</sup> Mr. Chancellor Kent, in Duncan v. Lyon (3 Johns. Ch. R. 359), used the following language. "The doctrine of set-off was borrowed from the doctrine of compensation in the Civil Law. Sir Thomas Clarke shows the analogy in many respects on this point, between the two systems; and the general rules in the allowance of compensation or set-off by the Civil Law, as well as by the law of those countries, in which that system is followed, are the same as the English law. To authorize a set-off, the debts must be between the parties, in their own right, and must be of the same kind or quality, and be clearly ascertained or liquidated. They must be certain and determinate debts. (Dig. 16, tit. 2, de Compensationibus, Code Lib. 4, tit. 31, l. 14, and Code Lib. 5, tit. 21, l. 1; Ersk. Inst. vol. 2, 525, 527; Pothier, Trait. des Oblig. No. 587 to 605; Ferriere sur Inst. tom. 6, 110, 113.)" See also Whitaker v. Rush, Ambler, R. 407 and 408.

law, if the party has a right of set-off, he is not bound to exercise it ; and if he does not exercise it, he is at liberty to commence an action afterwards for his own debt.<sup>1</sup> But in the Civil Law it was otherwise ; for the cross debt to the same amount was by mere operation of law, and independent of the acts of the parties, extinguished.<sup>2</sup> In support of this there are many texts of the Civil Law. Posteaquam placuit inter omnes, id quod invicem debetur, IPSO JURE compensari.<sup>3</sup> Unusquisque creditorem suum, eundemque debitorem, petentem summovet, si paratus est compensare.<sup>4</sup> Si totum petas, plus petendo causa cadis.<sup>5</sup> Si quis igitur compensare potens, solverit, condicere poterit, quasi indebito soluto.<sup>6</sup>

§ 1441. In the next place, in our law, the right of compensation or set-off is confined to debts, properly so called, or to claims strictly terminating in such debts. In the Civil Law the right was more extensive ; for not only might debts of a pecuniary nature be set off against each other, but debts or *claims [*667] for specific articles of the same nature, (as for corn, wine or cotton,) might also be set off against each other. All that was necessary, was, that the debt or claim to be compensated should be certain and determinate, and actually due, and in the same right, and of the same kind, as that on the other side.<sup>7</sup> The general rule was: Aliud pro alio, invito creditori, solvi non potest.<sup>1</sup> Ejus, quod non ei debetur, qui convenitur, sed alii, compensatio fieri non potest.<sup>2</sup> Quod in diem debetur, non compensabitur, antequam dies venit, quanquam dari oporteat.<sup>3</sup> Compensatio debiti ex pari specie, et causâ dispari, admittitur; velut, si pecuniam tibi debeam, et tu mihi pecuniam debeas, aut frumentum, aut cætera hujusmodi, licet ex diverso contractu, compensare vel deducere debes.<sup>4</sup> The only exception to the rule was in cases of deposits; for it was said; In causa depositi compensationi locus non est; sed res ipsa reddenda est.<sup>5</sup>

§ 1442. In another provision of the Civil Law we may distinctly trace an acknowledged principle of Equity jurisprudence upon the same subject.<sup>6</sup> The rule, that compensation should be allowed of such debts only, as were due to the party himself, and in the same right, had an exception in the case of sureties. A person, who was a surety for a debt, might [*668] *not only oppose, as a compensation, what was due from the creditor to himself; but also what was due to the principal debtor. Si quid a fidejussore petatur, æquissimum est eligere fidejussorem, quod ipsi, an quod reo debetur, compensare malit; sed et, si utrumque velit compensare, audiendus est.<sup>7</sup>

Law, which has not received the same favor in ours. It was generally true, that a debt, due from the creditor to a third person, could not be insisted on by the debtor, as a compensation, even with the assent of such third person; Creditor compensare non cogitur, quod alii, quam debitori suo, debet; quamvis creditor ejus pro eo, qui convenitur debitum obproprium velit compensare.<sup>1</sup> Yet, where the debtor had procured a cession or assignment of the debt of such third person, he might, after notice to the creditor, insist upon it by way of compensation. In rem suam procurator datus post litis contestationem, si vice mutuâ conveniatur, æquitate compensationis utetur.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1444. These may suffice, as illustrations of the Civil Law on the subject of compensation or set-off. The general equity and reasonableness of the principles, upon which the Roman superstructure is founded, make it a matter of regret, that they have not been transferred to their full extent into our system of Equity jurisprudence. Why, indeed, in all cases of mutual debts, independently of any notion of [*669] mutual credit, Courts of Equity should not have at once supported and enforced the doctrine of the universal right of set-off, as a matter of conscience and natural equity, it is not easy to say. Having affirmed the natural equity, it seems difficult to account for the ground, upon which they have refused the proper relief founded upon it. The very defect of the remedy at law furnishes an almost irresistible reason for such equitable relief. The doctrine of compensation has, indeed, been felicitously said to be among those things, quæ jure aperto nituntur.<sup>1</sup> The universality of its adoption in all the systems of jurisprudence, which have derived their origin from Roman fountains, demonstrates its persuasive justice and sound policy.<sup>2</sup> The Common Law, in rejecting it from its bosom, seems to have reposed upon its own sturdy independence, or its own stern indifference. But the marvel is, that Courts of Equity should have hesitated to foster it, when their own principles of decision seem to demand the most comprehensive and liberal action on the subject.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

ESTABLISHING WILLS.

§ 1445. It has been already stated, in another part of these Commentaries, that the proper jurisdiction, as to the validity of last wills and testaments, belongs to other tribunals. Where a will respects personal estate, it belongs to the Ecclesiastical Courts ; and where it respects real estate, it belongs to the Courts of Common Law.<sup>1</sup> But, although this is regularly true, and Courts of Equity will not, in an adversary suit, entertain jurisdiction to determine the validity of a will ; yet, whenever a will comes before them, as an incident in a cause, they necessarily entertain jurisdiction to some extent over the subject ; and, if the validity of the will is admitted by the parties, or if it is otherwise established by the proper modes of proof, they act upon it to the fullest extent.<sup>2</sup> If either of the parties should afterwards bring a new suit, to contest the determination of the validity of the will so proved, the Court of Equity, which has so determined it, would certainly grant a perpetual injunction.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1446. The usual manner, in which Courts of Equity proceed in such cases, is this. If the parties admit the due execution and validity of the will, it is deemed, ipso facto, sufficiently proved. If the will is of personal estate, and a probate thereof is produced from the proper Ecclesiastical Court, that is ordinarily deemed sufficient. But if the parties are dissatisfied with the probate, and contest the validity of the will, the Court of Equity, in which the controversy is depending, will suspend the determination of the cause, in order to enable the parties to try its validity before the proper Ecclesiastical tribunal, and will then govern itself by the result.<sup>1</sup> If the will is of real estate, and its validity is contested in the cause, the Court will, in like manner, direct its validity to be ascertained, either by directing an issue to be tried, or an action of ejectment to be brought at law; and will govern its own judgment by the final result.<sup>2</sup> If the will is established in either case, a perpetual injunction may be decreed.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1447. But, it is often the primary, although not the sole, object of a suit in Equity, brought by devisees and others in interest, to establish the validity of a will of real estate; and thereupon to obtain a perpetual injunction against the heir at law and others, to restrain them from contesting its validity in future.<sup>4</sup> In such cases the jurisdiction, exercised by Courts of Equity, is somewhat analogous to that exercised in cases of Bills of Peace ; and it is founded upon the like considerations, in order to suppress interminable litigation, and to give security and repose to titles.<sup>1</sup> In every case of this sort, Courts of Equity will, unless the heir waives it, direct an issue of devisavit vel non, (as it is technically, although, according to Mr. Woodeson, barbarously expressed,)<sup>2</sup> to ascertain the validity of the will.<sup>3</sup> But it will

<sup>1</sup> Ante, § 853, 859.—The heir at law cannot come into Equity for the purpose of having an issue to try the validity of the will at law, unless it is by consent ; for he may bring an ejectment. But if there are any impediments to the proper trial of the merits on such an ejectment, he may come into Equity to have them removed. Jones v. Jones, 3 Meriv. R. 161, 170; Bates v. Graves, 2 Ves. jr. 288 ; 1 Powell on Devises, by Jarman, ch. 15, p. 628, note (1). Courts of Equity do not seem to have any direct or original authority to establish the validity of a will of real estate, per se, but only as incidental to some other object, as carrying into effect trusts, marshalling assets, &c. For, if no obstacles intervene, the devisee, if he has a legal estate, may sue at law. If after repeated trials at law, in such a case, the will is established by a satisfactory verdict and judgment, Courts of Equity will then interfere, and grant a perpetual injunction against the heir, to prevent endless litigation, as it does in other cases. Bootle v. Blundell, 19 Ves. 501, 502.—The following extract from the Report of the Chancery Commissioners to Parliament, in March 1826, and the explanatory paper of Mr. Beames, (p. 84,) shows very distinctly the practice of the Courts of Equity in establishing wills. "In a suit for establishing a will, the heir at law is, by the long established practice of the Court, entitled to an issue, devisavit vel non. But he cannot be compelled to decide, whether he will or not, require such issue, until the hearing of the cause, when he will have had an opportunity of considering the evidence taken in the cause, and of satisfying his mind, so far as that evidence extends, whether he should, or not, have the matter investigated by the viva voce examination of the witnesses on the trial of an issue. If he should elect to have such an issue, as all the expense incurred in examining the witnesses would, in the event of their being in existence at the time of the issue being tried, be wholly useless, and the evidence they had given in Equity might, not feel itself bound by a single verdict either way, if it is not entirely satisfactory; but it will direct new trials, until there is no longer any reasonable ground for doubt.<sup>1</sup> The general rule established in Courts of Equity is, that upon every such issue and trial at law, all the witnesses to the will should be examined, if practicable, unless the heir should waive the proof.<sup>2</sup> But the rule is not absolutely inflexible, but it will yield to peculiar circumstances.<sup>3</sup> When, possibly, be made an improper use of by the heir, when he came to try the issue; and, at all events, that evidence might not, improbably, in some measure affect that testimony, which the witnesses might give on such trial; it seems expedient to provide, that, in all such suits for the establishment of wills, neither party shall, before the hearing, enter into any evidence, either to support, or question the will, except that the plaintiff shall examine the attesting witnesses upon the usual interrogatories, and which apply only to the formal execution of the will, and the heir may cross-examine such witnesses. See also White v. Wilson, 13 Ves. 86, 91, 92; Bootle v. Blundell, 19 Ves. 494, 505, 509; Tatham v. Wright, 2 Russ. v. Mylne, 1.

<sup>3</sup> The doctrine was much considered in Tatham v. Wright (2 Russ. & Mylne, 1,) which was first heard before the Master of the Rolls (Sir John Leach,) who, in speaking on this point, said; "The effect of establishing a will in this Court is to conclude all future questions respecting its validity; and the caution of this Court requires, therefore, before a will be established upon evidence here, that all the attesting witnesses shall be examined. If this Court requires the aid of a court of law, and the intervention of a jury, to determine the validity of a will, it does not necessarily follow that a court of law must in such a case depart from its own rules and adopt those of a Court of Equity. When all the witnesses are not examined in the court of law, and the cause comes on for further directions in a Court of Equity, there may be cases in which a Court of Equity, referring to its own principles, may not have its conscience fully satisfied by the verdict of the jury:—as, for instance, by these means upon a verdict the validity of the will is fully established, the Court will, by its decree, de-

where, the general competence of the testator being admitted, the question depends on the competency at the particular time of executing the will. There the attesting witnesses being the persons, who can give the best testimony as to the special fact, it may be reasonable in the Court of Equity to send the case back, in order that all the witnesses may be examined. But when, as in the present case, the question depends not upon the particular state of the testator's mind at the making of the will, but upon his general competency throughout a long life, the attesting witnesses to the will may not be persons capable of speaking to the fact of general competency, and not, therefore, the most material witnesses in the consideration of a Court of Equity. It is further to be observed, that the bill filed in this case is not by the devisees to establish the testamentary instrument, but it is a bill by the heir at law claiming against these instruments, to have a legal estate put out of his way, in order that he may try the validity of these instruments by ejectment; and no decree in this cause would be conclusive upon the question of the validity of the will. The plaintiff might, by redeeming the mortgage, get in the outstanding legal estate by an assignment of the mortgage; or even upon the hearing upon further directions, he might still contend, that he ought not to be concluded by the trial of the issues, and that the Court of Equity should still permit him to proceed by restraining the defendants from opposing to him the legal estates. It is not, however, for the present purpose, necessary to advert to these distinctions. The complaint, that the two other witnesses were not examined, is made by the heir, to whom they were tendered, who had full opportunity of examining them, but thought fit to decline that examination. He declined it, because he wished to have the technical advantage, which by the rules of law results from considering those persons witnesses of his opponent. Can he, therefore, with effect say, that it must be inferred, that the witnesses, if examined, could have given evidence in his favor, when it was his own choice, that such evidence should not be laid before the Court." The cause was re-heard before Lord Chancellor Brougham, with the assistance of Lord Ch. Justice Tindal and Lord Ch. Baron Lyndhurst. Lord Ch. Justice Tindal, in delivering the opinion of himself and the Lord Chief Baron, said; "It may be taken to be generally true, that in cases where the devisee files a bill to set up and establish the will, and an issue is directed by the Court upon the question, devisee vel non, this Court will not decree the establishment of the will, unless the devisee has called all the subscribing witnesses to the will or accounted for their absence. And there is good reason for such a general rule. For as a decree in support of the will is final and conclusive against the heir, against whom

an injunction would be granted, if he should proceed to disturb the possession after the decree, it is but reasonable, that he should have the opportunity of cross-examining all the witnesses to the will, before his right of trying the title of the devisee is taken from him. In that case, it is the devisee, who asks for the interference of this Court, and he ought not to obtain it, until he has given every opportunity to the heir at law to dispute the validity of the will. This is the ground, upon which the practice is put in the cases of Ogle v. Cooke (1 Ves. sen. 178,) and Townsend v. Ivers (1 Wils. 216.) But it appears clearly from the whole of the reasoning of the Lord Chancellor in the case of Bootle v. Blundell (1 Mer. 193, Cooper, 1:36,) that this rule, as a general rule, applies only to the case of a bill filed to establish the will, (an establishing bill, as Lord Eldon calls it in one part of his judgment,) and an issue directed by the Court upon that bill. And even in cases to which the rule generally applies, this Court, it would seem, under particular circumstances, may dispense with the necessity of the three witnesses being called by the plaintiff in the issue. For, in Lowe v. Jolliffe (1 W. Black. 365,) where the bill was filed by the devisees under the will, and an issue, devisavit vel non, was tried at bar, it appears from the report of the case that the subscribing witnesses to the will and codicil, who swore, that the testator was utterly incapable of making a will, were called by the defendant in the issue, and not by the plaintiff; for the reporter says 'to encounter this evidence, the plaintiff's counsel examined the friends of the testator, who strongly deposed to his sanity;' and, again, the Chief Justice expressed his opinion to be, that all the defendant's witnesses were grossly and corruptly perjured. And after the trial of this issue the will was established. In such a case, to have compelled the devisee to call these witnesses, would have been to smother the investigation of the truth. Now, in the present case, the application to this Court is not by the devisee seeking to establish the will, but by the heir at law, calling upon this Court to declare the will void, and to have the same delivered up. The heir at law does not seek to try his title by an ejectment, and apply to this Court to direct, that no mortgage or outstanding terms shall be set up against him to prevent his title from being tried at law; but seeks to have a decree in his favor, in substance and effect to set aside the will. This case, therefore, stands upon a ground directly opposed to that upon which the cases above referred to rest. So far from the heir at law being bound by a decree, which the devisee seeks to obtain, it is he, who seeks to bind the devisee; and such is the form of his application, that if he fails upon this issue, he would not be § 1448. If, however, the devisees have no further present object, than merely to establish the will by perpetuating the testimony of the witnesses thereto, this may be done, (as we shall presently see,) by a proper bill for the purpose; and the latter is, indeed, what is usually meant by proving a will in Chancery.<sup>1</sup>

* § 1449. It may be proper, also, to take [*674] notice in this place, (although it more frequently arises in the exercise of the auxiliary or assistant jurisdiction,) that Courts of Equity, in cases of this sort, where the original will is lodged in the custody of the register of the Ecclesiastical Court, and it may be necessary to be produced before witnesses, resident abroad, whose testimony is to be taken under a commission to prove its due execution, will direct the original will to be delivered out by such officer to a fit person, to be bound himself. For the only result of a verdict in favor of the will would be, that the heir at law would obtain no decree, and his bill would be dismissed, still leaving him open to his remedies at law. No decided case has been cited, in which the rule has been held to apply to such a proceeding; and, certainly, neither reason nor good sense demands, that this Court should establish such a precedent under the circumstances of this case. If the object of the Court, in directing an issue, is to inform its own conscience by sifting the truth to the bottom, that course should be adopted with respect to the witnesses, which, by experience, is found best adapted to the investigation of the truth. And that is not attained by any arbitrary rule, that such witnesses must be called by one, and such by the other party; but, by subjecting the witnesses to the examination in chief of that party, whose interest it is to call him, from the known or expected bearing of his testimony, and to compel him to undergo the cross-examination of the adverse party, against whom his evidence is expected to make." Lord Brougham expressed his own opinion in the following language; "There is a broad line of distinction between cases, where the moving party seeks to set the will aside, and cases where the moving party is a devisee seeking to establish it; the rule, which makes it imperative to call all the witnesses to a will, must be considered as applicable to the latter only."

named by the party in interest ; such party first giving security, to be approved by the Judge of the Ecclesiastical Court, to return the same within a specified time. If there is any dispute about the security for the safe custody and return of the will, it will be referred to a Master to settle and adjust the same.<sup>1</sup> If the commission is to be executed within the realm, and the witnesses are therein, the Court will direct the original will to be brought into its own registry, to lie there, until the Court has done with it ;<sup>2</sup> or to be delivered out on giving security.<sup>3</sup>

CHAPTER XXXIX.

AWARDS.

§ 1450. COURTS of Equity, also, formerly exercised a large jurisdiction in matters of AWARDS. But, by means of statutes, which have been passed both in England and America, the jurisdiction has become, in a practical sense, although not in a theoretical view, greatly narrowed, and is now of rare occurrence. It may not, however, be without use to refer to some of the more ordinary cases, in which that jurisdiction was originally exerted, and still may be exerted, in cases, where no statute of the States, interferes with the due exercise thereof. And it is constantly to be borne in mind, that the subsequent remarks, even when not so expressly qualified, are to be understood with this limitation, that there are no statutable provisions, which vary or control the general jurisdiction of Equity in matters of award.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Com. Dig. Chancery, 2 K. 1 to 6; Stat. 9 & 10 Will. III. ch. 15; Bac. Abr. Arbitration and Award, B. The statute of 9 & 10 Will. 3, ch. 15, in England, authorizing submissions to arbitrations to be made a rule of the Court of King's Bench or other Court of Record, has very materially changed the jurisdiction of the English Courts of Equity over awards made under submissions made in pursuance of the statute. In Nichols v. Roe, 3 Mylne & Keen, 431 the subject, how far an award made upon a submission pursuant to the statute, ousted the jurisdiction of Courts of Equity, was much discussed.—Lord Chancellor Brougham decided against the jurisdiction, and said; "It is necessary to observe, that this was a submission, not in a cause depending either here or at law, but by agreement, with the usual power for either party to make the submission a rule of the Court of King's Bench or other court of record. It was, therefore, altogether under and within the stat. of 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 15., and consequently the proceedings must be governed by that statute, and so must all the rights and equities of the parties. As there was the accustomed clause in the agreement, that no action or suit in equity should be brought by either party to impeach the award, I shall say a word upon that in order to dismiss the point. It has frequently been denied, that any such agreement can ever oust the jurisdiction of this Court; and in Nichols v. Chalie (14 Ves. 265,) Lord Eldon said the point had never been determined. I need not now determine it; the party, against whom the bill to set aside the award is filed, might, had he thought fit, have availed himself of it by plea; but it is quite unnecessary towards the decision of the present question, that any thing should be said upon the matter. When we examine the elaborate remarks of Lord Eldon in Nichols v. Chalie, and what he afterwards says in the subsequent case of Gwinett v. Bannister, (14 Ves. 530,) and compare those passages with Lord Loughborough's judgment in Lord Lonsdale v. Littledale, (2 Ves. jr. 451,) and look into the arguments at the bar in all the three cases, it is matter of surprise, that any doubt should ever have been entertained on the subject. For the statute is undoubtedly repealed in its most express provision, if the jurisdiction continues to reside in this Court, after the parties have resorted elsewhere under the act. There can be no more plain or distinct terms used than those of the latter part of the first section of the act. After directing process of contempt to issue for enforcing performance of the award, it proceeds thus: "which process shall not be stopped or delayed in its execution by any order, rule, command, or process of any other Court, either of law or equity, unless it shall be made appear on oath to such Court that the arbitrators or umpire misbehaved themselves, and that such award, arbitration, or umpirage was procured by corruption or other undue means." I may stop here to observe, that the Courts have long extended this exception to cases of mistake in law: Kent v. Elstob, (3 East, 13.) Now, this prohibition is plainly made to preclude all review of the award, either at law or in equity, excepting on those special grounds. But it is also to be intended as giving to that Court only, in which the submission is made a rule, the power of reviewing the award; for, if the literal meaning of the words were adopted, namely, that in the excepted cases either party might go to a Court of equity, and make it appear on oath, that there were grounds for impeaching the award,—first, this would prove too much, for it would enable the same party to go to some other Court of law; and who ever heard of the Court of Common Pleas setting aside an award made a rule of court in the King's Bench? or who ever made such an attempt? Indeed the second section expressly confines the

application to the Court, in which the submission was made a rule; for it says, that "any arbitration or umpirage procured by corruption or undue practices shall be judged and esteemed void, and of none effect, and accordingly be set aside by any Court of law or equity, so as complaint of such corruption or undue practice be made in the Court, where the rule is made for submission to such arbitration or umpirage, before the last day of the next term after such arbitration or umpirage made and published to the parties." Secondly, the words used in the exception to the prohibition of the first section, that the ground of impeachment must be made to appear on oath to such Court, are the words always used to describe proceedings by affidavit; and the Courts of law and equity are here, and they are throughout the statute, mentioned in the same manner, so that the proceeding is to be alike in all—not a submission made a rule of the court of law, and then a bill filed in equity to set it aside; but the submission to be made a rule either of a court of law or a court of equity, and application made to the same court by affidavit on the behalf of those seeking to impeach the award. It must further be observed, that the second section affixes a period of limitation—a time within which the application must be made, where there are grounds to bring the case within the exception. It shall be "before the last day of the next term after such arbitration or umpirage made and published to the parties." This is very material; for the provision would be rendered wholly nugatory by allowing the party to come here and file his bill, and move for his injunction, which I presume he may do within the usual period—that is at any time within twenty years. Such being my clear opinion on the construction of the statute, and its bearing upon this question, I have only to observe on the cases, that the older ones are not in similar circumstances to the present, though, as far as they go, they bear out the doctrine I contend for, and tend to exclude the jurisdiction. In this view reference may be had to Kamphire v. Young; (2 Atk. 155,) Chicot v. Lequesne, (2 Ves. sen. 315,) and Spettigue v. Carpenter (3 P. Wms. 361.) But the parallel cases are the more recent ones in the time of Lord Loughborough and Lord Eldon, which I have already mentioned; Lord Lonsdale v. Little-dale, Nichols v. Chalie, and Gwinett v. Bannister. The first of these cases was the one, in which the Court sustained its jurisdiction; and Lord Eldon, in Nichols v. Chalie, makes some strong observations upon Lord Loughborough's argument in its favor, and plainly doubts, if he does not quite deny, the authority of the case. But what prevents its application to the question now before the Court is, that Lord Lonsdale v. Little-dale did not arise at all under the statute of 9 & 10 W. 3. In that case a verdict had been taken at the trial of a cause for nominal justify their interference in regard to other matters, where there is no adequate remedy at law.<sup>1</sup> And if there be no statute to the contrary, an agreement by the party, on entering into an arbitration, not to bring any action or suit in Equity to impeach the award made under it, will be held not obligatory, if there be in fact fraud, or mistake, or accident, or oth-

damages, subject to a reference, and the award was made a rule of court. This is explicitly allowed by Lord Loughborough not to be a case within or under the statute. It is true, that his Lordship goes on to state his opinion, that, even if the case were one of a reference under the statute, he should still hold the equitable jurisdiction not to be excluded. But this is merely an extrajudicial dictum, from which, for the reasons above assigned, I take leave to dissent. Lord Eldon, in Nichols v. Chalie, nearly overruled it, and in Gwinett v. Bannister he did so altogether. These two cases, and the last especially, appear to close the question; and Lord Eldon, in commenting upon the statute, adopts the same construction, which I have put upon it. It was a case precisely the same with the present in every particular, save one—that here the bill was filed before the submission was made a rule of court, and, in that case, the bill was filed after the submission was made a rule of court. But I do not think, that this makes any material difference. In _____ v. Mills (17 Ves. 419,) a similar distinction was taken; but Lord Eldon disposed of the application on another ground, and said nothing of this. But surely the mere filing of a bill cannot be held to destroy the force of the statutory provision, more especially as the party filing the bill might at any moment have applied to the Court of King's Bench. He says, his adversary had not made it a rule of court, and so he could not move. There never was a greater mistake: he might himself have made it a rule, and then moved. If not, any one possessed of an award in this form could defeat his adversary's right of moving to set aside the award by not making the submission a rule of court, till the period had elapsed, within which the statute allows the motion to be made impeaching it. The constant practice is the other way." See also Nichols v. Chalie, 14 Ves. 264.

*§ 1452. It is well known, that when a suit [*676] is brought at the Common Law upon an award,*no extrinsic circumstances, or matter of fact dehors the award, can be pleaded, or given in evidence to defeat it. Thus, for example, fraud, partiality, misconduct, or mistake of the arbitrators, is not admissible to defeat it.<sup>2</sup> But Courts of Equity will in all such cases grant relief, and, upon due proofs, will set aside the award.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1453. In regard to a mistake of the arbitrators, it may be in a matter of fact, or in a matter of law. If upon the face of the award there is a plain mistake of law, or of fact, material to the decision, which misled the judgment of the arbitrators, there can be little or no reason to doubt, that Courts of Equity will grant relief.<sup>4</sup> But the difficulty is, whether the mistake of fact or of law is to be made out by extrinsic evidence; and whether a mistake of law upon a general submission, involving the decision both of law and fact, constitutes a valid objection. Upon these

Mather*, 2 Ves. jr. 15.—The Statute of 9 & 10 Will. III. ch. 15, has in England made great alterations in the exercise of this general jurisdiction; for it seems, that an award under that statute is not generally remediable in Equity, on account of fraud, or misconduct of the arbitrators; but only in the court, of which the submission is made a rule, and within the time therein prescribed. See Auriol v. Smith, 1 Turn. & Russ. 121, 126, 127, 134 to 136. Ante, § 1450, note 1.

points the decisions of Courts of Law and Courts of Equity are not reconcilable with each other ; and it is not easy to lay down any doctrine, which may not be met by some authority.<sup>1</sup> § 1454. Perhaps the following will be found to be the doctrines most reconcilable with the leading authorities. Arbitrators, being the chosen judges of the parties, are in general to be deemed judges of the law, as well as of the facts, applicable to the case upon them. If no reservation is made in the submission, the parties are presumed to agree, that every question, both as to law and fact, necessary for the decision, is to be included in the arbitration. Under a general submission, therefore, the arbitrators have rightfully a power to decide on the law and on the fact. And, under such a submission, they are not bound to award on mere dry principles of law; but they make their award according to principles of equity and good conscience.<sup>2</sup> Subject, therefore, to the qualifications hereafter mentioned, a general award cannot be impeached collaterally, or by evidence aliunde, for any mistake of law or of fact, unless there be some fraud or misbehavior in the arbitrators.<sup>3</sup> These qualifications will now be stated.

<sup>1</sup> In Chase v. Westmore, (13 East, R. 358,) Lord Ellenborough said ; " I fear it is impossible to lay down any general rule upon this subject, in what cases the Court will suffer an award to be opened. It must be subject to some degree of uncertainty, depending upon the circumstances of each case."

§ 1455. First; in regard to matters of law. If arbitrators refer any point of law to judicial inquiry, by spreading it on the face of their award, and they mistake the law in a palpable and material point, their award will be set aside.<sup>1</sup> If they admit the law, but decide contrary thereto upon principles of equity and good conscience, although such intent appear upon the face of the award, it will constitute no objection to it. If they mean to decide strictly according to law, and they mistake it, although the mistake is made out by *extrinsic evidence, that will be [679*] sufficient to set it aside.<sup>2</sup> But their decision, upon a

Symmonds*, (1 Ves. jr. 369,) Lord Thurlow said; “A party to an award cannot come to have it set aside upon the simple ground of erroneous judgment in the arbitrator; for to his judgment they refer their disputes; and that would be a ground for setting aside every award. In order to induce the Court to interfere, there must be something more; as corruption in the arbitrator, or gross mistake, either apparent upon the face of the award, or to be made out by evidence. But in case of mistake, it must be made out to the satisfaction of the arbitrator; and the party must convince him, that his judgment was influenced by that mistake, and that, if it had not happened, he should have made a different award. But this relates only to a general reference to arbitration of all matters in dispute between the parties. But upon a reference to an arbitrator to inquire into facts, &c., the reference is to him in the character of a Master; and the Court is to draw the conclusion; and if the arbitrator has taken upon himself to do so, the Court will see, that he has drawn a right conclusion. Upon a general reference to arbitration of all matters in dispute between the parties, the arbitrator has a greater latitude than the Court, in order to do complete justice between the parties; for instance, he may relieve against a right, which bears hard upon one party, but which, having been acquired legally, and without fraud, could not be resisted in a Court of Justice.” See *Nichols v. priate judicial tribunals of the state any persons, who, in the ordinary course of things, have a right to sue there.<sup>1</sup> Neither will they, for the same reason, compel arbitrators to make an award;<sup>2</sup> nor, when they have made an award, will they compel them to disclose the grounds of their judgment.<sup>3</sup> The latter doctrine stands upon the same ground of public policy, as the others; that is to say, in the first instance, not to compel a resort to these domestic tribunals, and, on the other hand, not to disturb their decisions, when made, except upon very cogent reasons.

§ 1460. It is curious to remark the coincidences between the Civil Law and our law, in regard to arbitrations and awards. Whether we are to attribute this to the origin of the latter in the established jurisprudence of the former; or to the same good sense, prevailing in different nations, and establishing the like equitable principles on the same subject, founded on public policy and private convenience, it is not necessary to discuss. a penalty, or with some other certain or implied loss;<sup>1</sup> and the award was deemed to partake of the character of a judicial proceeding.<sup>2</sup> Compromissum ad similitudinem judiciorum redigitur, et ad finiendas lites pertinet.<sup>3</sup> Ex compromisso placet exceptionem non nasci, sed pænæ petitionem.<sup>4</sup> The general conclusiveness of awards, when made within the legitimate powers of the arbitrators, was firmly established upon the same principles, which ought universally to prevail, to suppress litigation. Stari autem debet sententiæ arbitri, quam de re dixerit, sive æqua, sive iniqua sit; et sibi imputet, qui compromisit.<sup>5</sup>

§ 1462. The leading, though not the only exception to the conclusiveness of awards, when regularly *made, was the fraud or corruption of the par- [*683] ties, or of the arbitrators. Posse eum uti doli mali exceptione. Again: Etiam si appellari non potest, doli mali exceptionem in pænæ petitione obstaturam.<sup>6</sup> Another exception was, that the arbitrators had in their award exceeded their authority; for if they had, it was void.

<sup>2</sup> If there was a simple agreement to stand by the award, without any penalty or equivalent, it seems, that in the Civil Law there was originally no remedy to enforce it. Justinian, in some cases, but not adequately, (as it should seem,) provided for this defect. See Kyd on Awards, ch. 1, p. 8, 9, 2d Lond. edit. which cites Dig. Lib. 4, tit. 8, l. 27, § 6, 7, where it is said; Et, si quis presens arbitrum sententiam dicere prohibuit, pænâ committetur. (§ 6.) De officio arbitri tractantibus sciendum est, omnem tractatum ex ipso compromisso sumendum. Nec enim aliud illi licebit, quam quod ibi, ut efficere posset, cautum est. Non ergo quodlibet statuere arbiter poterit, nec in re quolibet; nisi de quâ re compromissum est, et quatenus compromissum est.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1463. Subject to exceptions of this nature, it has been justly remarked by an eminent Judge, that the Prætor at Rome would not interfere with the decisions of these domestic tribunals for the very reasons, which have been adopted in modern times; because they put an end to suits, and the arbitrators were judges of the parties' own choice.<sup>2</sup> Tametsi neminem Prætor cogit arbitrium recipere, (quoniam hæc res libera et soluta est, et extra necessitatem jurisdictionis posita); attamen, ubi semel quis in se receperit arbitrium, ad curam et sollicitudinem suam hanc rem pertinere Prætor putat; non tantum, quod studeret lites finire, verum quoniam non deberent decipi, qui eum, quasi virum bonum, disceptatorem inter se elegerunt.<sup>3</sup> Indeed, when once arbitrators had taken upon themselves that office, they were compellable by the Prætor to make an award. Quisquamne potest negare, æquissimum fore, Prætorem interponere se debuisse, ut officium, quod in se recepit, impleret. Et quidem arbitrum cujuscunque dignitatis officio, quod susceperit, perfungi.<sup>4</sup> In this respect there is a marked distinction between our law and the Civil Law.<sup>5</sup>

CHAPTER XL.

WRITS OF NE EXEAT REGNO, AND SUPPLICAVIT.

§ 1464. HAVING thus reviewed most of the branches of the exclusive jurisdiction of Courts of Equity, which arise from, or are dependent upon, the subject-matter of the controversy, we are next led to the consideration of those branches of exclusive jurisdiction, which arise from, or are dependent upon, the nature of the remedy to be administered. The peculiar remedies in Equity in cases of concurrent jurisdiction have already been fully discussed; and much, therefore, which would otherwise be appropriate for remark in this place, has been already anticipated. The peculiar remedies, connected with the exclusive jurisdiction in Equity, seem to be principally the process of Bill of Discovery, properly so called; the process of Bill for perpetuating evidence; and the processes, called the writ of NE EXEAT REGNO, and the writ of SUPPLICAVIT.<sup>1</sup> The two former are properly embraced in what is called the auxiliary or assistant jurisdiction of Courts of Equity ; and will, therefore, be reserved for examination thereafter. The two latter will be discussed in the present chapter.

§ 1465. The writ of Ne Exeat Regno, or, as it is sometimes termed, Ne Exeat Regnum, is a prerogative writ, which is issued, as its name imports, to prevent a person from leaving the realm.<sup>1</sup> It is said, that it is a process unknown to the ancient Common Law, which, in the freedom of its spirit, allowed every man to depart the realm at his pleasure.<sup>2</sup> Its origin is certainly obscure. But it may be traced up to a very early period; although some have thought, that its date is later than the reign of King John; since by the great charter, granted by him, the unlimited freedom to go from and return to the kingdom at their pleasure, was granted to all subjects. Liceat unicuique de cætero exire de Regno nostro et redire statuo et secure per terram et per aquam, salvâ fide nostrâ nisi tempore guerræ per aliquod breve tempus propter communem utilitatem regni.<sup>3</sup> The period between the reign of King John and that of Edward I. has been accordingly assigned by some writers, as the probable time of its introduction. A proceeding, somewhat similar in its nature and objects, though not in the precise form of the modern writ,

Comm. 137, 266.—Most of the materials, which are contained in this chapter, have been drawn from the concise but perspicuous treatise of Mr. Beames, entitled, “A Brief View of the Writ of Ne Exeat Regno, London, 1812.” I have not omitted, however, to compare the observations of the author with the original authorities.

is distinctly mentioned by Fleta and Britton;<sup>1</sup> and the statute of 5 Rich. II. (ch. 2, § 6, 7,) prohibited all persons whatsoever, from going abroad, excepting lords, and great men, and merchants, and soldiers.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1466. In Fitzherbert's Natura Brevium, two forms of writs are given against subjects leaving the realm without license, the one applicable to clergymen, and the other to laymen.<sup>3</sup> And it is there remarked by Fitzherbert, that, by the Common Law, every man may go out of the realm at his pleasure, without the king's leave; yet, because every man is bound to defend the king and his realm, therefore the king at his pleasure, by his writ, may command a man, that he go not beyond the seas, or out of the realm, without license; and if he do the contrary, he shall be punished for disobeying the king's command.<sup>4</sup> From this language it may be inferred, as his opinion, that the right of the king was a part of the Common Law, not at all incompatible with the ordinary right of the subject to leave the realm; but a restriction upon that right, which might be imposed by the crown for great political purposes. This is manifestly the view of the matter taken by Lord Coke, who deems it a part of the prerogative of the crown at the Common Law, and not dependent upon any statute pro bono publico regis et regni.<sup>5</sup>

§ 1467. Be the origin of this writ, however, as it may, it was originally applied only to great political objects and purposes of state, for the safety or benefit of the realm.<sup>1</sup> The time, when it was first applied to mere civil purposes, in aid of the administration of justice, is not exactly known, and seems involved in the like obscurity as its primitive existence. It seems, however, to have been so applied, as early as the reign of Queen Elizabeth.<sup>2</sup> In the reign of King James I. it seems to have been so firmly established, as a remedial civil process, grantable in Chancery, that it was made the subject of one of Lord Bacon's Ordinances. It is there declared, that "Writs of Ne Exeat Regnum are properly to be granted according to the suggestion of the writ, in respect of attempts prejudicial to the king and state; in which case the Lord Chancellor will grant them upon prayer of any of the principal secretaries, without cause showing, or upon such information as his Lordship shall think of weight. But, otherwise, also, they may be according to the practice of long time used, in case of [*689] *interlopers in trade, great *bankrupts, in whose estates many subjects are interested, or other cases,*

<sup>2</sup> Tothill, in his Transactions, (p. 136,) mentions three cases, one in the 32d of Elizabeth, and two in the 19th of James I. See also Beames, Ord. of Chanc. p. 40, note (148); Beames on Ne Exeat, p. 16. Lord Chancellor Talbot, in Ex parte Brunner, (3 P. Will. 312,) said; "In all my experience I never knew this writ of Ne Exeat Regno granted or taken out, without a bill in Equity first filed. It is true, it was originally a state writ; but for some time (though not very long) it has been made use of in aid of the subjects, for the helping them to justice. But still, as custom has allowed this latter use to be made of it, it ought to go no farther than can be warranted by usage, which always has been to have a bill first filed." A copy of the modern writ will be found in Beames on Ne Exeat, p. 19, 20, and Hinde's Practice, p. 613.

§ 1468. The ground, then, upon which it is applied to civil cases, being, as is here stated, custom or usage, it has been, in practice, uniformly confined to cases within the usage; and, therefore, it is perhaps impossible to expound its true use or limitations upon principle.<sup>2</sup> It has been strongly said, that it is applied to cases of private right with great caution and jealousy.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1469. The Writ of Ne Exeat Regno is also in use in America, where it is treated, not as a prerogative writ, but as a writ of right in the cases, in which it is properly grantable. But generally, the same limitations, which are imposed, as to the remedy in England, exist in our present practice. In short, the writ and its attributes are almost entirely derived from the English authorities and practice.<sup>4</sup>

§ 1470. In general, it may be stated, that the writ of Ne Exeat Regno will not be granted, unless in cases of equitable debts and claims ; for, in regard *to [690] civil rights, it is treated as in the nature of equitable bail.<sup>5</sup> If, therefore, the debt be such, as that it is de-

<sup>4</sup> By the Act of Congress, of 2d March, 1793, ch. 22, § 5, it is provided, that " Writs of Ne Exeat may be granted by any Judge of the Supreme Court of the United States in cases, where they may be granted by the Supreme, or a Circuit Court. But no writ of Ne Exeat shall be granted, unless a suit in Equity be commenced, and satisfactory proof shall be made to the Court or Judge granting the same, that the defendant designs quickly to depart from the United States."

mandable in a suit at law, the writ will be refused; for, in such a case, the remedy at law is open to the party.<sup>1</sup> If bail may be required, it can be insisted on in the action at law; if not required at law, that furnishes no ground for the interference of a Court of Equity, to do what in effect, as to legal demands, the law inhibits.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1471. It has been said in the preceding remarks, that, in general, the writ of Ne Exeat Regno lies only upon equitable debts and claims. There are to this general statement two recognised exceptions, and two only. The one is the case of alimony decreed to a wife, which will be enforced against her husband, by a writ of Ne Exeat Regno, if he is about to quit the [*691] realm;<sup>3</sup> the other is the case of an **account*, on which a balance is admitted by the defendant, but a larger claim is insisted on by the creditor.<sup>4</sup>

§ 1472. In regard to alimony, it has been said, that it arose from compassion, and because the Ecclesiastical Courts could not take bail.<sup>1</sup> Whether this be the real origin of the jurisdiction in Equity, may admit of some doubt. The truer ground, perhaps, for equitable interference would seem to be, that although alimony is a fixed sum, and not strictly an equitable debt; yet the Ecclesiastical Courts are unable to furnish a complete remedy to enforce the due payment thereof; and therefore Courts of Equity ought to interfere to prevent the decree from being defeated by fraud.<sup>2</sup> It does not seem, however, that in modern times, Courts of Equity have assumed or acted upon the jurisdiction to this extent.<sup>3</sup> In cases of alimony, Courts of Equity will not interfere, unless alimony has been already decreed; and then only to the extent of what is due.<sup>4</sup> But if there is an appeal from the de-

<sup>1</sup> Beames on Ne Exeat, 30; Anon. 2 Atk. 210; Vandergueht v. De Blaquiere, 8 Sim. R. 315. The Vice Chancellor (Sir L. Shadwell,) in this case, said; "The cases, that have been cited in the course of the argument, do not furnish any authority to show, that this Court has ever exercised any jurisdiction with respect to alimony, except in granting the writ of Ne Exeat Regno. The interference of the Court in granting that writ has arisen from the peculiar circumstances, that the Ecclesiastical Court cannot compel the husband to find bail. And if the husband makes it appear, that he does not intend to leave the kingdom, the Court will not grant the writ, although he may not intend to pay what is due from him." See also Stones v. Cooke, 8 Sim. R. 321, note (q); Ante, § 1425, note (2.)

In New York, where the jurisdiction, as to divorce and alimony, is vested in the Court of Chancery, the Chancellor will, pendente lite, grant a writ of Ne Exeat Republica against the husband. *Denton v. cree, pronouncing alimony, and a fortiori, if no alimony has been decreed, and the case is a lis pendens, Courts of Equity will abstain from granting the writ.<sup>1</sup>

[*692] *§ 1473. In regard to a bill for an account, where there is an admitted balance due by the defendant to the plaintiff, but a larger sum is claimed by the latter, there is not any real deviation from the appropriate jurisdiction of Courts of Equity; for matters of account are properly cognizable therein. The writ of Ne Exeat Regno may, therefore, well be supported, as a proper process in aid of the concurrent jurisdiction of Courts of Equity;<sup>2</sup> and, accordingly it is now put upon this intelligible and satisfactory ground.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1474. As to the nature of the equitable demand, for which a Ne Exeat Regno will be issued; it must be certain in its nature, and actually payable, and not contingent.<sup>4</sup> It should also be for some debt or pecuniary demand. It will not lie, therefore, in a case, where the demand is of a general unliquidated nature, or is in the nature of damages.<sup>5</sup> The equitable debt need not, however, be directly created between the parties. It will be sufficient, if it be fixed and certain. Thus, the cestui que trust or assignee of a bond may have a writ of Ne Exeat Regno against the obligor.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1475. We may conclude, what is thus briefly said upon this subject, by stating, that the writ will not be granted on a bill for an account in favor of a plaintiff, who is a foreigner out of the realm, because he cannot be compelled to appear and account. And, on the other hand, it may be granted against a foreigner transiently within the country, although the subject-matter originated abroad, at least to the extent of requiring security from him to perform the decree made on the bill filed.<sup>2</sup>

It seems a matter still subject to some little doubt, whether the writ is grantable against a foreigner, who happens to be within the country; though the objection may not prevail, where he is a subject domiciled in a foreign country, or in a colony. See Beames on Ne Exeat, p. 44 to 48; Grant v. Grant, 3 Russ. R. 598. The Case of *Flack v. This seems to have been the main ground of the decision. "It is," (said Lord Eldon, in that case,) "but a civil process to hold a person to bail for an equitable debt, under the same circumstances, as those, in which, if it were a legal debt, he might be held to bail at law." See also Howden v. Rogers, 1 Ves. & Beam. 129. In Woodward v. Schattzell, (3 John. Ch. R. 12,) Mr. Chancellor Kent affirmed the jurisdiction in relation to foreigners and citizens of other states, transiently within the territorial jurisdiction of the State of New York; stating, however, that the writ would be discharged upon giving security to abide the decree. See also the same point ruled in Mitchill v. Bunch, 2 Paige, R. 606, 617 to 620.

§ 1476. The other process, to which we have alluded, as belonging to the exclusive jurisdiction of chancery, is the Writ of Supplicavit. It is in the nature of the process at the Common Law to find sureties of the peace upon articles filed by a party for that purpose.<sup>1</sup> It is, however, rarely now used, as the remedy at the Common Law is in general adequate; though (as we have seen<sup>2</sup>) it is sometimes resorted to by a wife against her husband; and in that case it is said, that the Court of Chancery, as an incident, may grant maintenance or alimony to the wife, if she is compelled to live apart from her husband,<sup>3</sup>

"This writ, as now issuing, is founded on the statute 21 Jac. 1. c. 8, which must have passed about five years after the making of the present Ordinances, if they really were published on the 29th Jan. 1618, as asserted in the Judicial Authority of the Master of the Rolls, p. 100. § 1477. Lord Chief Baron Gilbert has given a full description of the nature and objects of this writ; and it will be sufficient for all the purposes of our present inquiry to state them in his words. "It is granted upon complaint and oath made of the party, where any suitor of the court is abused, and stands in danger of his life, or is threatened with death by another suitor. The contemnor is taken into custody, and must give bail to the sheriff; and if he moves to discharge the writ of supplicavit, the court hears both parties on affidavit, and continues or discharges it as the case appears before them. If they order the contemnor to give security for his good behavior, (for this writ is in the nature of a Lord Chief Justice's warrant to apprehend a man for a breach of the peace), he must do it by recognisance, to be taken before one of the masters of the Court, who must be in the commission of the peace. He is to find sureties to be of his good behavior. If he beats or assaults the party a second time, the Court will order the recognisance to be put in suit, and permit the party to recover the penalty; for the recognisance is never to be sued, but by leave of the Court. But this proceeding very rarely or ever happens. So if any suitor of the Court is arrested either in the face of the Court, or out of the Court, as he is going and coming to attend and follow his cause, (for so far the Court does and will protect every man,) upon complaint made thereof,

But it is difficult, upon the authorities, to maintain this doubt. See Beames's Orders in Chancery, p. 39, note (144.)

sitting the Court, they will send out the tipstaff, and bring in the bailiffs and prisoner into Court instantly, sitting the Court, and they will order them forthwith to discharge him, or lay them by the heels; and the plaintiff in the action, upon complaint and oath made thereof, will certainly stand committed. He shall lie in prison, till he petitions, submits, and begs pardon, and pays the costs to the other party.”<sup>1</sup>

§ 1478. We may close this head of exclusive processes by adverting to certain proceedings, which, though not unknown to the Courts of Common Law, seem, as a matter of right and authority, independent of the consent of parties, to belong exclusively to Courts of Equity. We refer to the practice in doubtful matters of fact of directing an issue to be tried at law to ascertain the same, and in matters of law of sending the point for the opinion of a Court of Law; and then acting upon the final result in either case in the Court of Equity, directing the issue or opinion. We have already seen the application of the former proceeding to the issue of devisavit vel non in bills for the establishment of wills.<sup>2</sup>

It is usual to discharge persons committed for want of surety on articles of peace, and on a supplicavit, after a year, if nothing new happens, and the threat or danger does not continue. *Baynum v. (says he,) "is either interlocutory or final. It very seldom happens, that the first decree can be final, or conclude the cause; for, if any matter of fact is strongly controverted, this Court is so sensible of the deficiency of trial by written depositions, that it will not bind the parties thereby, but usually directs the matter to be tried by jury; especially such important facts as the validity of a will, or whether A. is the heir at law to B., or the existence of a modus decimandi, or real and immemorial composition for tithes. But, as no jury can be summoned to attend this Court, the fact is usually directed to be tried at the bar of the Court of King's Bench, or at the Assizes, upon a feigned issue. For, (in order to bring it there, and have the point in dispute, and that only, put in issue,) an action is feigned to be brought, wherein the pretended plaintiff declares, that he laid a wager of £5 with the defendant, that A. was heir at law to B.; and then avers that he is so; and brings his action for the £5. The defendant allows the wager, but avers, that A. is not the heir to B.; and thereupon that issue is joined, which is directed out of Chancery to be tried: and thus the verdict of the jurors at law determines the fact in the Court of Equity. These feigned issues seem borrowed from the sponsio judicialis of the Romans; and are also frequently used in the Courts of Law, by consent of the parties, to determine some disputed right without the formality of pleading, and thereby to save much time and expense in the decision of a cause. So likewise, if a question of mere law arises in the course of a cause, as whether by the words of a will an estate for life or in tail is created, or whether a future interest, devised by a testator, shall operate as a remainder or an executory devise, it is the practice of this Court to refer it to the opinion of the Judges of the Court of King's Bench or Common Pleas, upon a case stated for that purpose; wherein all the material facts are admitted, and the point of law is submitted to their decision; who thereupon hear it solemnly argued by counsel on both sides, and certify their opinion to the Chancellor. And upon such certificates the decree is usually founded." <sup>4</sup>

CHAPTER XLI.

BILLS OF DISCOVERY; AND BILLS TO PRESERVE AND PERPETUATE EVIDENCE.

§ 1480. WE shall now proceed to the third and last head of Equity Jurisdiction, proposed to be examined in these Commentaries, that is to say, the auxiliary or assistant Jurisdiction, which, indeed, is exclusive in its own nature, but, being applied in aid of the remedial justice of other Courts, may well admit of a distinct consideration.

§ 1481. In a general sense, Courts of Equity may be said to be assistant to other Courts in a variety of cases, in which the administration of justice could not otherwise be usefully or successfully attained. Thus, for example, they become assistant to Courts of Law, by removing legal impediments to the fair decision of a question depending thereon; by preventing a trustee, lessee, or mortgagee from setting up an outstanding term, to defeat an ejectment brought to try a title to land, or, by suppressing a deed or devise fraudulently obtained and set up for the same purpose.<sup>1</sup> They are in like manner assistant to other Courts by rendering their judgments effectual; as by setting aside fraudulent conveyances, which interfere with them; by providing for the safety of property pending litigation; and by suppressing multiplicity of suits and oppressive actions.<sup>1</sup> But these topics have already been sufficiently, although incidentally, considered in the preceding pages.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1482. What we propose particularly to consider in the subsequent discussions, is the remedial process of Bills of Discovery, Bills to perpetuate Testimony, and Bills to take Testimony de bene esse, pending a suit; all of which are most important instruments to be employed, as adminicular to the remedial justice of other courts.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1483. In the first place, as to Bills of Discovery. It has been already remarked, that every bill in Equity may properly be deemed a bill of discovery, since it seeks a disclosure from the defendant, on his oath, of the truth of the circumstances, constituting the plaintiff's case, as propounded in his bill.<sup>4</sup> But that, which is emphatically called in Equity proceedings a Bill of Discovery, is a bill, which asks no relief; but, which simply seeks the discovery of facts, resting in the knowledge of the defendant, or the discovery of deeds, or writings, or other things, in the possession or power of the defendant, in order to maintain the right or title of the party asking it, in some suit or proceeding in another Court.<sup>5</sup>

The sole object of such a bill then being a particular discovery, when that discovery is obtained by the answer, there can be no farther proceedings thereon.<sup>1</sup> To maintain a bill of discovery it is not necessary, that the party should otherwise be without any proof of his case; for he may maintain such a bill, either because he has no proof, or because he wants it in aid of other proof.<sup>2</sup> But, in general, it seems necessary, in order to maintain a bill of discovery, that an action should be already commenced in another Court, to which it should be auxiliary. There are

Law, as an action." On the subject of discovery I beg leave to refer the reader to the very able work of Mr. Wigram on Points in Discovery, and of Mr. Hare on Discovery. In these two works the subject seems completely exhausted. See also Story on Eq. Plead. § 34, &c.

<sup>1</sup> Mitford, Eq. Pl. by Jeremy, 16; Lady Shaftsbury v. Arrowsmith, 4 Ves. 71.—Mr. Fonblanque has made some remarks upon the nature and dangers of this branch of Equity jurisdiction, which are certainly entitled to serious consideration. "There is," says he, "no branch of equitable jurisdiction of more extensive application than that, which enforces discovery; and, where kept within its due limits, there is none more conducive to the claims of justice. To compel a defendant to discover that, which may enable the plaintiff to substantiate a just, or to repel an unjust, demand, is merely assisting a right, or preventing a wrong. But as the most valuable institutions are not exempt from abuse, this power, which ought to be the instrument of justice, may be rendered the instrument of oppression. A plaintiff, by his bill, may, without the least foundation, impute to the defendant the foulest frauds, or seek a discovery of transactions, in which he has no real concern; and when the defendant has put in his answer, denying the frauds, or disclosing transactions, (the disclosure of which may materially prejudice his interest,) the plaintiff may dismiss his bill with costs, satisfied with the mischief he may have occasioned by the publicity of his charge, or with the advantage, which he may have obtained by an extorted disclosure. The rule, which requires the signature of counsel to every bill, affords every security against such an abuse, which forensic experience and integrity can supply; but it cannot wholly prevent it. The Court alone can counteract it; and in vindication of its process must feel the strongest inclination to interpose its authority." 2 Fonbl. Eq. B. 6, ch. 3, § 1, note (a).

exceptions to this rule, as where the object of discovery is to ascertain, who is the proper party, against whom the suit should be brought. But these are of rare occurrence.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1484. One of the defects in the administration of justice in the Courts of Common Law arises from their want of power to compel a complete discovery of the material facts in controversy by the oaths of the parties in the suit.<sup>2</sup> And hence, (as we have seen,) one of the most important and extensive sources of the jurisdiction of Courts of Equity is their power to compel the parties, upon proper proceedings, to make every such discovery.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1486. The Roman Law provided similar means, by the oath of the parties, and by a bill of discovery, to obtain due proofs of the material facts in controversy between the parties. There seem originally to have been three modes adopted for this purpose. One was upon a due act of summons to require the party, without oath, to make a statement, or confession generally, *relative to a matter in controversy. [*703] Another was to require him to answer before the proper Judge to certain interrogatories, propounded in the form of distinct articles, which the Judge might in his discretion order him to answer upon oath. The third was to require the adverse party to answer upon oath, as to the fact in controversy; the party, applying for the answer, consenting to take the answer so given upon oath as truth. On this account it was called the decisive or decisory oath; and it admitted of no countervailing and contradictory evidence. In the two former cases other proofs were admissable.<sup>1</sup> Ubiqunque judicem æquitas moverit, æque oportere fieri interrogationem, dubium non est.<sup>2</sup> Voluit Prætor adstringere eum, qui convenitur, ex suâ in judicio responsione, ut vel confitendo, vel mentiendo, sese oneret.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1487. In the Roman law bills of discovery were called Actiones ad exhibendum, when they related to the production of things, or deeds, or documents, in which another person had an interest.<sup>4</sup> When they required the answer of the party on oath to interrogatories, they were called Actiones interrogatoriæ.<sup>5</sup> It seems, that originally interrogatory actions might be propounded at any time before suit brought by any party having an interest. But we are informed in the Digest, that in the time of Justinian they had become obsolete, and interrogatories were propounded

The Roman law also required, that the party, seeking a discovery of facts, should have a legal capacity to sustain himself in Court ; and that the discovery should respect some right of action.<sup>2</sup> It does not seem important further to trace out the analogies of the Roman Law on this subject ; and with these brief hints, showing the probable origin of the like proceeding in our Courts of Equity, we may return to the subject of bills of discovery.

§ 1489. The principal grounds, upon which a bill of discovery may be resisted, have been enumerated by a learned writer as follows. (1.) That the subject is not cognizable in any Municipal Court of Justice. (2.) That the Court will not lend its aid to obtain a discovery for the particular Court, for which it is wanted. (3.) That the Plaintiff is not entitled to the discovery by reason of some personal disability. (4.) That the plaintiff has no title to the character, in which he sues. (5.) That the value of the suit is beneath the dignity of the Court. (6.) That the plaintiff has no interest in the subject-matter, or title to the discovery required, or that an action will not lie, for which it is wanted. (7.) That the defendant is not answerable to the plaintiff; but that some other person has a right to call for the discovery. (8.) That the policy of the law exempts the defendant from the discovery. (9.) That the defendant is not bound to discover his own title. (10.) That the discovery is not material in the suit. (11.) That the defendant is a mere witness. (12.) That the discovery called for would criminate the defendant.<sup>1</sup> Some of these grounds of objection are equally applicable to bills asking for relief; and others are so obvious upon the mere statement of them, as to require no further exposition. It may, however, be proper to unfold the principles with more particularity, by which a few of them are governed.

§ 1490. In the first place, it must clearly appear upon the face of the bill, that the plaintiff has a title to the discovery, which he seeks; or, in other words, that he has interest in the subject-matter, *to which [*706] the discovery is attached, capable and proper to be vindicated in some judicial tribunal.<sup>1</sup> A mere stranger cannot maintain a bill for the discovery of the title of another person. Hence, an heir at law cannot, during the life of his ancestor, maintain a bill for a discovery of facts or deeds material to the ancestor's estate; for he has no present title whatsoever, but only the possibility of a future title.<sup>2</sup> Nor has a party a right to any discovery, except of facts and deeds, and writings necessary to his own title, or under which he claims; for he is not at liberty to pry into the title of the adverse party.<sup>3</sup>

Pl. by Jeremy, p. 197; Att. Gen. v. Duplessis, Parker, R. 144, 155 to 162. The ground of the decision seemed to be, that the disability of alienage is neither a penalty nor a forfeiture. Id. 163, 164. And this decision was affirmed in the House of Lords. 5 Bro. Parl. R. 91; S. C. 2 Ves. 286. Lord Hardwicke, however, held a different doctrine in the case of Duplessis, and insisted, that she was not bound to discover, whether she was an alien. Finch v. Finch, 2 Ves. 494. Mr. Wigram, in his recent Treatise on the Law of discovery, (which did not reach my hands until after the text had been prepared for the press,) lays down the following, as fundamental propositions on this subject. (1.) It is the right, as a general rule, of a plaintiff in Equity to examine the defendant upon oath, as to all matters of fact, which, being well pleaded in the bill, are material to the proof of the plaintiff's case, and which the defendant does not, by his form of pleading, admit. (2.) Courts of Equity, as a general rule, oblige a defendant to pledge his oath to the truth of his defence. With this (if a) qualification, the right

§ 1491. Even an heir at law has not a right to the inspection of deeds in the possession of a devisee, unless he is an heir in tail; in which latter case he is entitled to see the deeds creating the estate tail, but no further.<sup>1</sup> On the other hand, a devisee is entitled against the heir at law to a discovery of deeds relating to the estate devised.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1492. The reason of this distinction may not at first view be apparent. But the ground, upon which it is asserted, is this. The title of an heir at law is a plain legal title. All the family deeds together would not make his title better or worse. If he cannot set aside the will, he has nothing to do with the deeds. He must make out his title at law, unless there are incumbrances standing in his way, which, indeed, a Court of Equity would remove, in order to *enable him to assert his legal title. But in the [*708] case of an heir in tail a will is no answer to him; though a will established is an answer to an heir at law. An heir in tail has, beyond the general right, of a plaintiff in Equity to the benefit of the defendant's oath is limited to a discovery of such material facts, as relate to the plaintiff's case; and it does not extend to the discovery of the manner, in which, or of the evidence, by means of which, the defendant's case is to be established, or to any discovery of the defendant's evidence. Wigram, Points in Law of Discovery, p. 21, 22; Story on Eq. Plead. § 572 to § 574.

<sup>1</sup> Cooper, Eq. Pl. ch. 1, § 4, p. 58, 59; Id. ch. 3, § 3, p. 197, 198; Shaftesbury v. Arrowsmith, 4 Ves. 71.—In Shaftesbury v. Arrowsmith, (4 Ves. 71,) Lord Rosslyn explained the ground of the doctrine in favor of the heir in tail; that it was removing an impediment which prevented the trial of a legal right. He afterwards added; "Permitting a general sweeping survey into all the deeds of the family would be attended with very great danger and mischief; and where the person claims as heir of the body, it has been very properly stated, that it may show a title in another person, if the entail is not well barred."

such an interest in the deed, creating the entail, that he has a right to the production of it. But an heir at law has no interest in the title deeds of an estate, unless it has descended to him.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1493. On the other hand, a devisee, claiming an estate under a will, cannot, without a discovery of the title deeds, maintain any suit at law. The heir at law might not only defeat his suit, by withholding the means to trace out his legal title, but might also defend himself at law, by setting up prior outstanding incumbrances. And thus he might prevent the devisee from having the power of trying the validity of the will at law.<sup>2</sup> Whether this distinction is well founded, may perhaps be thought to admit of some question. That the devisee should in such a case be entitled to a discovery seems plain enough. That the heir at law is not equally well entitled to a discovery of the deeds, under which the estate is claimed, in order to ascertain the extent, to which he is disinherited, may not appear quite so plain.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>3</sup> It is obvious, that the distinction is not satisfactory to Mr. Fonblanque. In 2 Fonbl. Eq. B. 6, ch. 3, § 2, note (g), he says; "And an heir at law, though not entitled to come into Equity upon an ejectment bill for possession; yet he is entitled to come into Equity to remove terms out of the way, which would otherwise prevent his recovering possession at law; and also has a right to another relief, before he has established his title at law, viz. that the deed and will may be produced, and lodged in proper hands for his inspection; for any heir at law has a right to discover, by what means and under what deed he is disinherited." For this he relies upon Harrison v. Southcote, (1 Atk. 539, 540,) where Lord Hardwicke asserts the proposition in the same language; and Floyer v. Sydenham, (Select Cas. in Ch. 2,) which is directly in point. If it were clear, that, if the will were established, the title of the heir would be

§ 1493. a. In the next place the party must not only show, that he has an interest in the subject-matter of the bill, to which the required discovery relates ; but he must also state a case, which will, if he is the plaintiff at law, constitute a good ground of action, or if he is the defendant at law, show a good ground of defence, in aid of which the discovery is sought. If it is clear, that the action or the defence is unmaintainable at law, Courts of Equity will not entertain a bill for any discovery in support of it ; since the discovery could not be material, but must be useless.<sup>1</sup> This, however, is so delicate a function, that Courts of Equity will not undertake to refuse a discovery upon such grounds unless the case is entirely free from doubt. If the point be fairly open to doubt or controversy, Courts of Equity will grant the discovery, and leave it to courts of law to adjudicate upon the legal rights of the party seeking the discovery.<sup>2</sup> gone, the objection to a bill of discovery by him might not be unreasonable ; for then he would have no title to the estate, and of course no title to a discovery of the deeds of it. But it may depend upon the very terms of the instrument, as a settlement, or the boundaries stated in different deeds, where the purchase has been of different parcels at different times, whether he is disinherited or not. In such a case an inspection may be very important to him. See Cooper, Eq. Pl. ch. 3, § 3, p. 198 ; Aston v. Lord Exeter, 5 Ves. 288 ; Hylton v. Morgan, 6 Ves. 294.

civil nature. Thus, for example, they will not compel a discovery in aid of a criminal prosecution ; or of a penal action ; or of a suit in its nature partaking of such a character ; or in a case involving moral turpitude ; for it is against the genius of the Common Law to compel a party to accuse himself ; and it is against the general principles of Equity to aid in the enforcement of penalties or forfeitures.<sup>1</sup>

ver. Ibid.; Hare on Discovery, 137, 138, 139. There is another exception in regard to forfeitures, deserving notice in this place. It is, that a bill of discovery will lie for a disclosure of money lost at play, and of the securities given for it. But this stands, at least in modern times, upon the provisions of the Statute of 9 Ann. ch. 14, giving a bill of discovery. Rawden v. Shadwell, Ambler, R. 268, and Mr. Blunt's note (3); Newman v. Franco, 2 Anst. R. 519; Andrews v. Berry, 3 Anst. 634, 635. There are, however, said to be older cases, which support it upon general principles. 14 Viner, Abr. Gaming, D. pl. 3, citing Tothill 84; but in my edition (1649) I have not been able to find the case in the page cited. See ante, § 302; 1 Fonbl. Eq. B. 1, ch. 4, § 6, note (c). In Green v. Weaver, 1 Sim. R. 404, it was held, that a London Broker was compellable to make a discovery in aid of an action brought against him by his employer for misconduct, although it subjected him to the penalty of his bond, given for his faithful discharge of his official duties. Another exception (if indeed, properly considered, it is an exception,) is, where the bill seeks a discovery of a fraud, or of fraudulent acts, of the defendant; if they do not subject him to criminal proceedings, he is bound to make the discovery. Janson v. Solarte, 2 Younge & Coll. 132, 136; Hare on Discovery, 140, 142; Green v. Weaver, 1 Sim. R. 404, 427, 432.—See also Story on Eq. Plead. § 589, and note (3); Id. § 595, § 596.

R. 547; Story on Equity Plead. § 555. Mr. Chancellor Kent, in Gelston v. Hoyt, 1 John. Ch. R. 547, 548, used this expressive language on this point. "If a bill seeks discovery in aid of the jurisdiction of a Court of Law, it ought to appear, that such aid is required. If a Court of Law can compel the discovery, a Court of Equity will not interfere. And facts, which depend upon the testimony of witnesses, can be procured or proved at law, because Courts of Law can compel the attendance of witnesses. It is not denied in this case, but that every fact, material to the defence at law, can be proved by ordinary means at law, without resorting to the aid of this Court. The plaintiffs did not come here for any such aid; and it ought not to be afforded, unless they call bills in aid of a controversy, pending before arbitrators ; for they are not the regular tribunals authorized to administer justice ; and being judges of the parties' own choice, they must submit to the inconveniences incidental thereto.<sup>1</sup> But it constitutes no objection to a bill of discovery, that it is to assist proceedings in a Court, which sits in a foreign country, if in amity with that, where the bill is filed ; for it is but a just exercise of that comity, which the mutual necessities and mutual convenience of all nations prescribe in their intercourse with each other.<sup>2</sup> Neither does it constitute any objection to a bill of discovery, that the suit, which it is to aid, has not yet been commenced ; for it may be indispensable to enable the party rightly to frame his action and declaration.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1496. In the next place, no discovery will be compelled, where it is against the policy of the law from the particular relation of the parties. Thus, for it, and show it to be necessary. I should presume from the bill itself, that every material fact relative to the ownership of the vessel could be commanded without resorting to this Court ; and such trials at law are not to be delayed, and discoveries required, when the necessity of such delay and discovery is not made to appear. This would be perverting and abusing the powers of this Court. Unless, therefore, the bill states affirmatively, that the discovery is really wanted for the defence at law ; and also shows, that the discovery might be material to that defence, it does not appear to be reasonable and just, that the suit at law should be delayed. The bill is, therefore, defective and insufficient in this point of view."

for instance, if a bill of discovery is filed against a married woman, to compel her to disclose facts, which may charge her husband, it will be dismissed; for a married woman is not permitted to be a witness *for, or against, her husband in controversies [*712] with third persons.<sup>1</sup> Upon the same ground, a person, standing in the relation of professional confidence to another, as his counsel or attorney, will not be compelled to disclose the secrets of his client.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1497. In the next place no discovery will be compelled, except of facts material to the case, stated by the plaintiff;<sup>3</sup> for, otherwise, he might file a bill, and insist upon a knowledge of facts wholly impertinent to his case, and thus compel disclosures, in which he had no interest, to gratify his malice, or his curiosity, or his spirit of oppression. In such a case his bill would most aptly be denominated a mere fishing bill.

Pl. ch. 5*, p. 300,) adopts similar language. In the cases referred to by Lord Redesdale, I do not find arbitrators mentioned; nor do I find, that arbitrators are exempted from disclosing facts, which have been stated before them; but only from stating the grounds of their award. See Gregory v. Howard, 3 Esp. R. 112; Habersham v. Troby, 3 Esp. R. 38; Slack v. Buchannan, Peake, R. 5; Brown v. Brown, 1 Vern. 158, 159; Story on Eq. Plead. § 231, § 599 to § 603.

But cases of immateriality may be put far short of such unworthy objects. Thus, if a mortgagor ~~should~~ seek by a bill of discovery, to ascertain, whether the mortgagee was a trustee or not, that would, ordinarily, be deemed an improper inquiry, since, unless special circumstances were shown, it could not be material to the plaintiff, whether any trust were reposed in the mortgagee or not.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1498. In general, arbitrators are not compellable by a bill of discovery to disclose the grounds, on which they made their award ; for, (it has been said,) it would be a great inconvenience to compel them to set forth the particular reasons of their decision ; and it would be a discouragement of suitable persons to take upon themselves such an office.<sup>2</sup> Perhaps a stronger ground against it is, that the arbitrators are not obliged by law to give any reasons for their award ; and if they act with good faith, being the judges chosen by the parties, their decision ought, ordinarily, to be conclusive.<sup>3</sup> But if they are charged with corruption, fraud, or partiality, they must answer to that.<sup>4</sup>

§ 1499. In the next place, it is, ordinarily, a good objection to a bill of discovery, that it seeks the discovery from a defendant, who is a mere witness, and has no interest in the suit ; for, as he may be examined in the suit, as a witness, there is no ground to make him a party to a bill of discovery, since his answer would not be evidence against any other person in the suit.<sup>1</sup>

*§ 1500. There are some exceptions to this [*714] rule as to witnesses; but they are all founded upon special circumstances; and in general they do not seem applicable to mere bills of discovery, but only to bills for discovery and relief. Thus, if arbitrators are made parties to a bill to set aside an award, it is a good ground of objection on their part, that they are mere witnesses.<sup>2</sup> But if the bill charges them with corruption, fraud, or other gross misconduct, then they are compellable to make the discovery and to answer the bill. For they shall never be permitted to deprive the injured party of their evidence by their own fraud or gross misconduct; and if the case is maintained, they will be held liable for costs.<sup>3</sup> So an Attorney or Solicitor, who assists his client in obtaining a fraudulent deed, although a mere witness, may be made a party, and compelled to make a discovery.<sup>4</sup> corporations. The ground, upon which this exception has been maintained, is, that a corporation, being an artificial person, cannot be compelled to make any discovery on oath, but only under its common seal; and, [*715] therefore, it cannot make *any satisfactory answer, nor be liable for perjury for any false answer. By making the secretary, or other officer of the corporation, a party, an answer under oath may be obtained from those persons, as to the facts within their knowledge. Besides; their answer may enable the plaintiff to arrive at the means of obtaining better information.<sup>1</sup> Some dissatisfaction has been expressed with this mode of reasoning. The first of the grounds is extremely questionable; and, if it were now to be considered for the first time, it would hardly be deemed correct. The latter ground is very singular; for it assigns as the ground of making a person, who is a witness, a defendant, that it is in order to enable the plaintiff to deal better and with more success with the other parties upon the record; a ground wholly repugnant to the general principles of Courts of Equity on the subject of parties.<sup>2</sup> The doctrine, however, is now so firmly established, that it is (practically speaking) impossible to overturn it.<sup>3</sup> without notice of the plaintiff's claim. We have already had occasion to take notice of this protection, which Courts of Equity throw round innocent purchasers; and that it applies, not only to bills of *relief, but to bills of discovery.<sup>1</sup> To entitle him-[*716] self to this protection, however, the purchaser must not only be bonâ fide, and without notice, and for a valuable consideration, but he must have paid the purchase money. So, he must have purchased the legal title and not be a mere purchaser without a semblance of title; for even the purchaser of an Equity is bound to take notice of, and is bound by a prior Equity;<sup>2</sup> and between Equities, the established rule is, that he who has the prior Equity in point of time is entitled to the like priority in point of right.<sup>3</sup> But it is not indispensable to protect himself against a bill of discovery, that he should be the purchaser of the legal title. For the rule in Equity is, that, if a defendant has in conscience a right, equal to that claimed by the person filing a bill against him, although he is not clothed with a perfect legal title, this circumstance, in his situation as a defendant, renders it improper for a Court of Equity to compel him to make any discovery, which may hazard his title.<sup>4</sup> in such a predicament; and will, on the other hand, allow him to take every advantage, which the law gives him; for there is nothing, which can attach itself upon his conscience, in such a case in favor of an adverse claim.<sup>1</sup> Where Courts of Equity are called upon to administer justice upon grounds of Equity against a legal title, they allow a superior strength to the legal title, when the rights of the parties are in conscience equal. And where a legal title may be enforced in a Court of ordinary jurisdiction to the prejudice of an equitable title, Courts of Equity will refuse assistance to [*717] the legal title against the equitable title, when the rights are in conscience equal.<sup>2</sup> On the other hand, if a plaintiff comes into Equity, seeking relief upon a legal title against a bonâ fide purchaser of an equitable title, if he is entitled to relief in such a case, (which is perhaps doubtful,) still he must obtain it upon the strength of his own case, and his own evidence; and he is not entitled to extract from the conscience of the innocent defendant any proofs to support it.<sup>3</sup>

ject of all bills of this sort is to preserve and perpetuate testimony, when it is in danger of being lost, before the matter, to which it relates, can be made the subject of judicial investigation.<sup>1</sup> Bills of this sort are obviously indispensable for the purposes of public justice, as it may be utterly impossible for a party to bring his rights presently to a judicial decision; and, unless in the intermediate time he may perpetuate the proofs of those rights, they may be lost without any default on his side. The Civil Law adopted similar means of preserving testimony, which was in danger of being otherwise lost.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1506. This sort of bill, (as has been remarked by Mr. Justice Blackstone,) “is most frequent, when lands are devised by will away from the heir at law; and the devisee, in order to perpetuate the testimony of the witnesses to such will, exhibits a bill in Chancery against the heir, and sets forth the will verbatim therein, suggesting, that the heir is inclined to dispute its validity; and then, the defendant having answered, they proceed to issue, as in other cases, and examine the witnesses to the will; after which the cause is at [*719] an end, without proceeding to *any decree, no relief being prayed by the bill: but the heir is entitled to his costs, even though he contests the will. exercise to perpetuate testimony, has been thought to be open to great objections, although it seems indispensable for the purposes of public justice. First ; it leads to a trial on written depositions, which is deemed (at least in Courts of Common Law) to be much less favorable to the cause of truth, than the vivâ voce examination of witnesses. But what is still more important, inasmuch as those depositions can never be used until after the death of the witnesses, and are not, indeed, published until after their death, it follows, that, whatever may have been the perjury committed in those depositions, it must necessarily go unpunished. The testimony, therefore, has this infirmity, that it is not given under the sanction of those penalties, which the general policy of the law imposes upon the crime of perjury. It is for these reasons, that Courts of Equity do not generally entertain bills to perpetuate testimony, for the purpose of being used upon a future occasion, unless where it is absolutely necessary to prevent a failure of justice.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1508. If, therefore, it be possible, that the matter in controversy can be made the subject of immediate judicial investigation by the party, who seeks to perpetuate testimony, Courts of Equity *will [*720] not entertain any bill for the purpose. For the party, under such circumstances, has it fully in his power to terminate the controversy by commencing the proper action ; and, therefore, there is no reasonable ground to give the advantage of deferring his proceedings to a future time, and to substitute thereby written depositions for viva voce evidence. But, on the other hand, if the party, who files the bill, can by no means bring the matter in controversy into immediate judicial investigation, which may happen, when his title is in remainder, or when he himself is in actual possession of the property, or when he is in the present possession of the rights, which he seeks to perpetuate by proofs; in every such case, Courts of Equity will entertain a suit to secure such proofs. For, otherwise, the only evidence, which could support his title, possession, or rights, might be lost by the death of his witnesses; and the adverse party might purposely delay any suit to vindicate his claims with a view to that very event.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Angell v. Angell, 1 Sim. & Stu. 83; Duke of Dorset v. Girdler, Prec. Ch. 531; Dew v. Clarke, 1 Sim. & Stu. 114; Cooper, Eq. Pl. ch. 1, § 3, p. 53 to 55; Com. Dig. Chancery, R.—These grounds are fully expounded in the case of Angell v. Angell, (1 Sim. & Stu. 83,) as, indeed, they had been before expounded in the case of the Duke of Dorset v. Girdler, Prec. Ch. 531. From the opinion of the Court in the latter case the following extract is made, as it exhibits the pith of the whole doctrine. “If one is out of possession, having only right to fishery, or common rent-charge, he, who brings such bill, ought never to be allowed to do so, but a demurrer to it will be good, because he may and ought first to enter his action, and establish his title at law; otherwise publication not being to pass till after the death of the witness, (as in those cases it never does without special order of the Court,) they may be guilty of the grossest perjury, and yet go unpunished. Besides that, the party having a remedy at law, the other side ought not to be deprived of the opportunity of confronting the witnesses, and examining them publicly, which has always been found the most effectual method for discovering of the truth. But if a man is in actual possession, and is only threatened with disturbances by another, who pretends a right, he has no other way in the world to perpetuate the testimony of his witnesses, but by such a bill as this is; for not being actually interrupted or disturbed, he can bring no action at law. And in such a case, if their demurrer should be allowed, there is an end of all bills to perpetuate the testimony of witnesses to wills, and such like, wherein the parties pray no relief, nor ought to do, but only a commission for the examination of their witnesses. And yet,

§ 1509. As to the right to maintain a bill to perpetuate testimony, there is no distinction, whether it respects a title or claim to real estate, or to personal estate, or to mere personal demands ; or whether it is to be used as matter of proof in support of the plaintiff's action, or as matter of defence to repel it.<sup>1</sup> But there is this difference between a bill of discovery and a bill to perpetuate testimony, that the latter may be brought in many cases, where the former cannot be. Thus, in cases, which involve a penalty or forfeiture of a public nature, a bill of discovery will not lie at all. And, in cases, which involve only a penalty or forfeiture of a private nature, it will not lie, unless the party entitled to the benefit of the penalty or forfeiture waives it.<sup>2</sup> But no such objection exists *in regard to a bill to perpetuate [*722] testimony ; for the latter will lie, not only in cases of a private penalty or forfeiture, without waiving it, where it may be waived, as in cases of waste, or of the forfeiture of a lease, but also in cases of public penalties, such as for the forgery of a deed, or for a fraudulent loss at sea.<sup>3</sup>

even in these cases, if the plaintiff should afterwards be evicted or disturbed, these depositions cannot be made use of, so long as the witnesses are living, and may be had to be examined before a jury." It is said by Mr. Cooper, (Cooper, Eq. Pl. ch. 1, § 3, p. 52,) that Lord Nottingham, in Mason v. Goodburne, (Rep. Temp. Finch, 391,) decided the first and leading case on this subject. The marginal note in that case is far more full than the report of the judgment. Bills to perpetuate the testimony of the subscribing witnesses to a will are often brought, where the devisee is in possession, and the heir may afterwards choose to contest its due execution. See Harris v. Cotterill, 3 Meriv. 678.

§ 1510. There is also, perhaps, another difference between the case of a bill of discovery, and that of a bill to perpetuate testimony, in regard to a bonâ fide purchaser for a valuable consideration without notice. We have seen, that the former bill is not maintainable against him.<sup>1</sup> But, as the latter asks for no discovery, and only seeks to perpetuate testimony, which might be used at the time, if the circumstances called for it, and an action were brought, it does not seem open to the same objection. And there is this reason for the distinction, that otherwise the plaintiff might lose his legal rights by the mere defect of testimony, which, if he could maintain a suit, he would clearly be entitled to.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1511. It follows from the very nature and objects of such bills, that the plaintiff, who is desirous of perpetuating evidence, must, by his bill, show, that he has some interest in the subject-matter, and that it may be endangered, if the testimony in support of it is lost.<sup>3</sup> Courts of Equity will not, how- [*723] ever, *perpetuate testimony in support of the right of a plaintiff, which may be immediately barred by the defendant.<sup>4</sup> But if the interest be a present vested one, not liable to such an objection, it is perfectly immaterial, how minute that interest may be; or how distant the possibility of its coming into actual possession and enjoyment may be. A present interest, the enjoyment of which may depend upon the most remote and improbable contingency, is, nevertheless, a present estate, although with reference to chances it may be worth little or nothing.<sup>1</sup> On the other hand, although the contingency may be ever so proximate and valuable, yet, if the party has not, by virtue of that, an estate, (as in the case of the heir of a lunatic,) Courts of Equity will not interfere to perpetuate evidence touching it.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1512. If the bill is sustained, and the testimony is taken, the suit terminates with the examination; and, of course, is not brought to a hearing.<sup>3</sup> But the decretal order of the Court, granting the commission, directs, that the depositions, when taken, shall remain to perpetuate the memory thereof, and to be used, in case of the death of the witnesses, or their inability to travel, as there shall be occasion.<sup>4</sup>

* § 1513. There is another species of bills, [*724] having a close analogy to that to perpetuate testimony, and often confounded with it; but which, in reality, stands upon distinct considerations. We allude to bills to take testimony de bene esse, and bills to take the testimony of persons resident abroad, to be used in suits actually pending in the country, where the bills are filed.<sup>5</sup> There is this broad distinction between bills of this sort, and bills to perpetuate testimony, that the latter are, and can be, brought by persons only, who are in possession under their title, and who cannot sue at law, and thereby have an opportunity to examine their witnesses in such suit. But bills to take testimony de bene esse may be brought, not only by persons in possession, but by persons, who are out of possession, in aid of the trial at law.<sup>1</sup> There is also another distinction between them, which is, that bills de bene esse can be brought only, when an action is then depending, and not before.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup> Angell v. Angell, 1 Sim. & Stu. 83.—The case of Phillips v. Carew, (1 P. Will. 117,) seems to decide, that a bill of this sort might be brought, though no action was pending, and merely in contemplation of an action, where the plaintiff's witnesses were aged or infirm. But, in Angell v. Angell, 1 Sim. & Stu. 83, 93, the Vice Chancellor (Sir John Leach) held an opposite doctrine, that which is stated in the text. On that occasion he said, referring to the case in 1 P. Will. 117; "The principle of that case, supposing it to be correctly reported, is not, however very satisfactory. Written depositions, on account of the infirmity, which I have before referred to, are never to be received, where, with reasonable diligence, vivâ voce testimony may be had; and the circumstance, that the witnesses are aged and infirm, should be rather a reason for the action being immediately brought, to give the better chance of their living till the trial, than a reason for permitting the action to be indefinitely delayed at the pleasure of the plaintiff. Whenever such a case occurs again, the principle of Phillips v. Carew, 1 P. Will. 117, will come to be reconsidered." In the same case he added; "If a bill for a commission to examine witnesses abroad to be used on a trial at law, were entertained before an action actually commenced, then, inasmuch as it is not pretended, that there is any time limited, within which the future action is to be brought, this consequence might follow; that the plaintiff in the bill, having obtained this written testimony, not given under the sanction of the penalties of perjury, might delay his action until after the deaths of those witnesses for the adverse party resident in this country, and subject to vivâ voce examination, whose evidence might be in opposition to this written testimony; and thus the justice of the case might be defeated. On the other hand, no reason of justice, or even of convenience

§ 1514. By the Common Law, it is well known, that the Courts of Law have no authority to issue commissions to take the testimony of witnesses de bene esse in any case.<sup>1</sup> But Courts of Equity have been constantly in the habit of exercising such a jurisdiction in aid of trials at law, where the subject-matter admits of present judicial investigation, and a suit is actually *pending in some Court.<sup>2</sup> They will, for ex- [*726] ample, upon a proper bill, grant a commission to examine witnesses, who are abroad, and who are to the party plaintiff in such a bill, requires, that he should be permitted to file it before he has actually commenced his action. The necessary effect of such a bill is, to suspend the trial until the commission is returned, and to secure to him the benefit of his foreign evidence; and all further delay of trial is injustice to the other party. I am therefore of opinion, both upon authority and upon principle, that a bill for a commission to examine witnesses abroad in aid of a trial at law, where a present action may be brought, is demurrable to, if it do not aver, that an action is pending."

<sup>1</sup> Mitf. Eq. Pl. by Jeremy, 149; 3 Black. Comm. 383; Macaulay v. Shackell, 1 Bligh, R. (N. S.) 119, 130.—This defect has long since been cured in America; and, indeed, the authority, given to our Courts of Common Law, to take the depositions of witnesses, both at home and abroad, has been carried to an extent far beyond what has been exercised by Courts of Equity. A recent statute in England has conferred authority upon the Courts of Common Law, to take the depositions of witnesses abroad. See Stat. 13 Geo. 3, ch. 63, § 40, 44, and Stat. 1 Will. 4, ch. 22; 1 Starkie Evid. 275, 276, 2d Lond. edit. 1833.

<sup>2</sup> In Macaulay v. Shackell, 1 Bligh, R. (N. S.) 119, Lord Eldon said; "The original jurisdiction of granting commissions was under the great seal, because no commission at one time could be granted in Common Law Courts." Lord Eldon, in the same case, (p. 130, 131,) cited an extract from the reasons of appeal, in the case of Davie v. Verelst in the House of Lords, which contains a full exposition of the grounds of the jurisdiction. It is as follows. "The order appealed from proceeds upon a fundamental maxim in the administration of justice, namely, that both sides are to be heard, and the parties are to be heard by their evidence and witnesses to matters of fact. The end of the order in question, which was for a commission, is to give the respondents an opportunity of bringing over their evidence from a foreign country, to maintain the material witnesses to the merits of the cause, whether the adverse party will consent thereto, or not.<sup>1</sup> They will also entertain a bill to preserve the testimony of aged and infirm witnesses, resident at truth of the justification, which they have pleaded. The Courts of Law pay an attention to Audi alteram partem, as far as the powers of a Court of law can go, and therefore will put off trials, upon an affidavit made by the defendant, showing, that he has material witnesses abroad, who are expected home in a reasonable time, it not being the fault, but the misfortune, of the party, that his witnesses are not within the reach of the process of the Court, whereby their attendance on the trial may be compelled. This reasoning goes only to the putting off the trial, where there are witnesses abroad, who are expected to be here in a reasonable time, and not when the witnesses were not expected to be here, and their testimony was to be sought by sending a commission to them, instead of waiting for their coming home here to be examined. But where witnesses reside abroad, and cannot, or will not personally attend in England, the power of the Courts of Law is at an end, as they have no means of examining witnesses abroad. But the Court of Chancery, having an authority to issue commissions under the great seal for various purposes, and amongst others, for examining witnesses in causes in that Court, the suitors defendants at law have availed themselves of the power of the Court of Chancery to come in and supply the failure of justice, by preferring their bills there, containing a state of their case, and of the proceedings at law, with the defendants' misfortune, that their witnesses being resident abroad, and not compellable to appear at the trial, they cannot have the benefit of their testimony; and therefore praying, that the Court will relieve them against this accident, and grant them a commission for the examination of their witnesses, to the end, that their depositions may be read at law; and as it would be nugatory to try the causes without evidence, praying also, that the plaintiff at law may be restrained by injunction from proceeding in the mean time, till the return of the commission. Both the Court of Chancery and of Exchequer, as Courts of Equity, have always entertained these bills, as belonging to one of their great sources of jurisdiction, the relief against such accidents as are beyond the power of Courts of Law to aid."

home, and of witnesses about to depart from the country, to be used in a trial at law, in a suit then pending, if they are likely to die before the time of trial may arrive.<sup>1</sup> They will even entertain such a bill to preserve the testimony of a witness, who is neither aged nor infirm, if he is a single witness to a material fact in the cause.<sup>2</sup> This latter case stands upon the same *general ground, as the other; [*728] that is to say, the extreme danger to the party of an irreparable loss of all the evidence, on which he may rely in support of his right in the trial at law; for that, which depends upon a single life, must be practically treated as being very uncertain in its duration.<sup>3</sup>

When the commission is granted to take the examination of a single witness, the affidavit to obtain it must state, that the particular witness knows the fact, and is the only person, that knows it. The belief of the person making the affidavit is not sufficient. Rowe v. —, 13 Ves. 261. In all other cases an affidavit is required, as, for example, that the witness is seventy years of age, or is in a dangerous state. Bellamy v. Jones, 8 Ves. 31; Barton, Suit in Eq. 53, 54, note.

of property; but they are grantable in cases of suits for civil torts, although such torts may also be indictable. Thus, for example, a commission will be granted to take the testimony of witnesses abroad in order to establish a justification in a civil suit for a libel, although the justification involves a criminal charge against the plaintiff, and the libel may be the subject of an indictment.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1516. Some confusion exists in the authorities, as to the publication of the testimony in the three distinct classes of cases before mentioned; first, on examinations of witnesses de bene esse, pending a cause; secondly, on examinations of witnesses in a bill, merely to prove a will per testes, as it is called, that is, by the subscribing witnesses; and thirdly, on examinations of [*729] witnesses on common bills to *perpetuate testimony; as, for example, to perpetuate the testimony respecting a will, or a deed, or a modus, or the legitimacy of a marriage.<sup>2</sup> The true rule, as to the publication of the testimony in these several classes of cases, is as follows. As to the first, the examinations are not published, but by the consent of the parties, or on a strong case made to the Court.<sup>3</sup> As to the second,

If the witness is alive at the time of the trial, and capable of attending, and within the jurisdiction, his deposition cannot be used. they stand on a distinct ground, because none but subscribing witnesses are examined; and they are examined to the question of the sanity of the testator merely, as incidental; and there publication is of course.<sup>1</sup> As to the third, publication is not ordinarily allowed, during the lifetime of the witnesses, because of the dangers incident thereto, there being no limits as to the points, to which the witnesses are examined.<sup>2</sup> But the publication is a matter resting in the sound discretion of the Court upon the special circumstances of the case; and it will be allowed or refused accordingly.<sup>3</sup> In this last class of cases (of bills to perpetuate testimony), when the examinations are taken, the *case is considered to be at an end; or, at least, [*730] as suspended, until the anticipated action is brought; and then, at a suitable period, an order for the publication thereof may be obtained from the Court upon a proper case made, such as the death or absence of the witnesses, or their inability to attend the trial.<sup>4</sup>

Arnold*, (19 Ves. 672,) Lord Eldon used the following language; "The question, upon the motion to publish these depositions, the witnesses being still living, is, what is the practice, where witnesses have been examined, not de bene esse, but upon a different principle, to have their testimony recorded in perpetuam rei memoriam; the course being in a suit for that purpose, that after the examination of the witnesses there is an end of the cause. It is laid down in the text-books, that, ordinarily, the depositions cannot be published during the lives of the witnesses; and that doctrine appears to be as old as the time of Lord Egerton, who regretted, that such was the practice, upon the inconvenience, that, if the facts, stated by the witness, are false, that cannot be established against him in any species of prosecution; as that fact can only be established by the production of the deposition, which cannot be produced, until the witness is dead. That word, ordinarily, which is found in most of the books of practice on this subject, struck me, as large enough to admit the exercise of a sound discretion by the Court; and it seems to be capable of another construction; as there are cases, where the deposition may be published, although the witness is not dead; if, for instance, he is too infirm to travel. The general rule, I am persuaded, is not to permit the deposition to be read during the life of the witness; and I think it will appear, that such orders, as are to be found, proceed upon affidavit, that the witness is dead; and some, after the declaration, that the deposition of the particular witness shall be read, add, with a considerable degree of caution, that the depositions of the other witnesses shall not be read; affording both affirmative and negative evidence of the practice." He afterwards added; "After considerable research, there is not a single instance, except of a person sick, incapable of travelling, or prevented by accident; all the orders, but in those excepted cases, stating, that the witness is dead. And, though struck with the circumstance, that he swears with considerable security, as the depositions are not to be opened until after his death, I am afraid to make a precedent contrary to all the authorities; and farther, looking at the first will, and what the trustees under it are about, I doubt, whether a bill to perpetuate testimony is in this particular case exactly the bill, that should have been filed."

CHAPTER XLII.

PECULIAR DEFENCES AND PROOFS IN EQUITY.

§ 1517. WE have thus reviewed the principal topics of Equity Jurisprudence, as connected with the three great divisions of its jurisdiction, namely, its Concurrent Jurisdiction, its Exclusive Jurisdiction, and its Auxiliary Jurisdiction. Imperfect as this exposition of it necessarily has been from the vast mass and variety of the materials, as well as from the intrinsic difficulty of ascertaining, in many cases, the exact limits and boundaries of its operations, enough has been shown to enable the attentive reader to ascertain the general outlines and proportions of the system, and its beautiful adaptations to the general concerns and actual business of human life. He cannot fail to have observed, to what an immeasurable extent, beyond the prescribed bounds of the Common Law, its remedial justice reaches; with what wonderful flexibility it applies itself to all the changing circumstances, which require the relief to be modified and adjusted with a nice regard to the rights and interests, and even to the compassionate claims of the adverse parties; and by what a curious, though artificial, machinery, it sifts the consciences of the parties, and detects the latent springs of actions, and draws, as it were, from the secret recesses of the heart, its hidden purposes, and its yet questionable designs. He cannot fail to have observed, with what deep solicitude and promptitude it interferes in cases of fraud, accident and mistake; how eager it is to succor the distressed; to assist the infirm; to protect the weak; to guard the credulous against the arts of the cunning and profligate; and to save the rash and inexperienced from the natural effects of their own acts of folly, and their own misguided and violated confidence. He cannot fail to have approved its bold, and sometimes even stern, denunciations against vice and craftiness; its uncompromising support of the purest morality; and its unflinching resistance to oppression and meditated wrong. Above all, he cannot fail to have been struck with that admirable invention of judicial polity, which interposes preventive guards against impending dangers and mischiefs; and which does not, like the slow and reluctant arm of the Common Law, wait, until the destructive blow has been dealt, and then content itself with an attempt to remedy in damages, what may be, in a just sense, incapable of compensation. If, here and there, he shall have seen an artificial doctrine reared up, which it is now difficult to vindicate upon sound reasoning, or public convenience, let him consider, that it occupies but a narrow space in the general system; that it is the necessary result of the different modes of thought in different ages; and that, if it has the touch of human infirmity in its structure, its very failings lean to virtue's side, and serve, in some degree, to fence in, as well as to embarrass, the interests of those, who stand in constant need of the guardianship of the law. Let him also remember the profound remark of Lord Bacon, that there are in nature certain fountains of justice, whence all civil laws are derived, but as streams; yet, that, like as waters do take tinctures and tastes from the very soils, through which they run, so do civil laws vary according to the regions or governments, where they are planted, though they proceed from the same fountains.<sup>1</sup> If he should perceive, that even Equity Jurisprudence has its blemishes and imperfections in its inability to reach some cases of gross injustice, or of violated right and duty, and he should be tempted to utter the lamentation of an eminent Jurist of antiquity, that we do not seek to cherish the solid and expressive form of true law and genuine justice; but that we content ourselves with the mere shadow and semblance of it; nay, that even these we do not follow, as it is desirable we should do, since they are drawn from the best examples of nature and truth;<sup>2</sup> let him also ponder on the consoling truth, so beautifully expressed by the same master mind, that the wisdom of laws, in stooping to the concerns of human life, must necessarily stop far short of the wisdom of philosophy.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1518. We shall close the present work by adverting to a few peculiarities of Equity Jurisdiction, for which a more appropriate place has not been found; or which, if noticed before, seem fit to be brought again into view, before they are finally dismissed.

§ 1519. There are some defences, which are peculiar to Courts of Equity; and are unknown to Courts of Common Law. So also, there are some peculiarities in relation to evidence, unknown to the practice of the latter Courts, which yet lie at the very foundation of the practice of the former. Upon each of these subjects, we shall say a few words by way of illustration, leaving the full exposition of them to works more appropriate for that purpose.

§ 1520. In the first place, as to defences peculiar to Courts of Equity; for of those, which are equally available at law, we do not here propose to speak.<sup>1</sup> The statutes of limitations, when they are addressed to Courts of Equity, as well as to Courts of Law, as they seem to be in all cases of concurrent jurisdiction at law and in Equity (as, for example, in matters of account,) to which they directly apply, seem equally obligatory in each Court. It has been very justly observed, that, in such cases, Courts of Equity do not act so much in analogy to the statutes, as in obedience to them.<sup>2</sup> In a great variety of other cases, Courts of

<sup>2</sup> Hovenden v. Lord Annesley, 2 Sch. & Lefr. 607, 629, 630.—In Hovenden v. Lord Annesley, 2 Sch. & Lefr. 630, Lord Redesdale said; “But it is said, that Courts of Equity are not within the statutes of limitations. This is true in one respect. They are not within the words of the statutes, because the words apply to particular legal remedies; but they are within the spirit and meaning of the statutes, and have been always so considered. I think it is a mistake in point of language, to say, that Courts of Equity act merely by analogy to the statutes; they act in obedience to them. The statute of limitations, applying itself to certain legal remedies, for recovering the possession of lands, for recovering of debts, &c., Equity, which in all cases follows the law, acts on legal titles, and legal demands, according to matters of conscience, which arise, and which do not admit of the ordinary legal remedies. Nevertheless, in thus administering justice, according to the means afforded by a Court of

Equity act upon the analogy of the limitations at Law. Thus, for example, if a legal title would in ejectment be barred by twenty years adverse possession, Courts of Equity will act upon the like limitation, and apply it to all cases of relief sought upon equitable titles or claims touching real estate.<sup>1</sup> Thus, for example, if the mortgagee has been in possession of the mortgaged estate for twenty years without acknowledging the existence of the mortgage, it will be presumed, that the mortgage is foreclosed, and that he holds by an absolute title. If the mortgagor has been in possession of the mortgaged estate for the like space of time without

Equity, it follows the law. The true jurisdiction of Courts of Equity, in such cases, is to carry into execution the principles of law, where the modes of remedy afforded by Courts of Law are not adequate to the purposes of justice, to supply a defect in the remedies afforded by Courts of Law. The law has appointed certain simple modes of proceeding, which are adapted to a great variety of cases. But there are cases, under peculiar circumstances and qualifications, to which, though the law gives the right, those modes of proceeding do not apply. I do not mean to say, that, in the exercise of this jurisdiction, Courts of Equity may not, in some instances, have gone too far; though they have been generally more strict in modern times. So, Courts of Law, fancying, that they had the means of administering full relief, have sometimes proceeded in cases, which were formerly left to Courts of Equity; and, at one period, this also seems to have been carried too far. I think, therefore, Courts of Equity are bound to yield obedience to the statute of limitations upon all legal titles and legal demands, and cannot act contrary to the spirit of its provisions. I think the statute must be taken virtually to include Courts of Equity; for when the legislature, by statute, limited the proceedings at law in certain cases, and provided no express limitations for proceedings in Equity, it must be taken to have contemplated, that equity followed the law; and, therefore, it must be taken to have virtually enacted in the same cases a limitation for Courts of Equity also." Ante, § 1028, a, § 1028, b.

acknowledging the mortgage debt, it will be presumed to be paid. If a judgment creditor has lain by for twenty years without any effort to enforce his judgment, and it has not been acknowledged by the debtor within that time, it will be presumed to be satisfied.<sup>1</sup> And in all these cases Courts of Equity will act upon these facts as a positive bar to relief in Equity.<sup>2</sup> But [*736] a defence, *peculiar to Courts of Equity, is that founded upon the mere lapse of time, and the staleness of the claim, in cases, where no statute of limitations directly governs the case. In such cases, Courts of Equity act sometimes by analogy to the law; and sometimes act upon their own inherent doctrine of discouraging, for the peace of society, antiquated demands, by refusing to interfere, where there has been gross laches in prosecuting rights, or long and unreasonable acquiescence in the assertion of adverse rights.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1521. Courts of Equity not only act in obedience and in analogy to the statutes of limitations

Sherwood v. Sutton, 5 Mason R. 143, 145, 146. In Smith v. Clay, 3 Bro. Ch. R. 640, Lord Camden said ; "A Court of Equity, which is never active in relief against conscience, or public convenience, has always refused its aid to stale demands, where the party has slept upon his right, and acquiesced for a great length of time. Nothing can call forth this Court into activity, but conscience, good faith, and reasonable diligence. Where these are wanting, the Court is passive, and does nothing. Laches and neglect are always discountenanced ; and therefore from the beginning of this jurisdiction, there was always a limitation to suits in this Court. Therefore, in Fitter v. Lord Macclesfield, Lord North said rightly, that though there was no limitation to a bill of review, yet, after twenty-two years, he would not reverse a decree, but upon very apparent error. Expediit reipublicæ, ut sit finis litium, is a maxim, that has prevailed in this Court in all times without the help of an act of parliament. But, as the Court has no legislative authority. It could not properly define the time of bar, by a positive rule, to an hour, a minute, or a year. It was governed by circumstances. But, as often as parliament had limited the time of actions and remedies to a certain period in legal proceedings, the Court of Chancery adopted that rule, and applied it to similar cases in Equity. For when the legislature had fixed the time at law, it would have been preposterous for Equity, (which, by its own proper authority, always maintained a limitation,) to countenance laches beyond the period, that law had been confined to by parliament. And therefore, in all cases where the legal right has been barred by parliament, the equitable right to the same thing has been concluded by the same bar." In Bond v. Hopkins, (1 Sch. & Lefr. 429,) Lord Redesdale said ; "Nothing is better established in Courts of Equity, (and it was established long before this act,) than that where a title exists at law and in conscience, and the effectual assertion of it at law is unconscientiously obstructed, relief should be given in Equity ; and that where a title exists in conscience, though there be none at law, relief should also, though in a different mode, be given in Equity. Both these cases are considered by Courts of Equity, as affected by the statute of limitations ; that is, if the equitable title be not sued upon within the time, within which a legal title of the same nature ought to be sued upon, to prevent the bar created by the statute, the Court acting by analogy to the statute, will not relieve. If the party be guilty of such laches in prosecuting his equitable title, as would bar him ; if his title were solely at law, he shall be barred in Equity. But that is all the operation this statute has, or ought to have, on proceedings in Equity." In Cholmondeley v. Clinton, 2 Jac. & Walk. 141, Sir Thomas Plumer said ; "In the Courts of Equity of this country the principle has been always, as I shall hereafter show in proper cases ; but they also interfere in many cases to prevent the bar of the statutes, where it would be inequitable or unjust. Thus, for example, if a party has perpetrated a fraud, which has not been discovered until the statutable bar may apply to it at law, Courts of Equity will interpose, and remove the [*739] bar out of the way of the other injured *party.<sup>1</sup> A fortiori, they will not allow such a bar to prevail by mere analogy to suits in Equity, where it would be in furtherance of a manifest injustice.<sup>2</sup> Thus, if a strongly enforced. They have refused relief to stale demands, even in cases where no statutable limitation existed ; and whenever any statute has fixed the period of limitations, by which the claim, if it had been made in a Court of Law, would have been barred, the claim has been by analogy confined to the same period in a Court of Equity." Again he added, (p. 151,) after citing the cases ; "These cases show, first, that Courts of Equity have at all times, upon general principles of their own, even where there was no analogous statutable bar, refused relief to stale demands, where the party has slept upon his right, and acquiesced for a great length of time ; and, secondly, that whenever a bar has been fixed by statute to the legal remedy in a Court of Law, the remedy in a Court of Equity has, in the analogous cases, been confined to the same period. I should not have thought it necessary to cite authorities upon points so long and so clearly established, had not the present decision tended, as it appears to me it does, to call them in question ; and had it not been of such transcendant importance, that no doubt should exist upon questions so materially affecting the titles to real property."—The judgment of Mr. Baron Alderson in Grenfell v. Girdlestone, 2 Younge, and Coll. 662, 678, 679, 680, 681, is very full and able to the same point of the effect in Equity of lapse of time. So is that of Lord Wynford in White v. Parnter, 1 Knapp, R. 226, 228, and the judgment of the Supreme Court of U. States, in Boone v. Chiles, 10 Peters, R. 177 ; Ante, § 1028, a ; § 1028, b ; § 1520.

the following extract is made. " But it is said, that the bar arising from lapse of time ought not to be removed. Why not, as well as a satisfied term, if used against conscience? But it is contended, that the bar arising from the statute of limitations ought not to be removed, because the enactment of the statute is positive. The answer is, the positive enactment has nothing to do with the case. The question is not, whether it shall operate in a case provided for by the positive enactment of the statute; but whether it shall operate in a case not provided for by the words of the act, and to which the act can apply, only so far as it governs decisions in Courts of Equity; that is, whether it shall prevent a Court of Equity doing justice according to good conscience, where the equitable title is not barred by lapse of time, although the legal title is so barred. It is admitted, that in a case where this Court may decree possession, (supposing the suit instituted in time,) it will not be prevented by the statute of limitations from doing justice by a direct decree, although before the time of making that decree, the lapse of time would bar proceedings on a legal title. But it is said, it cannot do justice indirectly; that is, it cannot do justice, where it thinks fit to put the question of title in a train of discussion at law, by directing a trial at law to ascertain facts, and the law arising on those facts; which is only one mean of doing justice used by Courts of Equity, and a mean used, because the Court will not break in on legal proceedings more than is necessary for the purposes of justice, but will suffer the course of the law to proceed as far, as with justice it can. It is admitted, even in that indirect mode of administering relief, if a term for years or any other temporary bar be an impediment to justice, it may be put out of the way. There is no difficulty made upon that part of the case. It is admitted, also, that where the Court is to act directly and by itself, it is not bound by the words of the statute, or by the spirit of it, provided the suit in equity is instituted in due time. It should seem to follow, (though there were no case,) that when it acts indirectly, it should be no more barred by the statute, than when it acts directly. Barnesley v. Powell, 1 Ves. 285, is an authority to show, that if the Court could not, from the nature of the case, do justice indirectly, by putting the title in a course of trial in another Court, it ought to act upon the matter itself, and give direct relief. But it is clear, that Courts of Equity have, under the correction of the Court of dernier resort, and with the acquiescence of the legislature, decided on the principles, on which the Master of the Rolls' decree is founded. M'Kenzie v. Powis, 4 Bro. Ch. 328; Pincke v. Thornycroft, 1 Bro. Ch. 289; S. C. Dom. Proc. 1784 reported in Cruise on Fines, 366; and many other cases. In the first of these cases the appeal was on the single ground, that the Court of Equity had not set the statute of limitations out of the

and for a length of time, which should deprive his adversary of his right to proceed at law on account of the statute of limitations having in the intermediate time run against it, Courts of Equity would themselves supply and administer within their own jurisdiction a substitute for that original legal right, of which the party had been thus deprived; and by their decree give him the fullest benefit of it.<sup>1</sup>

1521. a. The question often arises in cases of fraud and mistake and acknowledgments of debts, at what time the bar of the statute of limitations begins to run. In general it may be said, that the rule of Courts of Equity is, that the cause of action or suit arises, when, and as soon, as the party has a right to apply to a Court

way. It is evident, that Court of Equity had been then in the habit of removing the statute out of the way, for so much time as had run pending the cause in Equity. The Court of dernier resort thought, that, from the circumstances of that case, it should be put wholly out of the way."

<sup>1</sup> Pulteney v. Warren 6 Ves. 73; The East India Company v. Canton, 11 Bligh, R. 158, 186, 187. Upon this last occasion Lord Chancellor Cottenham said, "The case of Pulteney v. Warren, which was urged at the bar on behalf of the Respondent, and which I had occasion lately to consider, together with several others, established only this principle, that where a party applies to a court of equity, and carries on an unfounded litigation, protracted under circumstances and for a length of time, which deprives his adversary of his legal rights, the court of equity considers, that it should itself supply and administer within its own jurisdiction, a substitute for that legal right, of which the party, so prosecuting an unfounded claim, has deprived his adversary. It was upon that principle that Lord Eldon made the order in Pulteney v. Warren, because there a party had, by litigation, improperly deprived his opponent of his legal remedy. It is for such reason, that a court of equity will give a party interest out of the penalty of a bond, where, by unfounded litigation, the obligor has prevented the obligee from prosecuting his claim at the time when his legal remedy was available. Upon that principle it is that, when a party, by unfounded litigation, has prevented an annuitant from receiving his annuity, the Court will, in some cases, give interest upon the annuity. All those cases depend upon the same principle of equity." Ante, § 1316, (a.)

of Equity for relief.<sup>1</sup> In cases of fraud, or mistake, it will begin to run from the time of the discovery, of such fraud or mistake, and not before.<sup>2</sup> And, an acknowledgment of a debt or judgment, to take the case out of the statute of limitations, or bar by lapse of time, must be made not to a mere stranger, but to the creditor, or some one acting for him, and upon which the creditor is to act or confide.<sup>3</sup> A general direction in a will of personal estate, to pay debts, will not stop the running of the statute of limitations, or, if the bar has already attached, remove it.<sup>4</sup> But, a direction to pay certain scheduled debts out of a particular fund of personal estate, will take these debts to the extent of the fund out of the statute of limitations, and prevent its running.<sup>5</sup> If the statute has begun to run in the lifetime of the testator, it will continue to run

<sup>2</sup> Brooksbank v. Smith, 2 Younge & Coll. 58.—In this case Mr. Baron Alderson said; “Then, is the Statute of Limitations a bar to the remedy sought by this bill? It seems to me, that it is not so. The statute does not absolutely bind Courts of Equity; but they adopt it as a rule to assist their discretion. In cases of fraud, however, they hold, that the statute runs from the discovery, because the laches of the plaintiff commences from that date, on his acquaintance with all the circumstances. In this, Courts of equity differ from Courts of law, which are absolutely bound by the words of the statute. Mistake is, I think, within the same rule as fraud. Here, therefore, the statute was not applicable, for the mistake was first discovered within six years before the filing of the bill. I think, therefore, that the decree should be for the plaintiffs, but without costs; and as they have offered to take the 1000*l.*, which is the whole of the stock that remains, I think they should be bound by that offer.”

after his death, and will not cease to run during the period, which may elapse between his death, and the time, at which a personal representative is constituted.<sup>1</sup>

[*740] *§ 1522. Upon similar grounds, although the Statute of Frauds is ordinarily a good bar, both at law and in Equity, to a suit on a parol contract respecting lands; yet, if there has been any act of part performance, that will avoid the operation of the statute; for otherwise it would become an instrument of fraud for designing parties.<sup>2</sup> The like principle applies to cases of judgments and decrees, which have been procured by fraud, and are set up to defeat the rights of innocent persons.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1523. A former decree in a suit in Equity between the same parties, and for the same subject-matter, is also a good defence in Equity, even although it be a decree, merely dismissing the bill, if the dismissal is not expressed to be without prejudice.<sup>4</sup> Here, Courts of Equity act in analogy to the law in some

<sup>1</sup> Freke v. Cranefeldt, 3 Mylne & Craig, 499; Scott v. Jones, 4 Clarke & Finelly, R. 382. It seems, that, in England, it is in the discretion of the executor or administrator, under ordinary circumstances, to plead the statute of limitations to a debt due by his testator or intestate or not; and if he acts bonâ fide and reasonably in not pleading it, and pays the debt, the payment will be good. *Norton v. respects, but not in all; for the dismissal of a suit at law, or even a judgment at law, is not in all cases a good bar to another action.

§ 1524. An account stated constitutes also a good bar to a bill in Equity to account, although it will constitute no bar to an action at law for the same subject-matter.<sup>1</sup> But, then, (as we have seen) equitable circumstances may be shown, which will remove the whole effect of the bar.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1525. The plea of a purchase for a valuable consideration, without notice, is also a defence peculiarly belonging to Courts of Equity, and is utterly unknown to the Common Law. But, upon this sufficient has already been said in the antecedent portions of these Commentaries.<sup>3</sup>

§ 1526. The want of proper parties to a bill is also a good defence in Equity, at least, until the new parties are made, or a good reason shown, why they are not made. At law, a plea of the like nature is sometimes a good defence in bar, and is sometimes only a matter in abatement. But the plea in Equity is of a far more extensive nature than at law; and it often applies, where the objection would not at law have the slightest foundation. The direct and immediate parties, having a legal interest, are those only, who can be required to be made parties in a suit at law. But Courts of Equity frequently require all persons, who have remote and future interests, or equitable interests only, or who are directly affected by the decree, to be made parties; and they will not, if they are within the jurisdiction, and capable of being made parties, proceed to decide the cause without them. Hence it is, that in Courts of Equity persons, having very different and even opposite interests, are often made parties defendant. It is the great object of Courts of Equity to put an end to litigation; and to settle, if possible, in a single suit, the rights of all parties interested or affected by the subject-matter in controversy.<sup>1</sup> Hence, the general rule in Equity is, that all persons are to be made parties, who are either legally or equitably interested in the subject-matter and result of the suit, however numerous they may be, if they are within the jurisdiction, and it is, in a general sense, practicable so to do. There are exceptions to the rule, and modifications of it, which form a very important part of the practical doctrines of Courts of Equity on the subject of pleading. But they properly belong to a distinct treatise on that particular subject.<sup>2</sup>

→ § 1527. In the next place, in relation to evidence peculiar to Courts of Equity. In general, it may be stated, that the rules of evidence are the same in Equity, as they are at law;<sup>3</sup> and that questions of the competency or incompetency of witnesses and of other proofs are also the same in both Courts. Without advert<sup>ing</sup> to minor differences and distinctions, there are, however, two respects, in which Courts of Equity differ from Courts of Law, in the modes of obtaining and acting upon evidence. In the first place, Courts of Law, unless under very special circumstances, do not allow of the evidence of witnesses by written depositions, but require it to be given vivâ voce. On the other hand, almost all testimony is positively required by Courts of Equity to be by written deposition; the admission of vivâ voce evidence at the hearing being limited to a very few cases, such as proving a deed or a voucher referred to in the case.<sup>1</sup>

→ § 1528. But a more important difference, in the next place, is, that in Courts of Law the testimony of the parties themselves in civil suits is, ordinarily, if not universally, excluded. But in Courts of Equity the parties, plaintiffs, as well as defendants, may reciprocally require and use the testimony of each other upon a bill and cross bill for the purpose. And in every case the answer of the defendant to a bill filed against him upon any matter stated in the bill, and responsive to it, is evidence in his own favor.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup> In like manner Courts of Equity admit the testimony of certain persons to facts, which perhaps they would not be, or might not be, competent to prove in a Court of Law. Thus, an accounting party may in Equity discharge himself, by his own oath, of small sums under forty shillings, provided that they do not in the whole exceed the sum of one hundred pounds. 2 Fonbl. Eq. B. 6, ch. 1, § 1, and note (c); Re re se v. Remsen, 2 John. Ch. R. 501. See also Holstcomb v. Rivers, 1 Ch. Cas. 127, 128; Peyton v. Green, 1 Ch. Rep. 78 [146]; Anon. 1 Vern. 1, 283; Marshfield v. Weston, 2 Vern. 176; S. C. 1 Eq. Abridg. 11, pl. 14; Whicherly v. Whicherly, 1 Vern. 470; Morely v. Bonge, Mosel. R. 252. But he will not be allowed, as plaintiff, to charge another person in the same way upon his own oath. Everard v. Warren, 2 Ch. Cas. 249; 2 Fonbl. Eq. B. 6, ch. 1, § 1; Marshfield v. Weston, 2 Vern. 176, S. C. 1 Eq. Abridg. 11, pl. 14. I have said, that perhaps the same evidence might not be allowed at law. Mr. Fonblanque (ubi suprâ) intimates,

Nay, the doctrine of Equity goes farther ; for not only is such an answer proof in favor of the defendant, as to the matters of fact, of which the bill seeks a disclosure from him ; but it is conclusive in his favor, unless it is overcome by the satisfactory testimony of two opposing witnesses, or of one witness, corroborated by other circumstances and facts, which give to it a greater weight than the answer, or which are equivalent in weight to a second witness.<sup>1</sup> Or, to express the doctrine in another form, it is an invariable rule in Equity, that where the defendant in express terms negatives the allegations of the bill, and the evidence is only of one person, affirming as a witness, what has been so negatived, the Court will neither make a decree, nor send the case to be tried at law ; but will simply dismiss the bill.<sup>2</sup> The reason, upon which the rule stands, is this. The plaintiff calls upon the defendant to answer an allegation of fact, which he makes ; and thereby he admits the answer to be evidence of that fact. If it is testimony, it is equal to the testimony of any other witness ; and, as the plaintiff cannot prevail, unless the balance of proof is in his favor, he must either have two witnesses, or some circumstances, in addition to a single witness, in order to turn the balance. We say, a second witness, or circumstances ; for certainly there may be circumstances entirely equivalent to the testimony of any single witness.<sup>1</sup>

that it would not be. But Lord Hardwicke, in Robinson v. Cumming, (2 Atk. 410,) suggested the contrary.

§ 1529. We are, however, carefully to distinguish between cases of this sort, where the answer contains positive allegations, as to facts, responsive to the bill, and cases, where the answer, admitting or denying the facts in the bill, sets up other facts in defence, or avoidance. In the latter cases, the defendant's answer is no proof whatsoever of the facts so stated ; but they must be proved by independent testimony.<sup>2</sup>

§ 1530. In the Civil Law (as we have seen) the parties to a suit might be interrogated upon articles, propounded to them under the direction of the Judge, as to the facts in controversy. Ubicunque judicem æquitas moverit, æque oportere fieri interrogationem, dubium non est.<sup>3</sup> And, by the rules of law, two witnesses were generally required for the establishment of all the material facts, not made out in writing, or by the solemn admission of the parties in Court. Ubi numerus testium non adjicitur, etiam duo sufficient. Pluralis enim elocutio duorum numero contenta est.<sup>4</sup> Sanximus, ut unius testimonium nemo judicum in quâcumque causâ facile patiaturs admitti. Et nunc manifeste sancimus, ut unius omnino testis responsio non audiatur, etiamsi præclaræ Curiae honore præfulgeat.<sup>5</sup> These coincidences between the Civil Law and Equity Jurisprudence, if they do not demonstrate a common origin of the doctrines on this subject, serve at least to show, that they have a firm foundation in natural justice.

§ 1531. In the next place, the same general rule prevails in Equity, as at law, that parol evidence is not admissible to contradict, qualify, extend, or vary written instruments ; and that the interpretation of them must depend upon their own terms. But in cases of accident, mistake, or fraud, Courts of Equity are constantly in the habit of admitting parol evidence, to qualify and correct, and even to defeat the terms of written instruments.<sup>1</sup> So, they will allow parol evi-

Mr. Justice Blackstone, in his Commentaries (3d vol. 370) comments somewhat severely, and perhaps not very justly, on this rule of the civil law. "One witness," says he, "(if credible) is sufficient evidence to a jury of any single fact ; though undoubtedly the concurrence of two or more corroborates the proof. Yet our law considers, that there are many transactions, to which only one person is privy ; and therefore does not always demand the testimony of two, as the civil law universally requires. 'Unius responsio testis omnino non audiat.' To extricate itself out of which absurdity, the modern practice of the civil law courts has plunged itself into another. For, as they do not allow a less number than two witnesses to be plena probatio, they call the testimony of one, though never so clear and positive, semi plena probatio only, on which no sentence can be founded. To make up therefore the necessary complement of witnesses, when they have one only to a single fact, they admit the party himself (plaintiff or defendant) to be examined in his own behalf ; and administer to him what is called the suppletory oath ; and, if his evidence happens to be in his own favor, this immediately converts the half proof into a whole one. By this ingenious device satisfying at once the forms of the Roman law, and acknowledging the superior reasonableness of the law of England, which permits one witness to be sufficient, where no more are to be had : and, to avoid all temptations of perjury, lays it down as an invariable rule, that nemo testis esse debet in propria causa."

B. 1, ch. 3, § 11, and note (o) ; 2 Fonbl. Eq. B. 2, ch. 2, § 6, and note (e) ; Id. B. 2, ch. 5, § 3, and note (l) ; Ante, § 152 to 168, 179, 767, 768, 769, 770 ; Croome v. dence to rebut a presumption, or an equity arising out of written instruments. But, in these latter cases, they do not interfere with, or repel the proper construction of the instrument itself, but only the artificial rules of presumption or of equity, which they themselves have created, or applied to cases perfectly indeterminate in their nature, and admitting of either construction according to the real intent of the party.<sup>1</sup>

§ 1532. With these few remarks, we may dismiss these supplementary topics, as to peculiarities of *defence and of evidence in Courts of Equity. [*747] And, here, these Commentaries are regularly brought to their close according to their original design. Let not, however, the ingenuous youth imagine, that he also may here close his own preparatory studies of Equity Jurisprudence, or content himself, for the ordinary purposes of practice, with the general survey, which has thus been presented to his view. What has been here offered to his attention, is designed only to open the paths for his future inquiries ; to stimulate his diligence to wider, and deeper, and more comprehensive examinations; to awaken his ambition to the pursuit of the loftiest objects of his profession; and to impress him with a profound sense of the ample instruction, and glorious rewards, which await his future enterprise and patient devotion in the study of the first of human sciences, the Law. He has, as yet, been conducted only to the vestibule of the magnificent temple, reared by the genius and labors of many successive ages to Equity Jurisprudence. He has seen the outlines and the proportions, the substructions, and the elevations, of this wonderful edifice. He has glanced at some of its more prominent parts, and observed the solid materials, of which it is composed, as well as the exquisite skill, with which it is fashioned and finished. He has been admitted to a hasty examination of its interior compartments and secret recesses. But the minute details, the subtle contrivances, and the various arrangements, which are adapted to the general exigences and conveniences of a polished society, remain to invite his curiosity, and gratify his love of refined justice. The grandeur [*748] of the entire plan cannot be fully *comprehended, but by the persevering researches of many years. The master pieces of ancient and modern art still continue to be the study and admiration of all those, who aspire to a kindred excellence; and new and beautiful lights are perpetually reflected from them, which have been unseen or unfelt before. Let the youthful jurist, who seeks to enlighten his own age, or to instruct posterity, be admonished, that it is by the same means alone, that he can hope to reach the same end. Let it be his encouragement and consolation, that by the same means the same end can be reached. It is but for him to give his days and nights with a sincere and constant vigor to the labors of the great masters of his own profession, and, although he may now be but a humble worshipper at the entrance of the porch, he may hereafter entitle himself to a high place in the ministrations at the altars of the sanctuary of justice.

<sup>1</sup> Ibid.—Mr. Phillips, in his Treatise on Evid., Pt. 2, ch. 10, § 3, Id. Pt. 2, ch. 5, § 1, and § 2, 8th edit. (1838); has fully collected the cases on this subject. See also on the same subject 2 Starkie on Evid. p. 568 to 570, 2d London edit. 1833; 2 Fonbl. Eq. B. 2, ch. 5, § 3, note (l); Ante, § 1102, 1202, 1203.
